"(f) On articles, packages, or parcels mailed at any post office, or on any rural route served by it, or on any loop route connected therewith, or at any intermediate post office more than 1,000 miles but not more than 1,800 miles distant from it in a direct line: One cent for each ounce or fraction thereof up to and including 4 ounces, 2 cents for each additional 3 ounces or fraction thereof up to and including 22 ounces, 1 cent for each additional 2 ounces or fraction thereof up to and including 2 pounds, and 9 cents for each additional pound or fraction thereof up to and including 11 pounds in weight.

"(g) On articles, packages, or parcels mailed at any post office, or on any rural route served by it, or on any loop route connected therewith, or at any intermediate post office supplied by said rural service, directed to another post office more than 1,800 miles distant from it in a direct line: One cent for each ounce or fraction thereof up to and including 8 ounces, 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof up to and including 16 ounces, 3 cents for each additional 4 ounces or fraction thereof up to and including 2 pounds, and 12 cents per pound for each additional pound or fraction thereof up to and including 11 pounds in weight.

"Whenever a special rate has been established by law for any article or class of articles included in mail matter of the fourth class, so much of said law as establishes said special rate is hereby repealed, and hereafter such article or class of articles shall be subject to the rates of postage herein provided.

"The Postmaster General is hereby authorized to determine the maximum amount which any mail carrier or contractor shall be required to transport on any one trip on a star route.

"The rates herein provided shall be the rates for the service and distances specified and shall remain in effect until otherwise ordered by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is hereby empowered and directed to forthwith make an investigation of the rates herein provided other than in paragraphs (a) and (b) hereof to determine whether the same are reasonable. If any of the rates shall be found to be unreasonable, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall fix new rates, which shall be based upon the amount of service to be rendered, considering distance transported and other service elements and risk involved therein, making the charges adequate to pay the cost of the service. Whenever the said Interstate Commerce Commission shall determine upon a different rate than is herein provided it shall forthwith make an order to that effect and file the same with the Postmaster General, and thereafter said rate so found by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be effective and take the place of those herein provided for.

"For the purpose of administering the rates and service herein provided, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and to provide maps or books from which the rates from one post office to another may be easily determined.

"SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of October, 1912."

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed I ask unanimous consent to change section 2 so that it will read, "this section shall take effect on the 1st of October, 1912," and to strike out the words "section 2."

Mr. Chairman, the present demand for cheaper and better facilities for the transmission of parcels through the mails is a development of 40 years. It is the result of 40 years of extortion on the part of the express companies. It is the crystallization of 40 years of agitation. It ought to be heeded not a year from now, but now. [Applause.] The parcel-post provisions in the Post Office appropriation bill as it was first presented was a gold brick with the gilt worn off. The present proposition of the committee as a substitute for the original proposition rehabilitates that provision by adding a little gilt to it, but everybody admits that the provision does not come anywhere near presenting reasonable parcel-post legislation.

This morning's Post contained an article which I want to present to the committee this evening. It is as follows:

Senator JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr., chairman of the Post Office Committee, yesterday introduced a parcel-post bill which is the product of several months of thorough investigation and study. The bill provides the lowest rates thus far suggested, but the department is satisfied these rates will yield a small profit and the system will be self-sustaining.

The Bourne bill provides a zone system, with rates varying according to distance, which Senator BOURNE believes will enable the Government to compete successfully with express companies in hauling packages up to the weight limit of 11 pounds which this bill provides.

The rate for city or rural delivery is 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent for each additional pound, or 15 cents for an 11-pound package.

Other rates are: Fifty-mile zone, 6 cents for first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound; 200-mile zone, 7 cents for the first pound and 3 cents for each additional pound; 500-mile zone, 8 cents for first pound and 4 cents for each additional pound; 1,000-mile zone, 9 cents for the first pound and 5 cents for each additional pound; 2,000-mile zone, 12 cents for the first pound and 10 cents for each additional pound; more than 2,000 miles, including island possessions, 12 cents for the first pound and 12 cents for each additional pound.

CONSOLIDATES TWO CLASSES.

The third and fourth classes of mail are consolidated, but provides for mailing circulars and small parcels at 1 cent per ounce up to 4 ounces.

The zone system was devised by John H. Robinson, who has copyrighted the plan and presented it to the Government. Under this plan any postmaster or patron can determine in a moment the amount of postage due on any package for any distance.

Senator BOURNE'S bill provides for six zones, where my bill provides for five zones. The rates which he provides and the rates which I provide for the same distances are so near in accord that the difference can only be expressed by the fraction of a cent. I submit that when two men, working independently on the same proposition, a proposition involving computation of rates and a great many service elements and elements of cost, arrive at a conclusion so substantially concurrent that the difference can only be expressed by the fraction of a cent, that it is reasonable to conclude that the result and the rates arrived at are correct.

The rate provided by Senator BOURNE for the 50 and 200 mile zones are one-tenth of a cent less than the rates I provide. For the 1,000-mile zone it is slightly less than a cent a pound less than the rate that I provide.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee how much longer he proposes to continue to-night.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There are only a few pages of this bill left, and I think we can complete it to-night.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman propose about debate?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I propose to close debate on this question very soon.

Mr. CANNON. How soon?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Within 15 or 20 minutes. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois and to the House that I think we can conclude this bill very soon after we vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman from Minnesota asked an extension of the time for 10 minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. And we are going to give it to him, and then I am going to ask the House for unanimous consent to withdraw or strike from the substitute the first three lines, and then the gentleman from Maryland will withdraw his proposition, and we will take a vote on the substitute I have offered.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, to close debate in 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, before insisting upon that motion, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think that that is fair treatment of this House, to close debate in 10 minutes upon such an important proposition as this?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think when the gentleman from Minnesota has concluded his remarks, and nobody desires to reply to him, that it is fair treatment.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to have an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Very well, the gentleman will have that opportunity. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, can we not reach some agreement as to when we shall vote on all propositions, and then have every one pending?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I think we can as soon as the gentleman from Minnesota has concluded.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, the difference between the rate that I provide and the rate that the distinguished Senator from Oregon provides amounts to from one-tenth of a cent to 1 cent per pound on a 10-pound package. I want to say to gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle that I am offering them an opportunity to vote for a real parcel post. I want to say to them that if they overlook that opportunity, they will probably have an opportunity to vote for another one coming from the Senate after awhile. I do not believe, if you determine to make this a partisan question, that you can afford to overlook this opportunity.

It is said that no one has studied this question. Let me say to you that it has been debated in every red schoolhouse in the country. It has been debated in every country store in the country, and whether you know anything about it or not the people of the country know something about it and they will pass judgment upon you, whether you know anything about it or not.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] suggested that this was a momentous occasion, and I agree with him, for upon the vote of this measure will depend a great many of the seats in this body. There is no question that I know of upon which the sentiment of the country has crystallized as it has crystallized upon this. It is not a partisan question. It is a question in which every man, Democrat, Republican, or Prohibitionist, is interested. I hope that gentlemen will vote for this amendment. I hope they will give the people of the country the relief that they have been asking for 40 years.

Mr. Chairman, there is involved in this matter the question of fairness to the country merchant and the farmer. A flat-rate proposition is absolutely unfair to both, for it amounts to a subsidy for the long haul and an overcharge for the short haul. This amendment that I offer provides for rates which will give the local merchant an advantage in his own market. It protects him in that it would require the merchant at a distance to pay from two to nine times as much to get his goods to the farmer with whom the local merchant deals. That is worth considering in connection with this question.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. How does the gentleman's rates in the amendment that he proposes compare with the express rates, for, say, a 200-mile distance? I have looked at the table which the gentleman provides, and it would indicate that on an 11-pound package from 50 to 200 miles his proposed rate would be 38 cents. Is that correct?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. The gentleman is correct, but the express rate would be 45 or 50 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have we an opportunity now to offer amendments with regard to rates, an amendment having been offered to an amendment, and that amendment to a substitute, as I understand it?

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is now in order until some amendment is disposed of. There are four amendments now pending, and no more can be offered at this time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Tennessee having the floor permit me to ask him a question before he proceeds? I understood him to say a moment ago that he proposed to withdraw lines 1, 2, and 3 of section 8.

Mr. SABATH. Of the substitute.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Those lines fix a rate of 12 cents a pound.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. I propose, when I have the opportunity a little later on, to ask unanimous consent to strike from my substitute those first three lines.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, for the present that would eliminate any further discussion with regard to the 12 cents a pound rate in the cities and 5 cents in the country.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That would eliminate that discussion, and also will eliminate the propositions of the gentleman from Maryland and the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there five minutes' time still remaining of the time for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. There is.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota and to oppose the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. Now, Mr. Chairman, during all of my political experience it has been my observation that when a political party wants to dodge an important question the thing they do is to recommend a committee or a commission with power to investigate and report following the election next to ensue. [Applause.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not charge the gentleman from Maryland with any such intention in this regard, but I do say, Mr. Chairman, there is no excuse on the part of any Member of this House who is in favor of a parcel post for voting against this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I have not the time, as I have only five minutes. I have talked with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS]. I have talked with gentlemen upon the other side of the aisle with reference to this amendment now pending, and the only objection I have heard to it is that the rates are too high. Perhaps they may be too high, Mr. Chairman, but no one can gainsay the fact that they are very much lower than the present rate, and if they should go into this bill it would afford relief to the people of this country, at the same time protecting the country merchant, and if this amendment is adopted the gentleman from Maryland, if he chooses, can afterwards offer an amendment for a commission to investigate and report upon the bill later on. But in the meantime, if he wants to furnish real relief to the people of this country, he can vote for this amendment, that is a real parcel post, with a zone system paying the cost of service. I want to remind the House, too, that by this bill, if the rates are too high, and I admit they are, there is a provision in it authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to at once investigate the question of rates and determine what are equitable rates within the different zones paying the cost of service.

Now, with reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], the fatal defect of which is this 8-cent flat rate, which, on the one hand, makes a man within the 50 or 100 mile zone pay more than he ought to pay for his packages and the man in the longer zone across the country is paying less than he ought to pay. You are making the short-distance man pay for the deficit occasioned by the man with the longer distance.

Mr. SULZER. That is the law now with all mailable matter.

Mr. LENROOT. More than that, he does this: The express companies will do all the business so far as the profit within the narrow zone is concerned [applause] and the Government will do all the business on the longer distance where there is a loss to the Government. [Applause.] There can not be any question about that. I can not see how the gentleman from New York or any other gentleman can favor the flat rate where it necessarily means a loss to the Government in the cost of service and the handing over to the express companies the business where there is a profit——

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is in error. My amendment gives the Government the exclusive right to carry all mailable matter under 11 pounds weight.

Mr. LENROOT. Well, it may be that can be done, but I want to say that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Jackson case is that except so far as the packages were mail matter at the time of the adoption of the Constitution the Government can not be given a monopoly. The gentleman must be familiar with that decision. It is plain——

Mr. SULZER. The provision in my amendment obviates that decision.

Mr. LENROOT. These parcels were not mailable at the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota) there were—ayes 73, noes 74.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota and Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota and Mr. MOON of Tennessee) reported that there were—ayes 81, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this proposition and all pending amendments be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on the substitute and the amendment to the substitute be now closed.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee refer to all debate upon this entire question, or only upon the Sulzer question?

The CHAIRMAN. To the entire question.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have an amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman will have an opportunity to offer the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The way the Chair stated the motion, it would include everything. Does the gentleman move to close debate on the section and all amendments thereto?

The CHAIRMAN. On the section and all amendments thereto. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes, 152.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "that," line 16, section 8, and insert the following:

"The Post Office Department of the United States shall be, and it hereby is, authorized to transport as mail matter parcels of merchandise up to 11 pounds in weight, at the rate of 12 cents per pound, subject to the same regulations now made applicable to foreign parcels now transported through the mails within the United States; and at the rate of 6 cents per pound for a maximum distance from point of mailing, as the Postmaster General shall from time to time determine that such parcels can be carried in the mails without loss to the Government; and at the rate of 3 cents per pound for a maximum distance from point of mailing, as the Postmaster General shall likewise determine; and when such parcels are carried exclusively on a rural route it shall be at a rate not in excess of 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound, as may be determined by the Postmaster General."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend substitute by adding after the words——

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the substitute is not in order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "That," in section 8, and insert:

"The postage rates on mail matter of the fourth class, except as hereinafter provided, shall be as follows: One cent per ounce or fraction thereof on all matter of such class weighing not to exceed 8 ounces, and on such matter weighing in excess of 8 ounces, 8 cents and 2 cents additional for each 4 ounces or fraction thereof in excess of 8 ounces, and that the weight limit of mail matter of the fourth class be 7 pounds after January 1, 1913, and 11 pounds after June 30, 1913, except as hereinafter provided:

"That hereafter the postage rates on mail matter of the fourth class, delivered to any post office or branch post office where the haul thereof does not exceed 50 miles, shall be as follows: Five cents for 1 pound or fraction thereof and 2 cents additional for each additional pound or fraction thereof, and for this service no package to weigh in excess of 11 pounds. For the purpose of this service each rural mail route shall be considered a post office for any point on such route.

"That the word 'packet' wherever used in laws relating to the postal service means all matter of every class which is by law made mailable."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is the Lewis-Goeke bill on which we have a favorable report and a rule making it in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not germane.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I did not recognize the bill when it was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has offered to amend the text of section 8.

Mr. LAFFERTY. By striking out section 8 and offering this in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be offering a substitute that is already pending.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I did not understand the substitute.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not know where to insert the amendment. It is an amendment to the postal-service division.

Mr. BUTLER. Put it in the basket. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also investigate the system of railway mail pay now in force and suggest such changes as are deemed advisable.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 1, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr, Chairman, I did not understand the matter in the present situation. I withdraw the amendment in view of the alteration of the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has already been voted upon, and it was voted down.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment to the substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the substitute by adding after the words "express post" the words "and railway express."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment. The Chair would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that his amendment is not in order unless it is the Goeke bill, as set out in the rule.

Mr. LAFFERTY. It is the Goeke bill, Mr. Chairman, word for word. I offer it as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "that," in section 8, and insert the following:

"In order to promote the postal service and more efficiently regulate commerce between the several States, the Territories of the United States, the District of Columbia, the possessions of the United States, and foreign nations the contracts and agreements and arrangements of the several express companies with the several railroad companies or other common carriers of the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia, relating to the collecting, receiving, caring for, storing, dispatching, forwarding, and delivering by such railroad company or other common carriers of parcels, packets, and packages, and other express matter, and the operating equipment, cars, vehicles, horses, such buildings necessary and appropriate, and leases of buildings, used in the conduct of the express business, and all other property or rights and privileges owned and used by such express companies which are necessary and appropriate to such collecting, receiving, caring for, storing, dispatching, forwarding, and delivering of such parcels, packets, packages, and express matter, are hereby declared to be, and the same are hereby, condemned and appropriated to and for the United States of America, to be used by it for carrying out the purposes of this act. That the words "express company" as used in this act shall be construed to include any corporation, joint-stock company, association, partnership, and individual, as far as engaged in the collecting, receiving, caring for, storing, dispatching, forwarding, and delivering of parcels, packets, packages, and other express matter, by rail or water, or both. And the words "railroad" or "railway company" shall be construed to include any transportation agency by rail or water as far as used as a post route or in carrying express matter. On and after July 1, 1913, any railroad, steamship, or other transportation agency having a contract with any express company subject to this act shall transport and carry for the Post Office Department all matter transportable under said contract, and shall execute and perform with respect to such Post Office Department all such duties as have been customary under such contract in relation to the express company or companies named therein, and shall permit its agents and employees when required to continue to discharge such services in respect thereto, and upon like terms, without interference on its part: Provided, That no property is hereby condemned or appropriated which, in the judgment of the Postmaster General, is not necessary or required in or about the conduct of such express business by the United States.

"(b) That it shall be the duty of the President on the 1st day of July, 1913, to take charge and possession of all the property of such express companies condemned and appropriated by this act, in the name of and by the authority of the United States of America; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to employ said property and facilities in conjunction with the postal service, and to henceforth conduct said express service.

"(c) That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to make and promulgate such rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act as he may deem necessary, subject to the approval of the President.

"(d) That during the months of August and December, 1912, and April, 1913, the weights of matter carried over the respective railroads under contracts with the express companies during the pendency thereof shall be taken for each railroad company in respect to such contract under regulations to be provided by the Post Office Department, and the amount of money paid for the carriage thereof to the railroad shall be divided by the mileage of such railroad over which such matter is carried; and thereafter the Postmaster General shall, if the railroad company consent thereto, cause to be paid to such railroad company the amount per mile owing to such railroad under such contract as thus computed; and thereafter annually at such times as may be determined upon by the Postmaster General such matter shall be weighed, and the railroad company shall be paid monthly for the excess weight carried by it, over the first weighing herein provided, such sums as may be agreed upon for such excess weight; but if such Postmaster General and such railroad company shall fail to agree upon a basis of compensation for such excess weights, then the same shall be paid for according to the terms and provisions of the contract condemned in such case.

"(e) That at the expiration or termination of any contract between an express company and a railroad condemned by this act (or at any time before, if such railroad company shall consent thereto) the Postmaster General may contract with such railroad company for the transportation of postal-express matter, and, if deemed advantageous, upon cars provided by the postal department, which may be transferred without unloading onto the lines of other railroad companies, at such rates of compensation and upon such principles of computation thereof as may be agreed upon, with the right of review and revision of the same by the Interstate Commerce Commission as hereinafter provided. And in case the Postmaster General and such railroad company, after the expiration or termination of the contract with an express company, shall fail to agree upon the terms and provisions of the renewal thereof, they shall submit their respective contentions with reference thereto to the said Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall thereupon have plenary power to declare the terms and provisions which said contract shall contain.

"(f) That immediately after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission, acting as a tribunal of appraisal and award, to appraise the value of the property condemned and appropriated by the United States of America in section 1 of this act and award to the respective express companies just compensation therefor. Each commissioner shall take oath to justly perform such duties before some judge of the courts of the United States. The said Interstate Commerce Commission shall have power, and it shall be its duty to summon witnesses, with books and papers, before it, for either of the parties, and require such witnesses to testify, and it shall give to each party a full hearing; and it shall be the duty of such commission, on or before the 7th day of May, 1913, to file a separate award of appraisement for each express company condemned under this act, with respect to the property condemned, in the district court of the United States where the express company has its principal office, and give notice of the filing of such award to the Postmaster General and to such express company. And if either party shall be dissatisfied with the amount of said award, the same may, upon application of either party, be reviewed by the said district court.

"(g) That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make payment to such express companies of the money adjudged to be due them, as aforesaid, out of the Treasury of the United States, and said express companies shall be entitled to payment of such final award as compensation from the Treasury of the United States and the Treasurer thereof, and the amounts of said award are hereby appropriated to the parties entitled thereto out of the Treasury of the United States.

"(h) That any willful failure or refusal by any railroad company or other common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, to perform any service required by this act or by any lawful rule or regulation made and promulgated by the Postmaster General in pursuance of this act, or of any lawful ruling, finding, or determination of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or of any order, judgment, or decree of any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, shall constitute a misdemeanor which, upon indictment and conviction, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

"(i) That the Postmaster General shall have power to rent, lease, or purchase real estate and personal property, supplies, cars, and equipment for use by his department for the purposes of this act. He shall have power to condemn in the name of the United States any property, real, personal, or mixed, which he may deem necessary for the efficient operation of the service, but the said Interstate Commerce Commission shall first value and file its award therefor as hereinbefore specified."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. There has been so much confusion, Mr. Chairman, that I could not hear what has been read. What is the parliamentary status of this proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offered an amendment to the text of the bill. Does the gentleman from Georgia wish to offer an amendment?

Mr. ADAMSON. I offer an amendment to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has the Clerk finished the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon?

The CHAIRMAN. He has; and now the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] offers an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Where does the gentleman desire his amendment to come in?

Mr. ADAMSON. I want it to take the place of the proposition offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to strike out all the gentleman's proposition, and insert this instead.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that sort of an amendment is not in order.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is to strike out all after the word "the" in the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "the" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the rates hereinafter stated shall hereafter be the maximum rates to be applied either in first fixing rates by the express companies or in their correction or regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission"——

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, my amendment begins with the word "In" and not with the word "The."

Mr. MANN. I guess the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the rates hereinafter stated shall hereafter be the maximum rates to be applied either in first fixing rates by the express companies or in their correction or regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and no higher rates shall be charged and collected by express companies engaged in interstate commerce for receiving, transporting, and delivering packages or parcels not exceeding 11 pounds in weight and valued at not more than $80 between a point in one State, Territory, or District in the United States and another point in a different State, Territory, or District in the United States, whether the transportation occurs on the line of a single express company or on a through route or shipment operated by two or more connecting express companies:

It shall be the duty of the postmasters and the express agents to execute receipts to conform to this provision.

SEC. 3. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to be inserted at the end of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Which paragraph?

Mr. SULZER. The paragraph of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The Clerk read as follows:

That the word "packet" or "parcel" wherever used in the laws relating to the postal service means all matter of every class which is by law made mailable.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Where does the amendment come in?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment comes after the last word of the paragraph offered as a substitute by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the substitute which I offered by striking out the first three lines. Amend by striking out in section 8 the words "That hereafter postage shall be paid on matter of the fourth class at the rate of 12 cents a pound, except as herein provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to his substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words immediately following section 8: "That hereafter postage shall be paid on matter of the fourth class at the rate of 12 cents per pound, except as herein provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SULZER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 62.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MOON of Tennessee and Mr. MANN.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read again. It is but a short amendment and it will not take a minute to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 93.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SULZER. I move to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight" in the substitute, so as to make the rate 8 cents a pound instead of 12 cents a pound.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2 of the substitute strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. CALDER), there were—ayes 43, noes 102.

Mr. SULZER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. SULZER and Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 94.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee substitute in the last paragraph by adding, after the words "as they deem desirable," at the end of the sentence, the following:

"That the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall furnish such data and otherwise render such assistance to the said commission as may be desired or available."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the substitute add:

"Provided, That the rates herein provided for fourth-class matter on rural delivery routes shall also prevail on all city delivery routes."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to change the date at which the committee shall report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "December" and insert in lieu thereof "June 1."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not offer a substitute for a substitute.

Mr. GARNER. After the substitute has been perfected, then is not an amendment in order as a substitute for that?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the substitute would be in order.

Mr. GARNER. I can not offer this as an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very sorry. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

The question being taken, the substitute of Mr. MOON of Tennessee as amended was agreed to.

The announcement of the result was received with applause.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1912, the compensation of rural letter carriers for carrying the mail six days each week on standard routes of 24 miles in length shall be the sum of $1,074 per annum, to be paid monthly; and on routes exceeding 24 miles in length the sum of $44.75 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of 24 miles; and on routes under 24 miles in length a corresponding reduction of compensation per mile per annum shall be paid; on routes carrying the mail three days of each week of the same length as above the pay shall be one-half the compensation there provided.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 22, page 37, add the following:
"Provided, however, That because of the compensation herein provided no rural letter carrier shall receive less salary than before the passage of this act."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out of line 14, page 37, the words "$1,074 per annum" and inserting the words "$1,200 per annum."

Mr. MANN. What is the effect of that amendment? I did not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is to increase the salary from $1,074 to $1,200.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment, the purpose of which is to make the salary of all rural-route carriers on standard routes of 24 miles or more $100 per month, or equal to $50 per mile per annum. If this amendment is agreed to by the House, I shall then offer an amendment to make the same rule of $50 per mile per annum apply to other routes of less than 24 miles. I desire to say in the beginning of my remarks that there is to-day no class of men engaged in the public service who are more faithful, more prompt, or more accommodating than the free rural-route carriers, and, moreover, there are none who are more in touch with the people and none whose services are more appreciated by their patrons.

Again I want to say, and to impress the fact upon the attention of this House, that but very little of the millions of dollars appropriated by Congress is expended for the direct benefit of the farmers of the country, but the Rural Free Delivery Service is peculiarly and almost exclusively for the benefit of the farmers, and is a modern convenience that they highly appreciate. The farmer, his wife, and his children anxiously look forward to the daily coming of their carrier in anticipation of the papers, the business letters, or of messages from absent loved ones.

With the consent of the Post Office authorities of this city I was permitted to go and did go over the route with one of the rural carriers out of my home city, so that I might personally observe and better understand the character of the work done, the benefits resulting therefrom, and to ascertain the estimate placed upon this service by the people. I am glad to-day to give my testimony to the fact that the carrier was not only courteous and obliging in the discharge of his duties, but was always glad to extend favors and to accommodate the people beyond the requirement of his position, and from what I know of many of the carriers in my district I believe that the same might be truthfully said of them all.

I am glad also to state that the eagerness with which the patrons along the line met the carrier and the friendly salutations of welcome expressed, both in words and actions, furnished unmistakable proof of their high appreciation of his daily visits.

But the question that is now before the House, and that I desire to briefly discuss, is that of the compensation of these important and faithful employees of the Government.

I maintain and believe that I can show that their present compensation is not adequate for the services rendered and not sufficient for their comfortable support.

In order to obtain full and accurate information upon the subject, I recently forwarded to the 97 rural carriers in my district the following questions:

1. Your present salary?
2. Value of buggy, harness, and horse, or other means of conveyance?
3. Annual cost of repairing; feeding and caring for horses?
4. Estimated depreciation in value of wagon and team from wear, age, or death per year?

Many of them replied that they were not permitted by the rules of the department to advise me. This rule that forbade them to tell their Representative in Congress the truth about their salary and expenses I then thought, and now think, was an outrage against the privileges and the liberties of free men.

I later conferred with the postal authorities and was very courteously furnished the desired information by Mr. McGraw, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

The result of the information as furnished to me was as follows:

The average salary per year of the 97 carriers in my district is		$940.60
Annual expenses of carriers.
The average value of the carrier's investment in vehicle, horses, and harness is $338.42.
8 per cent interest on this, which is the usual rate paid, is	$27.07
The average annual expenses, feeding, and repairing is	302.46
The average annual depreciation of carrier's outfit is	103.20
Total average annual expenses		432.73
Net average salary per annum		507.87
Net average salary per month		42.32

I submit to the fair-minded men of this House, who desire to see the Government pay just and fair compensation to its employees, that this sum is not fair or reasonable for the services rendered and is not sufficient for the comfortable support of a man and his family, especially at this time and under the present high cost of the necessaries of life, and I hope this amendment will be adopted.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 9, page 37, as follows: Insert in line 17, between the words "mile" and "in" the words "a majority fraction of a mile."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 37, line 14, the word "seventy-four" and insert the words "two hundred." On the same page, lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "forty-four dollars and seventy-five cents" and insert "fifty dollars."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I have before me a list of the city and rural carriers going out from the post office at Athens, Ga. The first carrier on this list is a negro, a city carrier; this negro draws $1,200 per year. I am not informed whether or not the Government furnishes him a buggy and horse, but under the present law he is entitled to conveyance, it appearing to the officials that such is required. This man is first on the list of city carriers. First on the list of rural carriers is a young white man, well educated and refined. He comes from a family of the old southern type, the nephew of one of the most learned Presbyterian preachers the South ever produced, and yet this boy receives only $900 per year. The other white carriers on this list are all of good families, refined, educated Christian gentlemen, and this is true of the carriers all over my district, and yet these rural carriers, who are called upon to go in the sunshine and in the rain, in the snow and in the ice, in the mud and in the storm, seldom receive as much as $1,000 per annum. Sir, I am here to say that I consider it a burning shame for a negro delivering mail on paved streets and paved sidewalks to receive more pay than these honest rural carriers, working often into the night on account of bad roads. I have no complaint against white city carriers receiving $1,200 per year, but I do say the rural carriers should receive an equal sum. I challenge any man on the floor of this House to give any kind of reason for this discrimination. If any difference is shown, the rural carrier should receive more, on account of expense of horse and buggy; and now that we have established a rural parcel post his labor and expense will no doubt be increased.

I am surprised at many gentlemen from large cities opposing this increase. I was surprised to see the city opposition to the post-road appropriation. It would be difficult to estimate the millions upon millions that have poured into cities like New York for Government buildings and various things too numerous to mention; and yet when you talk of doing something for the rural districts they raise the cry "Bankrupt the Government!" Let me give you some facts to consider. There are 8,040 post officials in the city of New York. There are 2,728 city carriers in New York City. In Georgia there are 4,220 post officials. To cover the entire territory of that great State there are only 1,539 rural carriers. Gentlemen, let me appeal to your sense of justice. Give the country boy a fair deal. In one city on paved streets there are 2,728 carriers to deliver mail in the city alone, while on the other hand 1,539 on mud roads to cover the empire State of the South. For every five rural carriers in the United States there is one post-office official in New York City drawing good salary, and yet gentlemen from that and other cities protest in strong language against appropriations for the upbuilding of the rural districts. Gentlemen, arouse yourselves and be just to the rural part of the country. The daily mail should go to every home in the country on good roads, carried by white carriers receiving equal pay to city carriers. My amendment provides for $1,200 for standard routes, with $50 additional for extra miles and $50 reduction per mile on routes less than standard. It is reasonable, it is right, and it should pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TRIBBLE) there were—ayes 25, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 37, insert the following: "There shall be paid $200 per annum to every rural delivery carrier to cover the cost of stock, equipment," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. AUSTIN) there were—ayes 29, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 14, page 37, the words "one thousand and seventy-four" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand one hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment a little while ago, and only one-half of the amendment was read and agreed to. The last half of the amendment is necessary in order to even it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 19 and 20 the words "a corresponding reduction of compensation per mile per annum shall be paid" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a reduction of $44.75 per annum shall be made for every mile less than 24 miles traveled by carrier."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will not prevail. That will reduce the pay below the pay already fixed in the bill.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with amendments, to the House, with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, before that is done I ask unanimous consent to return to page 23 to offer an amendment providing that part of the appropriations in this bill be made immediately available in order to pay the heirs of the three sea post clerks lost on the steamship Titanic.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to return to page 23 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 12, after the comma following the word "Union," insert:

"Provided further, That the sum of $15,000 be appropriated and made immediately available for the relief of the heirs or next of kin of W. L. Gynn, O. S. Woodey, and J. S. March, sea post clerks who lost their lives on the steamer Titanic; said sum to be equally divided, $5,000 to each family."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object until I can understand what the proposition is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Connecticut that he could as well ask unanimous consent in the House as in the committee. That can be done to-morrow, and we can in the intervening time have an opportunity to examine the amendment.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment and the request with the understanding that that may be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to withdraw his request for unanimous consent, together with the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. HAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21279, the Post Office appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the House should now adjourn, to-morrow being Calendar Wednesday, is the Chair prepared to rule, the previous question having been ordered, as to whether the bill would come up to-morrow or go over until Thursday?

The SPEAKER. As at present advised, the Chair would rule that the bill would have to go over until Thursday. That, however, may be obviated by any gentleman asking unanimous consent to postpone the business of Calendar Wednesday until Thursday.

Mr. MANN. That would have to be determined to-morrow, I suppose.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 12623. An act to incorporate the American Numismatic Association.

FLOODS ON THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND TRIBUTARIES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement to the House. This afternoon, while in consultation in the Speaker's room with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], regarding a bill of which he has charge, one of the Speaker's clerks came in and stated that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] was very anxious to have signed the bill recently passed respecting flood conditions in the Mississippi Valley. The Speaker then signed the bill and gave it to the Clerk, telling him to bring it into the House. In some way, through a misunderstanding, a messenger took it to the Senate. It was signed in the Senate, and the bill was then taken to the White House, where it was signed by the President. The President left town in less than 10 minutes after signing it. The Chair, therefore, asks unanimous consent that the Journal show that the report of the Committee on Enrolled Bills upon this bill was properly presented to the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOWARD, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FRANCIS, for one week, on account of illness in family.

Under a provision of section 5 of the United States customs tariff law, approved August 5, 1909, affirmative approval of this act by Congress is necessary to make it effective. I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of War explaining the act and its effect. I recommend that it be approved.

Mr. BROWN. I present a memorial signed by citizens of my State, remonstrating against the so-called Owen medical bill. I ask that the memorial lie on the table and that it, including the first signature thereto, be printed in the RECORD, without reading.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, including the first signature, as follows:

We, the undersigned citizens of Nebraska, practitioners and believers in various systems of healing, including allopathic, homeopathic, osteopathic, chiropractic, Christian Science, etc., wish to enter our protest against the passage of Senate File No. 1, known as the Owen bill, providing for a national bureau of health.

We consider that the older school of healing has shown by its record of attempted legislation for more than 20 years a desire to secure more power for its own special benefit, without advancing any reasons to show that the general public would benefit thereby; they favor the Owen bill because it is in line with the legislation they have tried to secure.

We are opposed to the use of the Government authority, funds, and other facilities in the interest of any particular school of healing, believing that any system which has merit can establish the same without the aid of Government authority. We claim the right to exercise our individual opinions in the selection of practitioners or systems of healing for our own use.

We believe that a national bureau of health means class legislation and is designed to deny to individuals the rights and liberties for which the citizens of these United States have contended from the beginning. Free government is measured by the liberty enjoyed by individuals, so long as these liberties do not encroach upon the rights of others, and any measures, which might ever be enlarged upon or so construed that they would interfere with medical freedom strike at the very roots of free government.

We ask that you represent the rights of all Nebraska citizens and that you work against this and any similar measures.

Dr. A. S. DOWLER, D. O.,
David City, Nebr.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the Massachusetts Legislature, asking Federal protection to migratory game birds. I ask that the resolutions lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1912.

Resolutions relative to Federal protection of migratory game birds.

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill designated as H. R. No. 36, to afford Federal protection to migratory game birds; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of New York has adopted resolutions favoring such protection and requesting the legislatures of other States of the United States to join in a request for such Federal protection: Now, therefore,

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby requests Congress to enact a law giving ample protection to migratory game birds.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

In senate, adopted April 16, 1912.

In house of representatives, adopted in concurrence April 23, 1912.

A true copy.

Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. LODGE. I present a brief protest from business men in New England, remonstrating against the adoption of the Covington amendment to the Panama Canal bill. I ask that the substance of the protest be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

There being no objection, the protest was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, the undersigned, being actively interested in business in New England which involves the transportation of merchandise to and from southern points to New England, understand that the Covington amendment, so called, to the bill now before Congress regulating the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal provides that "it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in any common carrier by water with which said railroad does or may compete for traffic."

We believe in the regulation of common carriers by the Government and in the authority granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We do not, however, believe in such restriction or limitation of investment in or the development of steamship lines or coastwise trade generally as this amendment provides.

We deem it especially important for the great industries of New England that under their proper restrictions railroads should be allowed to develop and maintain transportation by water. This is of the utmost importance in the transportation of the freight to and from New England points and the South. We believe that with the opening of the Panama Canal it is of greatest importance that there shall be adequate transportation facilities by water between New England and the Gulf cities.

Therefore we protest against the adoption of the Covington amendment to the Panama Canal bill as unnecessarily impeding the development of transportation by water and as thus retarding the development of New England's commerce with southern and Pacific ports, and we urge New England Congressmen to do everything in their power to defeat the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented memorials of sundry citizens of Dover, Foxcroft, Waterville, Oakland, Fairfield, Gardiner, and Winslow, all in the State of Maine, remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST presented a resolution adopted by members of the United States grand jury, empaneled at the April, 1912, term of the United States District Court for the District of Arizona, favoring the enactment of legislation to denounce as a crime the actions of every Indian who in any manner uses or acquires for himself or others any intoxicating liquor, or who in any manner induces any other person to secure intoxicating liquor for himself or any other person, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SWANSON presented memorials of sundry citizens of Lynchburg, Alexandria, Fairfax, Richmond, and Norfolk, all in the State of Virginia, remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Virginia, remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Roanoke, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the method of directing the work of Government employees, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Gary, Ind., remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. CLAPP presented resolutions adopted by members of the Civil Engineers' Society of St. Paul, Minn., favoring the establishment of a court of appeals in patent cases, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a resolution adopted by the Yuma County Water Users' Association in Arizona, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands to accompany the bill (S. 6621) to amend section 3 of the act of February 21, 1912, relating to the disposition of surplus irrigating waters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands to accompany the bill.

LOSS OF THE STEAMER "TITANIC."

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have here a very clear, considerate, and apparently unbiased statement of the circumstances and incidents of the sinking of the ship Titanic, by Mrs. W. M. Clark, of Los Angeles, Cal., one of the survivors, and whose husband went down with the ship.

This matter is under investigation by a Senate committee. Personally I deplore the fact that the investigation was entered upon at all. This was a British ship, manned by British subjects. The investigation, at least in the first instance, should have been undertaken by the British Government.

The investigation, it seems to me, has gone to unreasonable and unwarranted lengths in undertaking to ascertain the particular details and incidents of that unfortunate disaster which we might very well have been spared. The things the Senate ought to know, if it is to be informed by an investigation of that kind, might have been ascertained in a very few hours, without going into all these unnecessary and soul-harrowing details. I desire to have the statement referred to the Committee on Commerce. It was prepared in the quiet of the home by one of the unfortunate people who was there upon the ship. It is so fair and apparently just in giving the details, that I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Tribune, Los Angeles, Cal., Thursday, Apr. 25, 1912.]

MRS. W. M. CLARK HOME—TELLS OF "TITANIC"—WIDOW OF SEA-WRECK VICTIM PRAISES MEN AND WOMEN FOR BRAVERY, SETTING EXAMPLE TO MAKE WHOLE WORLD BETTER.

(By Mrs. Walter Miller Clark.)

Mrs. Walter M. Clark, widow of the only son of J. Ross Clark, who was lost in the wreck of the Titanic, arrived in the city on the Los Angeles Limited yesterday afternoon in as good physical and mental condition as could be expected after passing through the ordeal that was her lot from the time the ill-fated ship struck the iceberg until Mrs. Clark was picked up by the steamer Carpathia. Mrs. Clark gave the press the following statement:

"My husband and I boarded the Titanic at Southampton, somewhat delayed in starting from that place owing to an accident that had delayed the Titanic at Liverpool in colliding with another vessel. All the way over we had most beautiful and calm weather; in fact, up to the time of the accident the sea had been like glass. We had seen no ice anywhere, nor were we aware of the presence of ice floes until the afternoon of the calamity.

NO SHOCK FROM IMPACT.

"I had retired to my stateroom about 11.30 Sunday, when the Titanic struck the iceberg. There was no shock from the impact that in any way startled me. However, I knew something had occurred out of the ordinary and looked out of my stateroom porthole, and it seemed to me that we were passing another ship, but this may have been ice in the near vicinity. It aroused my curiosity enough, however, to prompt me to dress and go out on the promenade deck, where the smoking room is located, and where I knew my husband was with friends. There was absolutely no excitement at that time.

"My husband, seeing me at the door of the smoking room, came out to me apparently unconcerned, and said that they had also felt a slight shock, but had paid no attention to it, being assured by the officers of the boat that all was well, that some ice had been struck, but that we were on the way again, and everything apparently had been done in the way of closing the water-tight compartments, and everybody was assured that there was no danger of any kind.

NO PANIC ON BOARD.

"I remained on deck some 15 or 20 minutes, conversing with other people, and my husband returned to the smoking room. From this it can be seen that there was no panic on board at that time. Some few minutes later I returned to my stateroom, and on the way down I met a man coming up with a life preserver around him. I asked him the reason, and if he were alarmed, and he replied that all the passengers had been ordered to the top deck with life preservers. I then returned to the smoking room and told my husband that we had been ordered above with life preservers, and we returned to our stateroom. He took off his evening dress and put on an ordinary suit and heavy underwear, and I did likewise. We took with us our heavy overcoats and I my furs—also two life preservers—with other valuables we could pick up. My husband also saw that I was provided with money in case we should become separated.

PERFECT DISCIPLINE.

"We then went to the main deck, where, as yet, no attempt had been made to man the boats, and discipline seemed perfect among the crew, and no condition of panic prevailed among the passengers. We conversed in groups on the deck. I remember I was with Mr. and Mrs. Straus, Mr. and Mrs. Astor, my husband, and some others, when an officer approached and said that while they felt no alarm for the safety of the ship, it was thought best, owing to the fact that the Carpathia had been communicated with and was heading toward us, that the women and children be put aboard the lifeboats, with sufficient of the crew to man same, prepared to leave the ship. This was perhaps an hour after we struck the iceberg. Even then there was no rush for the lifeboats. I saw two or three boats lowered, which were filled with as many men as women. The rest of us, however, remained on deck, assisting in loading these boats with children and women of both second-class and steerage passengers.

ALL WOMEN ORDERED IN BOATS.

"A little while later the officer again approached us and said it was imperative that all the women leave the ship, that the men could not leave until the women had been provided for, and that it was extremely urgent that we immediately take to the lifeboats in order that the men could be taken care of as soon as we were out of the way. I was placed in a lifeboat along with Mrs. Astor and Mrs. Hayes and about 40 others, among them being the ship's quartermaster and a sailor named McCarthy, who conducted themselves most commendably. I must particularly praise the brave and unselfish actions of the latter after leaving the Titanic.

"At the time of our leaving in the lifeboats the men of our party even then seemed unconcerned and failed to realize the danger that the steamer was in. Mrs. Straus absolutely refused to leave her husband. Mr. Astor, just before our boat was lowered, asked permission to accompany his wife, but was refused. He made no protest whatever and retired, joining my husband, and the two of them, together with Maj. Butt and others, rendered assistance in filling the lifeboats with passengers.

CLARK FEELS SAFE.

"My husband seemed cool and collected all the time, and told me that he would not leave the ship until all the women and children had been cared for. I know from the way he bade me good-by that he felt no apprehension and fully expected to join me later. There was room for 15 others in our boat, and these men could have been taken as well as not. The night was clear, although no moon was shining. The stars threw much light, which made the ocean quite plain. There was no ice to be seen anywhere. Each lifeboat was equipped with lanterns, so by them we were able to see one another, and orders were given to keep together as much as possible. We had plenty of provisions in the way of crackers and bread in the lifeboats.

"As we rowed away from the ship, which was now listing pretty badly on the port side, it occurred to some of us that we should return to the steamer, as we had room aboard for 15 more, at which proposal many of the women became hysterical and endeavored to dissuade us from doing so, even going so far as to impede the rowers in their efforts to carry out the plan of the more deliberate and cool. There was a great deal of commotion in our boat then.

PRAISE FOR MRS. ASTOR.

"I can not say too much for the bravery of Mrs. Astor in this connection. She, among others, insisted that the boat be returned to the steamer. All this time the lights on board the steamer were gleaming brilliantly, and we could see her looming up silhouetted against the darkness. She was sinking, however, very fast, and as we approached her the Titanic sank, followed by two almost simultaneous explosions. There was little or no suction felt as the steamer went down, owing, perhaps, to the fact that she sank prow foremost.

"We rowed about the scene of the disaster all night and picked up eight men out of the water, two of whom subsequently died of exposure and one lost his mind. We had nothing in the way of stimulants with which to revive these men, but worked over them almost all night, the women taking off their coats and furs to provide warmth for them.

"I am sure that we saw three or four fishing smacks in the vicinity. We knew that they were not other lifeboats for the reason that lights could be seen high above, as if on masts, and the Carpathia had not at that time appeared in sight.

LIFEBOATS PICKED UP.

"Some of the lifeboats were picked up by the Carpathia at 4.30 in the morning following, but it was not until about 8.30 that we were rescued.

"When the Titanic went down and the lights from it had disappeared we could hear all about us the most heart-rending moans and cries for help of those who had gone down with the ship and came up again to perish within our hearing in the darkness.

"I can not say too much for the noble assistance we received from the crew and passengers aboard the Carpathia. Everything possible was done for our comfort and the care of those who had suffered from exposure. The Carpathia cruised about the scene of the wreck for about eight hours, but found no bodies or other evidences of the disaster. The California came in sight and laid alongside us, and on our departure, by signals, promised to remain for 48 hours near the scene of the wreck.

"I wish to say that so far as I could see the discipline maintained on the Titanic after the accident was of the very best, and I saw no brutal conduct or drunkenness. The world can not help but be bettered by the example of these brave men, who gave their lives that others might live."

LAND AT MAGDALENA BAY (S. DOC. NO. 640).

A message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States by his executive clerk, Mr. Latta.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the message may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate:

In response to the Senate's resolution of April 2, 1912, requesting the President, "if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate any information in possession of the Government relating to the purchase of land at Magdalena Bay by the Japanese Government or by a Japanese company," I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State on the subject.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 30, 1912.

(Inclosure: Report as above.)

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the report of the Secretary of State may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The President:

The undersigned, Secretary of State, has the honor to report as follows in regard to the resolution adopted by the Senate on April 2, 1912, requesting the President, "if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate any information in the possession of the Government relating to the purchase of land at Magdalena Bay by the Japanese Government or by a Japanese company."

The first request of the resolution is for information relating to the purchase of land at Magdalena Bay by the Japanese Government and presents itself in two aspects, the first being the acquisition of land directly by the Japanese Government, and the second being the potential acquisition of land by the Japanese Government through its preliminary acquisition by a Japanese company. The Department of State has no evidence whatever adequate to show any acquisition of land or any intention or desire to acquire land, whether directly or indirectly, in Mexico by or on the part of the Imperial Japanese Government. Not only is this true, but, doubtless in deprecation of singularly insistent rumors to the opposite effect, both the Imperial Japanese Government and the Government of Mexico some time ago made public official declarations to the effect that there was no basis to the rumors in question.

The second request of the resolution is for information relating to the purchase of land by a Japanese company. Rumors regarding this appear to have arisen from efforts made by an American syndicate to dispose of certain lands which they claimed actually or potentially to own or control in the vicinity of Magdalena Bay. This American syndicate, according to the department's information, entered upon negotiations for the sale of the lands to a Japanese syndicate. The attorney for the American syndicate, in person and by letter, sought a statement as to the attitude the department would take toward such a transaction. In connection with these inquiries there was evidence that the American syndicate felt or knew that Japanese capitalists would not care to consummate the purchase of the lands without the approval of the Japanese Government, and that in view of the location of the lands in question, the well-known American policy to which these reports had been related in some quarters, and indeed its usual friendly consideration for the United States, the Imperial Japanese Government would not give such approval unless assured that the transaction would be unobjectionable to the Government of the United States.

This department replied to the attorney that it was difficult categorically to answer the inquiries made, but that the fact (very likely fully realized by him) ought not to be disguised that such a transfer would be quite certain to be interpreted in some quarters in a manner to cause a great outcry, and that such a result would be so obviously a cause of regret to the Government of the United States that it would appear unnecessary further to comment upon the disposition of the Federal Government in the premises.

Subsequently the American interests concerned set about making arrangements for cooperation with Japanese investors in the formation of a company for the working of the lands in accordance with some plan which they hoped the Government of the United States might be willing to pronounce unobjectionable. The same attorney of the Americans interested later roughly outlined to the department the idea of a scheme by which the Japanese investors should hold a 35 per cent interest in the company with an option for a further 15 per cent interest, the American syndicate to retain control of the property, with a majority of the board of directors and the president and manager of the company to be Americans.

A statement of the attitude of the department with respect to this general scheme was then sought by the attorney of the American interests. To his inquiry the department replied in January last that the intimation of changes in the project neither persuaded the department to add anything to its former statement nor made it feel called upon to say whether or not it might at any time see reason to disfavor such a project. It was added that these were the sole remarks the department had to make with only such general and insufficient information before it.

Since this reply the files of the Department of State do not disclose any further communication with the Americans interested in the lands or their attorney either in regard to the proposed sale of the lands to a Japanese syndicate or in respect to the mooted arrangement for Japanese participation in an American company.

Thus both correspondence and oral communication have assured on the part of the Americans concerned a full realization of the interest of this Government in the character of any such transactions as those discussed, and in the absence of any new information the department can not assume that there is on foot any project calling for action on the part of the Government of the United States.

Adverting once more to the text of the resolution, the undersigned has the honor to say, by way of recapitulation, that there is nothing on file in the Department of State that has justified any inference that the Mexican Government or the Imperial Japanese Government has been occupied with any disposition of land near Magdalena Bay by which the latter Government would acquire land there for any purpose.

In these circumstances the Department of State felt no necessity for further steps in the matter of any of these rumors, which are of a kind that all too frequently occur to the detriment of public opinion in the respective countries and are so alien to the cordial relations of the Governments concerned.

However, his excellency, the Japanese ambassador, informed the department that he had apprised his Government of the rumors in question, which had become well known through the public press; and subsequently his excellency made, with his Government's authorization and merely for the information of the Department of State, an unreserved and categorical denial of the rumored purchase of land at Magdalena Bay by the Imperial Japanese Government or by a Japanese company, characterizing the report as entirely sensational and utterly without any foundation whatever, the Japanese Government having never directly or indirectly attempted or contemplated the acquisition of any land at Magdalena Bay for any purpose.

Respectfully submitted.

P. C. KNOX.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 27, 1912.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before this message takes the usual course, I desire the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments that I may say a word in regard to this matter, because the message is in reply to a resolution which I introduced.

I did not introduce that resolution unadvisedly or with any ulterior motive. It seemed to me, from the information I had received, that there was a situation in existence in regard to the land about Magdalena Bay which might become a cause of difficulties and misunderstandings, unless some steps were taken to make the position of the United States very clear in regard to it. The report of the Secretary of State is very clear and satisfactory upon this subject. It is evident, of course, that the Japanese Government, as such, has never attempted any purchase there, and I never supposed that it had, although as a matter of form my resolution covered that point. It will be observed, however, in the statement of the Secretary of State that attempts have been made to sell the land in the neighborhood of Magdalena Bay to a company in which Japanese subjects were to hold a large if not a controlling interest. I should like very briefly to add a little in that direction to the statement made by the Secretary of State.

I do not question in the least the entire correctness of the attitude of the Japanese Government or that the Department of State has taken every proper means to make our attitude clear. But I think it is just as well that the Senate should know exactly what has happened in connection with Magdalena Bay, so far as I have been able to discover.

Some years ago the Mexican Government made a large concession of land, some 4,000,000 acres, running along the coast of Lower California, lying between the mountains and the sea, and including Magdalena Bay, to an American named Floris Hayes. He transferred his concession to another American named Edwards, and he, in turn, transferred the concession to a man named Lakin.

Under Mr. Lakin's auspices a company was chartered under the laws of the State of Maine, called the Chartered Co. of Lower California. The company did not prosper. In its efforts to sustain itself it borrowed $200,000 from the J. E. Henry Co.—or from Mr. J. E. Henry himself, who, I believe has since died—which is a very large lumber firm in New Hampshire. The Chartered Co. became bankrupt and its property passed into the hands of the creditors, the holders of the Henry loan. A holding company was formed called the Magdalena Bay Co., which took all the stock and bonds of the Chartered Co. and issued certificates. Those certificates are in the hands of the J. E. Henry Co., and, therefore, the actual control of that property is with them. They very naturally have been making efforts to dispose of the property in order to reimburse themselves for their debt. Various promoters have been trying to sell the property—on commission, presumably—and have been endeavoring to form syndicates for its purchase.

In the report of the Secretary of State, just read, which the President has transmitted, it is stated that the department was consulted about one of these propositions, which was to sell the property about Magdalena Bay to a company which should consist of Americans and Japanese, the Japanese holding 35 per cent of the stock, with an option to take 15 per cent more. Those negotiations have not been consummated, although there is a sale at present under consideration, I believe, to a company said to be exclusively American. There is, however, no doubt that efforts have been made to sell that property to a syndicate in which there was a large Japanese interest.

Now, Mr. President, what I desire to call the attention of the Senate to particularly is this: Magdalena Bay lies near the end of Lower California. It has at the present moment no commercial value. There is an industry there, and has been for some years, in the gathering of sea moss called "orchil," which is used for dyeing purposes. It has been a prosperous industry at times, but never a very large one. There have been reports of oil being found in that neighborhood and also reports of minerals, but there are neither mines nor wells, and there certainly is no commerce there. The land in its present condition is very largely desert, and I think while possibly in the future it may be developed industrially and commercially, at the present moment there is no commercial or industrial development of any importance. There are, of course, no railroad connections of any sort.

The peninsula of Lower California, although it belongs to Mexico, is a part of our coast, a continuance of the coast of California, separated from Mexico, as everyone is aware, by the Gulf of California. It connects with Mexico at the upper end by a narrow strip through which pass the mouths of the Colorado, which are of very great interest to us. This upper part of Lower California has been used as a seat of insurrection and as a refuge for outlaws and bandits from Mexico during the recent troubles in that country.

There is, as I have said, no railroad connection on the peninsula, and Magdalena Bay can have no value whatever at the present time except a military and strategic value. Its military and strategic value, however, is very great indeed. It lies there, a fine bay, at a point on the coast nearly midway between San Francisco and Panama—I am not sure of the distances, but it is approximately midway. Nobody would think of buying that property at Magdalena Bay at the present time and of paying a large sum for it except for its military value as a coaling station and naval base.

There is no doubt, Mr. President, as the Secretary of State said in his report, that efforts have been made by subjects of Japan—it has been stated, I do not know on how good authority, that some of them were directors and large stockholders in the Oriental Steamship Co.—to get possession of the title to the land about Magdalena Bay. The situation happily has not yet arisen. I do not wish it to arise. It is the part of wise policy and wise diplomacy to anticipate any situation which may give rise to difficulty or misunderstanding with any friendly nation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to inquire of the Senator precisely what the J. E. Henry Co. had in view when they made that loan of $200,000? Was it a lumber proposition that did not materialize?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President. I understand—I was so informed by their counsel—that Mr. Henry became interested in the project as it was laid before him and thought that this great tract of land lying along the coast would be of large value, and he advanced money in the regular course of business to the promoters of the chartered company in the hope that it would enable them to develop the property. It was a perfectly legitimate and proper transaction in every respect.

Mr. GALLINGER. I made the inquiry for the reason that Mr. Henry, who has recently died, was a very wise business man, and his operations in New Hampshire have been wholly confined to the lumber industry, in which he made a great fortune.

Mr. LODGE. I am aware of that fact. He made a fortune, and, as I have stated, that is the only reason, as I understand, why he became interested. He thought the property would be of value.

Mr. President, as I was saying, the situation now is harmless and we wish it to remain so. We do not wish a situation created there from which it would be in the least troublesome or disagreeable for a friendly nation to withdraw. It is better to have the matter in such a position that no situation can arise which will in the least involve us in discussion or differences with a friendly nation. But, Mr. President, the situation is now, as I believe, for the present at least, a perfectly safe one and anything we may do will carry no reflection upon any foreign country. It seems to me, therefore, that the moment is very opportune for the Senate to make a declaration in regard to the statement in Mr. Monroe's message that the American continents are not to be considered as further subjects for future colonization, in order to make it clear that that statement is not confined to government action merely or to colonization under government auspices, but that by the word "colonization" we also cover action by companies or corporations or by citizens or subjects of a foreign State which might do, at a place, for instance, like Magdalena Bay, precisely what the Monroe doctrine was intended to prevent.

The fact that a colony is contemplated at Magdalena Bay composed of citizens or subjects of a foreign Government, who would hold a point of great military value and might establish a coaling station, is just as much to be guarded against by the United States as if it were done directly by a foreign Government. The thin veil of a corporation does not alter the character of the act.

Mr. President, it is clear from the Secretary's report that some of our Japanese friends have been trying to get possession of this land through a syndicate formed by them. They have a fishing concession along that coast now. So have we. So has Great Britain. They have been taking great interest in their fishing concession. They have been surveying the coast. Information has come about their purchase and use of maps. I impute no ulterior motives at all. But the curing of fish and the repair of nets require no possession of great areas of land or of a great harbor.

It seems to me this is a suitable time for the Senate to consider this grave question in connection with the doctrine laid down by President Monroe.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] said to me he would wait until I could submit a few remarks on this measure.

Mr. LODGE. I had very nearly concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Maryland will permit me for a moment, I will state that I now prefer to wait until the morning hour is over, when, at 2 o'clock, the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. RAYNER. I wish to say merely a word to the Senator from Massachusetts.

This is a very important message from the President in response to the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts. I have just hurriedly looked over it. I have not had an opportunity to examine it. When the Senator from Massachusetts shall have finished I may possibly submit a few remarks on the subject.

I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. Suppose the owners of this Magdalena Bay enterprise should sell to Japanese subjects—either individuals or corporations—without the sanction of the Government of Japan. Suppose they should transfer their rights on Magdalena Bay to a Japanese subject, just as they would transfer it to a British subject or a French citizen. Would the Senator from Massachusetts claim that this violated the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. LODGE. It certainly does not violate any principle of international law. I quite agree to that.

Mr. RAYNER. The Monroe doctrine.

Mr. LODGE. I think it depends altogether on what is done. The Monroe doctrine is not international law.

Mr. RAYNER. I understand that, of course.

Mr. LODGE. Of course the Senator understands that.

Mr. RAYNER. I am putting this simple question to the Senator from Massachusetts; put it upon any doctrine you want: If the American interests who own this enterprise should sell their interest to subjects of Japan, without the sanction of the Japanese Government, would the American Government have the right to interfere?

Mr. LODGE. The Monroe doctrine is a policy adopted by this country, after careful consideration, for its own protection and defense. The right of a citizen of another country or of a corporation of another country to buy land on the coast of Lower California or upon our coast or elsewhere is a legal question, but the question here is whether such action interferes with the principles of the Monroe doctrine. We do not base the Monroe doctrine on international law. We have the right, for our own self-preservation, in my judgment, to protect that doctrine at all points and to take such steps as may be necessary to do it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me to go further, we have statutes that make it a criminal offense for any American citizen or person subject to our laws to enter into any such negotiations, waiving the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. LODGE. That would be a negotiation with a foreign Government?

Mr. HEYBURN. With anyone, to be turned over to a foreign Government having in view its use in future military operations.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like the Senator from Idaho to point out any statute we have which would prohibit subjects of Japan from selling lands——

Mr. HEYBURN. No; there is no use of misstating the proposition in the beginning. I said citizens of the United States. I did not say subjects of Japan.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like the Senator from Idaho to point out a statute prohibiting an American who has acquired lands in Mexico from selling them to a subject of Japan. There is no such statute on the books.

Mr. LODGE. The statement I make is based on——

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator will permit me; I do not want to be left in a wrong position. The Senator makes an erroneous statement of what I said and then denounces it as having no foundation in law.

I may have occasion hereafter to say something on this subject, and if I do so I will produce in support of anything I may say a respectable authority.

Mr. LODGE. There is no doubt, from the facts brought to my attention from those who are interested in the sale of this land, that this is simply an effort to recover money due to them as creditors. There is no question that there was a plan of establishing a Japanese colony or a Japanese settlement, or whatever you may wish to call it, on Magdalena Bay. It does not exist now. The negotiations have thus far failed. But it is upon that point I desire the consideration of the Committee on Foreign Relations first and then of the Senate. Under modern conditions there has been a great change. Of course, the Monroe doctrine was intended to apply to the methods by which establishments could be erected by foreign Governments on the American coast.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I simply wish to say I do not consider that the question involved here is one to be tested by the Monroe doctrine, necessarily. If our interests required, we could proclaim a new doctrine; and it seems to me that is really the thing for us to consider. Outside of whether this is technically or in substance an infraction of the Monroe doctrine, the question is whether we would consent to the acquisition by any Government, actually in its own name or through any organization of its citizens, to secure the control of such a place as Magdalena Bay, where there could be established a naval base which would be dangerous to our own peace and safety.

I do not think we are limited to the question whether it is an infraction of the Monroe doctrine. The question is whether the present presentation is such as to call upon us to consider the question whether we will proclaim it as a doctrine, that we will not permit the acquisition by a foreign Government, either nominally or actually, of a harbor, or of a point of strategical importance which would be a menace to us in time of war.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Georgia that this is a matter where, if it is necessary to make a new declaration of policy, it should be made. In my own belief, under the phrase relating to colonization, the declaration of the meaning of that word as now understood would cover it.

Mr. FALL. I will ask what the concession is. In other words, what is the purpose and what is the consideration running to the Government for granting this concession?

Mr. LODGE. I have not examined the terms of the concession. In a general way I may say that it is a concession granted to a certain man, with a view to the development of this great tract of land; I have heard it stated that it was 350 and again 450 miles along the coast, containing over 4,000,000 acres.

Mr. FALL. Was not the consideration for the concession that this company should improve Magdalena Harbor itself?

Mr. LODGE. I have seen the prospectus of the company. The improvement of the harbor was incidental. They expected to find minerals, to develop the sea-moss industry, and to develop cattle raising in suitable regions.

Mr. FALL. Does not the concession give to those taking it over and performing the conditions the absolute control of Magdalena Bay?

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely; unquestionably.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that this concession is now owned by American citizens?

Mr. LODGE. It is controlled by the creditors of the company.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is there anything in international law or in our relations with Mexico which would prevent the Government of the United States from becoming the owner of the concession by purchase?

Mr. LODGE. Nothing that I am aware of.

Mr. FALL. There is in the Mexican laws and constitution.

Mr. LODGE. The Mexican Government can not, under the constitution of Mexico, part with its territory.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand she has parted with it to an American citizen.

Mr. LODGE. Parted with the title, not the sovereignty.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not mean the sovereignty. If the United States were to become the owner, would it disturb our friendly relations with Mexico?

Mr. LODGE. I can not answer the question as to what our relations would be. Mexico is somewhat disturbed at present. There would be nothing unfriendly about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Perhaps the Senator from New Mexico could explain that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, we on this side can not hear a word.

Mr. FALL. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, I will say that in every Mexican concession there is a provision that under no circumstances shall the concession be transferred to any foreign Government. That is in every concession which has ever been granted by the Mexican Government.

It further carries with it a provision that a company to operate the concession or to carry out the purposes of the concession shall be a Mexican company, whether organized in the United States or a foreign country or not. It must file articles of incorporation in the proper place in Mexico, and by filing its articles it becomes a Mexican company.

There is always a provision that under no circumstances shall a concession be transferred to any foreign Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. That, I assume, would be equally prohibitory against Japan.

Mr. LODGE. The Japanese Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would be absolutely impossible for Japan to become the owner of the concession.

Mr. LODGE. I never suggested that. If that were the case, it is all answered by the statement of the President. The Japanese Government has done nothing of that kind. Its conduct has been absolutely correct. It is the indirect method of——

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the danger, if no other nation can obtain either sovereignty or title?

Mr. LODGE. The danger is this: I thought I had made it plain that under the possession of a company owned in whole or in part by the citizens or subjects of a foreign power, a colony of their people can establish at Magdalena Bay a coaling station and can acquire possession of a bay, under the title of the company from whom they buy, which would be of enormous military value.

That situation does not exist. It is because I do not want it to exist that I bring the matter to the attention of the Senate and that I introduced the resolution originally.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there can be no colony planted, that is, if the jurisdiction of no other Government can attach, it would not be a colony of that Government, and I fail to see the danger because the citizens of one foreign nation may settle there, still being subject to the jurisdiction of the Mexican Government.

Mr. LODGE. I think it would make very little difference to the people of the Pacific coast whether there was a large Japanese colony there under government auspices or whether there was a large Japanese colony there under their own auspices as the representatives of a company. I think it would make very little difference from a strategical view whether the coaling station was established by the Government or whether the coaling station was established by a Japanese company which the Government could use if it chose. The danger if it would come would be in the fact, not in how it was done.

Mr. President, I did not desire to be led into any debate on this subject. It seems to me a matter of great moment, and I hope it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that that committee will take it up and give it their full consideration and report their opinion to the Senate.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to submit only a few remarks to the Senate. I had no idea that this message, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, would come in this morning.

I do not know that I disagree very much with the Senator from Massachusetts, but there is one question that I want to put before the Senate, and a line of distinction that I want to draw, if it is possible to do it, on this subject. I think it is a question of great moment.

As I understand it, there were three enterprises that gave rise to the Senator's resolution. If I am wrong in my statement, the Senator can correct me. The first was a purchase upon Magdalena Bay by an American syndicate of a large quantity of land, I think some four or five million acres, if I am not mistaken. This was a New England corporation, I believe.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. RAYNER. They expected to find minerals there and were disappointed. Instead of finding gold they found seaweeds.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. They expected a great many things. They expected to develop a great cattle industry, and to find oil, and to develop still further a sea-moss industry, and all that can be imagined in an entirely wild and open country.

There is only one company that has title there. The title is in the Chartered Co. of Lower California, that their creditors hold there.

Mr. RAYNER. I understand there was a large amount of money put into the enterprise originally, some $100,000 or $500,000, and some syndicate or estate in New Hampshire is a creditor of the concern.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is, I will say to the Senator, essentially a lumber company, J. E. Henry & Co. I asked the question of the Senator from Massachusetts as to whether or not they had prospects in that direction, and I found they had not. So, undoubtedly, they expected to make money in developing other things.

Mr. LODGE. The Henry Co. was purely a loan company.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Henry Co. does not enter in except as a creditor. It was a mere loan.

Mr. RAYNER. Let us see now how this matter stands. This company made some effort to sell this land, whether to a Japanese syndicate or any other syndicate I do not know. I suppose they would sell the land to anybody who wants to buy it. It was not a question with the owners of this land as to whom or how the land should be sold. The question was whether they could extricate themselves from the financial difficulty they were in, and it did not make a particle of difference to them whether they sold to a syndicate of Japanese or whether they sold to anyone else anywhere.

I have not read the response to the Senator's resolution, but that was the situation about Magdalena Bay.

Then the Japanese Government was apprised by us of another purchase along the coast some two or three hundred miles south of Magdalena Bay. That is, I understand, a grant of exclusive fishing rights and covering territory of about 700 miles from the Province or State called Tepic to another State some seven or eight hundred miles farther down the coast. Tepic is about two or three hundred miles, I believe, below Magdalena Bay.

Mr. LODGE. Magdalena Bay is very near the end of the peninsula.

Mr. RAYNER. This is much farther down.

Mr. LODGE. I should say it was a hundred miles.

Mr. RAYNER. What is the distance between the State of Tepic and Magdalena Bay?

Mr. FALL. It is several hundred miles. One is on the main coast, while the other is on the peninsula.

Mr. LODGE. Those fishing rights, I understand, have been granted to Great Britain as well as to Japan. I think I may say those fisheries extend all along that coast. They acquire nothing more than the concession for the fishing rights and acquire no title to the land anywhere.

Mr. RAYNER. Of course Mexico would not have any right to grant fishing rights in the open sea. The question is, What rights does she grant within the marine league?

Mr. LODGE. She grants rights within the marine league.

Mr. RAYNER. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not wish to make any mistake. This matter has come up hurriedly. I have not had time to read the response.

There was a third proposition adverted to, but I do not think there is anything whatever about it in the response to the Senator's resolution. There was a well-authenticated rumor that the Japanese Government had acquired a 15-years' grant to the harbor of Salina Cruz, which I think is two or three hundred miles farther down from the point where the fishing rights are granted. The statement that was made was that they had acquired this right to the harbor of Salina Cruz, which is on the western coast, and would give control practically of the Tehuantepec Railroad.

Mr. LODGE. Salina Cruz is not on the peninsula at all.

Mr. RAYNER. It is not on the peninsula the Senator is speaking about, but it is on the peninsula I am speaking about. It was said the Japanese acquired a 15-year grant at the harbor of Salina Cruz.

Mr. LODGE. I can say to the Senator, I think without impropriety, that the matter of Salina Cruz has been dealt with by the State Department, but I think there is no foundation in the rumor.

Mr. RAYNER. Then we have not heard anything from the State Department about it. I considered this the most important incident of these concessions, because in connection with the Government of Mexico it would virtually give the Japanese Government control of the railroad between the western coast and the eastern coast, the eastern port being right south of Galveston, and it would be a very dangerous proposition in view of the Panama Canal.

Mr. LODGE. I quite agree as to the importance, but I think I am right in saying that there is no foundation for it.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not know what the Department of State is doing. The Senator knows more about it than I do. If the Government of Japan were to-day to acquire lands for a military reservation upon the coast of Mexico, that of a base for military operations or for coaling stations, and a base for military supplies, without any reference to the Monroe doctrine, I would consider that almost equivalent to a declaration of war against the United States, and we would not for a moment sanction or permit it. I say I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts, that if the Government of Japan were to attempt to acquire a base for military supplies and for a coaling station upon the coast of Mexico, I would come to the conclusion immediately that the United States ought to interfere without any reference to the Monroe doctrine at all. Perhaps it would come within the Monroe doctrine, the latter clause of it, but I do not think we need discuss the Monroe doctrine if an event of that sort happened.

The point I want to make is this, however: Suppose the owners of this Magdalena Bay enterprise were to transfer the lands that they own there to a subject or corporation of Japan that is not subsidized by the Japanese Government and over which the Japanese Government has no control, what are we going to do about it? That I consider to be the important proposition we are dealing with.

Mr. LODGE. That is precisely what I want to have something done about.

Mr. RAYNER. That is what I am going to ask the Senate to do something about. I have written a resolution here, upon the subject. Now, what can we do about it? What right have we to prevent a subject of Japan in good faith, for the purpose of industrial development, entirely disconnected with any governmental enterprise not sanctioned or justified by his own Government, from acquiring land in Mexico to any greater extent than we would have the right to prevent any other subject or any other citizen of any other country from acquiring land there? Under the laws of Mexico, as I understand them, the citizens of Mexico are prohibited under the severest penalties, I think under the penalty of death, if I am not mistaken, from transferring any land in Mexico to a foreign government without the sanction of the Government. I think I am right in that statement. But, Mr. President, there is nothing in the constitution of Mexico, there is nothing in the statutes of Mexico, so far as I can discover, that prevents a citizen or corporation or syndicate of Japanese subjects from acquiring land in Mexico. Unquestionably at least the Mexican Government can permit it. I will read just a few lines to show what the law is upon this subject.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a minute, it seems to me the whole thing lies simply in a nutshell. It is simply a question as to what we will do, not by virtue of any statute, but by virtue of our right and power to do that which is necessary for our safety.

Mr. RAYNER. I understand that fully, but I am not talking about the Monroe doctrine now. The Monroe doctrine does not touch the acquisition of a private citizen.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to finish?

Mr. RAYNER. I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. BACON. The Monroe doctrine does not depend on any law and is not a matter of law, but it was the enunciation of a determination on our part not to permit a certain thing to be done, not because such determination was according to any law, international or municipal, but because we deemed it essential to our safety. Therefore we have reserved the same right, if it is within our power to do it, to condemn anything else we may deem to be inconsistent with our own safety and peace.

Mr. RAYNER. I understand that fully, but it does not in the slightest degree touch the point I am submitting to the Senate. The Monroe doctrine or any other doctrine never prohibited a private citizen from acquiring land in the Central American States, for instance. There was never any pretense made in all the precedents and in all the diplomatic correspondence that has ever taken place upon the Monroe doctrine that a citizen of a foreign country could not acquire any land in a South American or a Central American state. I do not think the Senator from Georgia has caught the point I want to submit to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a minute, I think I do. I do not myself rest any proposed action on our part upon the Monroe doctrine, but in the same way that we have a right to say that we would not consent to any foreign Government colonizing any part of the Western Hemisphere we have a right to say, if we want to, that we will not consent for a citizen of a foreign Government to acquire property on the Western Hemisphere if it is done in a way that will be a menace to our peace.

Mr. RAYNER. That is not the proposition that I am discussing at all. We can enunciate any new doctrine that we want. That would be an extremely new and original doctrine unless it actually menaced our peace.

The point I make is this: What right have we to interfere with the industrial development in Mexico by foreigners, if the laws of Mexico permit it? I want to stop, if I can, this constant cry of war with Japan. I have never thought for a moment that there is the slightest danger of war. This mad fancy that Japan intends to control and dominate the Pacific Ocean is the most absurd proposition I think that ever crossed the vision of a bewildered brain. Every time a subject of Japan buys a strip of land in Mexico or goes fishing upon the coast of Mexico there is a cry of war.

What I want to do, if we can, is for the Senate, through its proper committee, to definitely ascertain what rights Japanese subjects have in Mexico and what right we have to interfere with their possessions, disconnected with the sanction of the Government of Japan?

I will take only a few moments of the Senate on this subject, as important as it is. I should like to discuss it in full, but I do not intend to do so now. Under the laws of Mexico it is provided—

Citizens of the countries bordering on Mexico can not hold real estate in Mexico within 60 miles of the frontier, without the individual permission of the President of Mexico, nor can foreigners acquire real estate within 5 leagues of the maritime coasts of the Republic, except by permission of a special act of Congress.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. That is exactly what this concession has done. It has given private citizens permission to own this land.

Mr. RAYNER. It has given them possession of the maritime coast, but it has done so, I apprehend, by a special act of the Mexican Congress.

Mr. FALL. These concessions are based upon individual contracts entered into with the proper official of the proper department of the Mexican Government first and afterwards approved by the Congress of Mexico through its legislative committee. Mexico legislates during vacations, all the while the Congress is not in session, by a legislative committee, and the acts of that committee have exactly the same force and effect as acts of Congress when in session.

I should like to ask the Senator if his view in this matter might not be affected by the fact that the concession granted to this company or to this individual by the Mexican Government transferred to the concessionaires almost governmental powers over the harbor of Magdalena Bay.

Mr. RAYNER. As I understand it, Mr. President, this concession was originally granted to the Oriental Steamship Co. and afterwards transferred by the Oriental Steamship Co. to a Japanese whaling company. The Senator will tell me whether I am right or not.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is speaking of the fishing concession.

Mr. RAYNER. Was the Senator speaking of Magdalena Bay?

Mr. FALL. I am speaking of Magdalena Bay.

Mr. RAYNER. I agree, then, with the Senator, if the Government of Japan intervenes and it is a governmental concession it would unquestionably interfere with American rights.

Mr. FALL. In the event the Mexican Government were to make a concession to individuals which practically placed those individuals in a position where they could exercise governmental powers over Magdalena Bay, would it not be possible for those individuals by indirection, by the transfer of stock, for instance, to transfer the property itself or the control of the property to a foreign Government?

Mr. RAYNER. Let me answer that question by asking another question of the Senator. Suppose subjects of Great Britain and citizens of France should do this, would they have a right to transfer to their Government a sufficient amount of stock so as to enable the Government to control it? What would the Senator say about that? I think if the transfer should be made we ought to look into it, but we ought not to question it until the emergency arises and not imagine danger when none exists.

Mr. FALL. I think if the Government of Mexico undertook to transfer one of its harbors to the Government of France or to the Government of Great Britain it would be an absolute violation of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. RAYNER. That is not the question. The question is, Suppose they give a concession to individuals, and with the danger that these individuals might transfer it to a foreign Government, does the Senator say that the mere concession given to a citizen or subject of a foreign state would afford an opportunity for us to intervene under the Monroe doctrine, if there is no actual transfer and no intention to transfer the concession to a foreign Government?

Mr. FALL. No; but if it became apparent to the American people that something was sought to be done by indirection which would violate the Monroe doctrine if it was done directly, I do not believe the American people would submit to it.

Mr. RAYNER. I agree with this proposition. I will state the proposition now upon which I stand, and it is this: If the Government of Japan acquires rights, Monroe doctrine or no Monroe doctrine, the Government of the United States will take some steps to prevent the act or if an individual or a corporation or a syndicate acquire rights which they propose to transfer to the Government of Japan. The Government of the United States would not stand idly by and permit the enterprise to be consummated. But I stand upon the further proposition that the subjects of Japan, for their own individual purposes, without any connection with the Japanese Government, intending merely to develop industrial enterprises, have all the rights that the laws of Mexico give them, and that we can not interfere with the laws of Mexico in that regard. I want that distinction understood, so that every time a Japanese subject buys an acre of land in Mexico there will not be a cry of war throughout the continent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Maryland, is it not a fact that British subjects have a concession on the coast of Mexico and are developing the oil industry there, and in connection with the oil industry they are also developing harbors to transfer the oil? Would anyone say the fact that they are developing the industry and that, in addition to that, are fixing up a harbor and making it so it can be entered, the United States is in a position to claim that there is danger because Great Britain might, in case of war, use that particular bay for naval purposes? Is it not a fact that Germany has colonies in Brazil and in other countries, and they are developing harbors and rivers? Would not the result be the same if we would object to that?

Mr. RAYNER. Of course no one would ever dream for a moment that the Monroe doctrine would touch or approach any subject of that sort. Have not the citizens of other countries possessions and concessions, and are they not conducting large financial enterprises all through Central and South America? Was it ever supposed for a moment that that would occasion any interference by the Government of the United States in the vindication of the Monroe doctrine?

We must draw this distinction, otherwise we will be in constant trouble. We must draw a distinction between the Government of Japan, either itself or through its agents, openly or surreptitiously acquiring land in Mexico for its own purposes and the subjects of Japan acquiring land in Mexico for their own purposes, simply in the progress of industrial development. The line is broadly drawn. If Mexico gives the right to a Japanese subject to own land in Mexico, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts what right have we to interfere? Can we compel the Mexican Government to change its laws and alter its constitution?

Let us leave the Monroe doctrine out of the question. Under the law of Mexico—and it is a strange law; I thought I had it here, but I know it exists——

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. Does the mere grant of a concession, such as that now under consideration, of a large tract of land about Magdalena Bay or at any other point on the Mexican coast at all impair or affect the sovereignty of Mexico over the lands covered by the concession?

Mr. RAYNER. It does not.

Mr. STONE. But that remains intact?

Mr. RAYNER. Unquestionably.

Mr. STONE. Japan, whose subjects, it is said, are about to acquire this concession, could not as a Government undertake to fortify the harbor or have any right of entering it without invading the sovereignty of Mexico?

Mr. RAYNER. Unquestionably the Senator is right about that. I do not think anybody will controvert that point.

Mr. STONE. Then the status, so far as sovereignty goes, would remain the same?

Mr. RAYNER. It would remain intact, in statu quo. What right have we to interfere except upon the ground of apprehension that things might occur, which I do not believe ever will occur? As I said just now, a foreign Government, under the laws of Mexico, has no right to hold any land in that country. Anyone who sells to a foreign Government, under the constitution and the laws of Mexico, sells under the severest penalties, I believe—I am almost certain—under penalty of death. I think there is a Mexican statute—the Senator from New Hampshire, I think, knows that a statute of that sort exists—which, under penalty of death, prohibits anyone from selling lands in Mexico to a foreign Government. We have no right to sell to a foreign Government here.

Now, before closing, what I want to direct the attention of the Senate to is that Mexico has its own laws, and we have no right to change the laws of Mexico. In Mexico a foreigner who owns land in that country, and who has what they call under their old constitution Mexican children, becomes a Mexican citizen. That is the language of the statute. They changed that afterwards, because it was pretty hard to tell whether they had Mexican children or any other kind of children, and they also subsequently changed their constitution. That is the doctrine of what is called involuntary expatriation. We have never accepted such a doctrine, that a man by becoming a land owner of Mexico became a citizen of Mexico without renouncing his allegiance to the United States; but that is the law of Mexico, that such a man becomes a Mexican citizen.

If Mexico gives the right to a foreigner who under its laws becomes a Mexican citizen or to a foreigner whether he becomes a Mexican citizen or not to hold lands in Mexico, I should like to know from the Senate or from any Senator here, because it will illuminate the subject greatly to my own mind, what right the Government of the United States has to interfere and what distinction we can draw between a subject of Japan, except upon the ground of fear and apprehension, and a subject or a citizen of any other foreign country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I should like to say that I do not apply what I am saying about Magdalena Bay to citizens or subjects of Japan particularly, but they happen to be the ones who are trying to get it. I would apply what I have said just as much to the citizens or subjects of any other country in like conditions. The case rests on the character of Magdalena Bay, because it is a menace to us to have it in the hands of foreigners. There are thousands of Japanese scattered throughout Mexico, but that is none of our affair; there are Germans in Brazil, but that is none of our affair. It is the taking of a military post on our coast line that is very much our affair.

Mr. RAYNER. I agree with the Senator if there is any attempt there to establish a base for military supplies or a coaling station. I said just now, and I say it again, that would amount practically to a declaration of war, for what right has Japan to come to Magdalena Bay?

Mr. LODGE. I do not mean the Japanese Government. If it is done by a corporation it is just as bad.

Mr. RAYNER. But there is not the slightest evidence of its being done by a corporation, and there is not the slightest evidence that it was ever so intended.

Mr. LODGE. The report of the Secretary of State sent to the Senate, and which was made after long examination of this matter, shows that there has been an attempt to purchase that very land, with the control of the harbor.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether the response of the Secretary of State to the Senator's resolution states that to be a fact?

Mr. LODGE. It states the whole negotiations there and how much stock the Japanese were to have in the company.

Mr. RAYNER. Then, Mr. President, if I mistake not, it also states the entire disavowal of the Japanese Government as to its having any connection with the matter.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, the Japanese Government, Mr. President, is not involved in it. The Government is not buying the land; nobody charges that the Japanese Government is doing anything there.

Mr. RAYNER. No; but if it is not done in the interest of the Japanese Government——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Maryland may be able to speak for the Japanese Government; I am not.

Mr. RAYNER. I am sufficiently able to speak for the Japanese Government to say that I do not believe that every time there is any acquisition of land in Mexico we ought to start the proposition about a war with Japan, for I do not believe there will be any war with Japan, either now or in the future, and I want to see if I can rid the public mind of the apprehension which exists upon that subject. Let us read what the Secretary of State says about this matter. That is the best way to settle the dispute. So far as I am concerned I am for peace and not for strife. I am for law and not for war:

> Adverting once more to the text of the resolution, the undersigned has the honor to say by way of recapitulation that there is nothing on file in the Department of State that has justified any inference that the Mexican Government or the Imperial Japanese Government has been occupied with any disposition of land near Magdalena Bay by which the latter Government would acquire land there for any purpose.
> In these circumstances, the Department of State felt no necessity for further steps in the matter of any of these rumors, which are of a kind that all too frequently occur to the detriment of public opinion in the respective countries and are so alien to the cordial relations of the Governments concerned.
> However, his excellency the Japanese ambassador informed the department that he had apprised his Government of the rumors in question, which had become well known through the public press; and subsequently his excellency made, with his Government's authorization and merely for the information of the Department of State, an unreserved and categorical denial of the rumored purchase of land at Magdalena Bay by the Imperial Japanese Government or by a Japanese company, characterizing the report as entirely sensational and utterly without any foundation whatever, the Japanese Government having never directly or indirectly attempted or contemplated the acquisition of any land at Magdalena Bay for any purpose.

Mr. LODGE. That is a splendid denial of what is not charged. The charge is—and the statement is there in that very report—that the attempt was made to sell the land to a company nominally American, in which the stock was controlled in a large part by Japanese. There is no disavowal of that in that report.

Mr. RAYNER. Now, Mr. President, in order that this question may be settled by law and not by war, I will offer a resolution, which I will ask to have referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I will read the resolution before offering it, and I think it is very appropriate at this time:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it is hereby, directed to ascertain whether under the laws of Mexico, or under treaty rights, aliens are permitted to hold and acquire landed property within her territorial limits, or to obtain concessions of land from the Government of Mexico, and also what power is conferred by law upon the Mexican Government to grant exclusive fishery rights upon its ocean shore or in any of the gulfs or bays adjoining the Mexican coast, and whether or not such acquisition of property or concessions, if allowed, encroach upon the Monroe doctrine or are affected by the same, and what position the United States should assume in reference thereto, and to report as early as practicable the result of its investigation to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have no objection——

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator allow the resolution to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. BACON. Certainly. I have no objection to that resolution, but the Committee on Foreign Relations would not be limited to that particular investigation, by any means. As I understand, the proposition is to refer the message, with the report——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the message of the President, with the accompanying report, will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I had not finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And, without objection, the resolution offered by the Senator from Maryland is referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER. The resolution should be stated from the desk.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I had the floor and I had not finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs the pardon of the Senator from Georgia. The Chair supposed the Senator had finished.

Mr. BACON. I was proceeding to say, Mr. President, that I had no objection at all to these resolutions, but that the committee would not be limited to the consideration of the particular features of this subject designated in the resolutions; that under the proposition to refer this message to the Foreign Relations Committee the entire subject would be committed to that committee and would embrace every feature of it which the committee might think of sufficient importance to investigate and to report upon.

I want to say simply one thing further. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] discusses the question of the right of the United States Government to interfere in case this is a sale to private individuals, and disputes the right of the Government of the United States to take any action in the matter if it shall be found that that purchase is in accordance with the laws of Mexico.

Well, Mr. President, according to the view I take of it, that presentation does not cover the matter under consideration. Of course we have, as a matter of law, no right to interfere with the laws of any country, and yet we do not hesitate to interfere with them whenever they are found to be inimical to our peace and our safety. There was no law which authorized the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine, and yet there was no law which could at that time have existed in a South American country which would have prevented our enforcement of the Monroe doctrine. If there had been then a provision in the constitution of any South American country which permitted the colonization by a European government of a part of the territory of that South American country, we would none the less have insisted upon the Monroe doctrine, not as a matter of law but as a matter of national right, to enforce that which may be deemed to be necessary to the safety of our Government. It was simply upon the pure basis of the right of power that we announced the Monroe doctrine; it has never rested on any other basis, and could not rest on any other basis.

Now, in the same way, when you come to consider the question of whether or not the possession of a certain piece of property in the territory of Mexico by a private citizen or a subject of another government would be inimical to our peace it is simply a question of whether or not we shall so deem it; and if we do so deem it, we take our position upon it, to be enforced, if we have the power to enforce it, not because of the law in the foreign country but because of our innate right to take care of ourselves and to do whatever is necessary to effect that purpose.

Mr. President, nobody will dispute the right of a subject of a foreign government to acquire territory in the country of Mexico if the laws of that country permit it. Nobody will dispute that the Government of Mexico has passed a law under which, under severe penalties, a citizen of that country is prohibited from conveying any part of the territory of that country to a foreign government; but that does not touch this question at all.

We are not now dealing with the question as to whether or not this suggested action by the Senate is necessary or does accomplish the purpose which the Senator from Maryland denies it will accomplish. That is a question to be investigated; that is a question we are proposing to investigate; but the ground upon which we investigate, the ground upon which we proceed, is this: That if, when we investigate it, we find that the possession of a great harbor, capable of being made a great naval base, by the subjects of another country is likely to lead to complications under which in any developments of the future a foreign Government might get through that means the possession or control of that property, if we deem it necessary to our safety to say that foreign subjects shall not have it, we have just the same right to say it as we said nearly 100 years ago, that a foreign Government should not colonize any part of this hemisphere. In either case it is a question of what we deem necessary for our safety. If we should think it necessary for our safety to say that the subject of no foreign Government shall hold any land in any country in South America, we have no right in law to say it, except the law that every country has a right to protect itself. It might be a very extreme and a very unreasonable thing for us to say, and I think it would be a very foolish thing for us to say, and I have no idea we ever will say it, but if we said it and had the power to enforce it it would be just as binding as is the Monroe doctrine now. Of course——

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. One moment, if the Senator please, and I will be through. Of course we are never going to say that, but it is altogether probable, taking each particular case as it comes, that as to Magdalena Bay we would say that we would not only not consent that any foreign Government should acquire a naval base there, but we might go further and say that, situated as that is, between the Panama Canal and our western coast, we would not permit any corporation of any foreign Government to hold it, because by that means it might ultimately result in an ownership or control by the foreign Government. If we should see proper to say that, it would rest on the same authority as the Monroe doctrine. It depends altogether on whether or not we have the power to enforce it, and that is the whole of it.

Mr. President, that is not a new position for the United States Government to take, so far as the possession of a naval base in our neighborhood by a foreign power is concerned. The prohibition of such possession of a naval base is not included in the Monroe doctrine, and yet I think it is a matter about which this Government would not hesitate to say that, regardless of the fact that it is not in the Monroe doctrine, we would not sit by and see any foreign Government take possession of any great harbor adjoining this country where the establishment of a naval base would be a menace to this country. That is evidenced, Mr. President, by one restraint which we imposed on Cuba.

I repeat, there is nothing in the Monroe doctrine which denies to a foreign Government the right to establish a naval base upon our borders; that is not included in it; and yet when we came to turn Cuba over to its own people one of our stipulations was that Cuba should not convey to any foreign Government any port or harbor which could be used as a naval base upon the island of Cuba. There is the principle. And in the same way, Mr. President, that we said that Cuba should not convey to a foreign Government a port or a harbor in the island of Cuba, we would say that no foreign Government should acquire a naval base adjoining or so near to us as to be a menace to us, and when we go that far we can go still further and say that nothing which will lead to such a result will be consented to by us. Whether this will lead to it is another question altogether, but when you come to the question of whether we have the right to do it, that is a question of power and a question as to whether or not we deem it important to our safety that that power shall be exercised.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I may say that I consider that our relations with Cuba are entirely different from our relations with Mexico. I do not think there is any comparison between the two; but before the Senator sits down I want to ask him a question. I know he might answer by saying we do not care what the nations of the world might do, but all this, of course, means war and not a peaceful solution——

Mr. BACON. Not at all. It means the prevention of war.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not think it means the prevention of war; but I will ask the Senator this question: Suppose we were to say to-day that no subject of any foreign country should hold lands in Mexico, what does the Senator think the nations of the earth would answer to such a proposition?

Mr. BACON. They would think we were very foolish, and I would think so, too; but then there may be some particular piece of land in Mexico about which it would not be foolish for us to take that view.

Mr. RAYNER. I entirely agree with the Senator that if there is any apprehension of the establishment of a naval base upon the part of Japan and if that Government intended to establish such a base, I would not care for the Monroe doctrine. It would be a declaration of war, because for what purpose would Japan want a naval base in Mexico except for purposes of war? That is not what I am talking about at all; I am talking about the general proposition; and I will state again in conclusion that foreign subjects or citizens of their own accord, without the sanction of their Government, without any connection with their Government, without intending to make any transfer to their Government, have a perfect right under the laws of Mexico and within the limits of that law, whatever it may be, to acquire land in Mexico, and, unless there is apprehension of what the Senator thinks may take place, we have no right under the law of nations to interfere with it. That is all. I do not intend to go a step further, and it is for that purpose that I have offered the resolution, so as to find out what the rights of the United States are in connection with a matter of this kind whenever it occurs.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the discussion has gone far enough, and I ask that the pending matter be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 302), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it is hereby, directed to ascertain whether under the laws of Mexico or under treaty rights aliens are permitted to hold and acquire landed property within her territorial limits, or to obtain concessions of land from the Government of Mexico, and also what power is conferred by law upon the Mexican Government to grant exclusive fishery rights upon its ocean shore or in any of the gulfs or bays adjoining the Mexican coast, and whether or not such acquisition of property or concessions, if allowed, encroach upon the Monroe doctrine or are affected by the same, and what position the United States should assume in reference thereto, and to report, as early as practicable, the result of its investigation to the Senate.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, House bill 18642.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, yesterday when speaking of the statement made by Mr. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel Works, before the Committee on Finance, I stated that in response to certain questions propounded by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], Mr. Schwab had then contended that 33⅓ per cent of the total cost of the products of iron and steel was labor, and that the labor cost in this country is twice as high as in Europe, and that the labor cost in Europe is about 16 per cent of the total cost of production, while here it is 33⅓ per cent.

Last August, when Mr. Schwab was examined under oath with reference to this matter in the investigation of the United States Steel Corporation, then pending before the committee of the House of Representatives, he made an entirely different and apparently contradictory statement. He then stated:

> The cost of labor per man in the United States is almost double what it is in England—a little more. * * * I think the cost per ton in the United States is as cheap as it is abroad, notwithstanding the fact. * * * I think the reason for that is because we manufacture in such large quantities. We manufacture under the economic conditions that I spoke of, and our tonnages are so great.

Mr. President, the only way in which we can reconcile this sworn statement of Mr. Schwab made last August with the statement before the Committee on Finance, which I have heretofore quoted and discussed, is that when he said before the Committee on Finance that the cost here was twice what it is abroad he did not mean the cost per ton, but he meant that the per diem wages paid here are twice what they are abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The only disagreement last night between the Senator and myself was this: I stated that Mr. Schwab's testimony was to the effect that the labor cost in this country was a third in the manufacture of heavy steel. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] took exceptions to that statement and also, I think, the Senator from North Carolina.

I want to call the attention of the Senator to just what Mr. Schwab stated, and it was upon the testimony given by Mr. Schwab that I made the statement. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] asked:

> Senator HEYBURN. What percentage of the cost of structural steel is wages?

That follows questions which had been asked by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Mr. Schwab answered in this way:

> Mr. SCHWAB. About one-third in all the heavy steel. From 30 to 35 per cent of the entire cost is labor.

In relation to the 16⅔ per cent the Senator spoke of, this is what I asked Mr. Schwab when he was before the committee:

> Senator SMOOT. Or, in other words, if every other item of expense attached to the manufacture of steel was equal with every other country, then 16⅔ per cent would be necessary to protect you against the actual labor cost?
> Mr. SCHWAB. Exactly so.

That is what I stated last night, and I stated it from the testimony of Mr. Schwab.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, we will get at that later, when I will discuss this question from the standpoint of what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] claims Mr. Schwab meant in the statement in reference to the proportion of labor cost. I will attempt to show that the difference in the labor cost upon the coarser and bulky articles, even as high as he claims that Mr. Schwab puts it, is covered by the duties provided in this bill; and if the labor cost of the higher and more costly articles is a third or a half higher, or even twice as high, the duties placed on those articles will substantially cover the difference, if any, here and abroad, even if that difference is as great as is contended.

Mr. President, on yesterday, when I was interrupted, I was contending that Mr. Schwab, in fixing the labor cost of iron and steel at 33⅓ per cent in this country, was speaking about the industry at large.

Proceeding upon that assumption, I was undertaking to show that if that were true the cost in Europe was only 16 per cent, and that this bill, which carries an average ad valorem of about 22½ per cent, covered the difference and left a margin for the benefit of the manufacturers of something over 6½ per cent.

The other side, I think, anticipating that conclusion, interrupted me and insisted that Mr. Schwab, in giving 33⅓ per cent as the cost in this country, was not referring to the iron and steel industry as a whole, but that he was only speaking with reference to the bulkier and heavier products of iron and steel.

Mr. President, while I do not think Mr. Schwab's testimony bears out that contention, for the purpose of the argument that I propose to make this morning I am going to assume that that is a correct interpretation of Mr. Schwab's testimony upon this question, and that when he said the labor cost of producing steel and iron in this country was 33⅓ per cent of the total cost he meant only the heavier and bulkier articles, such as are produced by the Bethlehem Steel Works and by the United States Steel Corporation. If that be true, then, Mr. President, the difference between the labor cost of these heavy products in this country and in Europe is, according to Mr. Schwab, 16 per cent.

I have caused various products of the United States Steel Corporation—and I assume the Bethlehem corporation makes about the same things—to be enumerated and the ad valorem rate of duty imposed under this bill calculated by an expert in the Treasury Department.

I will not read the various items, but I am satisfied from the information he has given me that they practically cover the things produced by the United States Steel Corporation and, in the main, those produced by the Bethlehem corporation.

Taking all these items together, those on the free list as well as on the dutiable list in the House bill, the average rate of duty carried is 13 per cent. Eliminating the things on the free list and taking only those on the dutiable list, the average rate upon these particular articles is 15.61 per cent, or, according to Mr. Schwab's own testimony, this bill carries a rate within a fraction of 1 per cent of the alleged difference between the cost of producing these articles here and abroad.

But, Mr. President, I shall contend that Mr. Schwab, in estimating 33⅓ per cent as the labor cost of these bulkier products, is far too high, and that, in fact, the average labor cost of these products in this country is not much more than half as much as Mr. Schwab claims it is.

I have here the minority report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. Attached to that report, which is signed first by Mr. SERENO E. PAYNE, of New York, there is a table:

> Table 1. Census statistics of manufactures in the United States, grouped in conformity with the schedules, tariff law of 1897, including articles classified under section 6 and the free list.

This is taken from the report of the census made of manufactures for the calendar year 1904. I have had the same Treasury expert examine this table and calculate the labor cost as shown by it of the various bulky and heavy and coarser articles known to be produced at the Bethlehem Steel Works and by the United States Steel Corporation. I will not read his statement, except to give the result. It shows that in the manufacture of these products in the calendar year 1904 there were employed 266,192 wage earners, that the wages paid were $153,061,151, and that the value of the products was $960,393,279. So we have here the total value of the things produced and the total amount of wages paid in their production, leaving no chance for a misunderstanding as to the labor cost, if the figures as to wages and production are true, and leaving it a mere matter of mathematical calculation.

Now, taking those figures, the expert advises me, as will be seen, that the average labor cost of these articles amounted to 15.9 per cent. So, as against Mr. Schwab's contention that the labor cost of these bulkier articles in this country is 33⅓ per cent of the total cost, we have the findings of the Census Bureau, based upon the actual amount of wages paid and the actual output for the year 1904, showing that the actual proportion of the labor cost to the product is only 15.9 per cent, or about 16 per cent.

In other words, Mr. President, it shows the labor cost here is about the same as Mr. Schwab says it is in Europe.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Just let me finish this statement. Taking these figures as representing the true labor costs of these heavier products, taking the contention that the labor price in Europe is only one-half what it is here to be true, then, instead of the difference in the labor cost here and abroad being 16 per cent, as contended, it will only be 8 per cent; and the present bill, carrying an average ad valorem, as I have just shown, upon these bulkier articles of something over 15 per cent, not only covers the difference in labor costs, but covers the total labor cost in this country and is more than twice as much as the labor cost in Europe. assuming that to be half what it is here.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator ought to consider that the census report he has just quoted from does not take into consideration the labor of the different intermediary processes of manufacture. In other words, let me explain it in this way: If ore is taken and transferred into pig iron, that is one process and the labor in that is computed. The Census Bureau will report the pig iron as being transferred into billets or into steel rails, and do not take into consideration the labor that was put into the process from converting the ore into pig iron, but they only take into consideration the amount of labor required to make the pig iron into rails.

It is just the same, Mr. President, as we find in the manufacture of woolen goods and cotton goods. That same thing transpires in nearly every one of the reports that are given in the Statistical Abstract.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is now making a speech. I do not care to yield for the purpose of making a speech. But let me ask the Senator this question: Does the Senator deny that the census figures I have given represent the percentage of labor cost of converting raw material into the finished products?

Mr. SMOOT. The figures the Senator quoted would show the cost of the conversion as something like 15 per cent from, as he said, the raw material to the finished product of all manufactures of steel and iron. The Senator must know that upon its very face that can not be so, because the ore itself is of little value indeed, and what makes the increased value if it is not labor?

Mr. SIMMONS. On the very face of it, Mr. President, it is so. The Senator is making this sort of an argument, that if a material has to go through one, two, three, or four different processes before it reaches the final state of completion, in fixing the duty we ought to consider the labor cost at every stage.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. And I contend, when we are talking about the labor cost in fixing duties, we want the labor cost of conversion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. The labor cost of the process below that is provided for by another duty, and the process below that is provided for by still another duty, and so on; so that, to use the language of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] in reply to Mr. Schwab before the Finance Committee, "each manipulator gets his nib."

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. OLIVER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to one of the Senators, and to whom?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am in a colloquy with the Senator from Utah, and therefore yield to him.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely suggest this example to the Senator from North Carolina, to show that 15 per cent certainly does not represent the labor cost from ore to the finished product.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Take the ore that is worth a dollar a ton, and 15 per cent on a dollar is 15 cents. The Senator from North Carolina does not want the Senate to believe that 15 cents is the labor cost from the ore to the highest class of finished products, which in many cases amount to 80 per cent labor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, we had yesterday here a very fine illustration of the fallacy of the position taken by the Senator from Utah. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], in one of his interruptions yesterday, brought out the fact that the cost of converting pig iron into ingots or pig iron into steel rails was about $1.80. The Senator brought out the further fact that there was added to the product by this process of conversion $14 of value, so that the cost of labor in that process of conversion was $1.80 and the added value $14, or about 12 or 13 per cent of the cost of conversion was labor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Carolina mean to say that he could take iron ore and convert it into steel rails for a dollar and eighty cents a ton?

Mr. SIMMONS. I said that that was the statement of the Senator from Iowa yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case——

Mr. SIMMONS. That the cost of converting pig iron—not iron ore, but pig iron—into steel rails was $1.80, and that the added value by reason of that process of conversion was $14.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Utah replies to the Senator from North Carolina, may I restate precisely what I endeavored to state on yesterday?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Caroline yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Iowa do that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I said the cost would be about $1.80. The exact amount is $1.86.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator state what it is for?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will. The Commissioner of Corporations, in examining the cost of 51,902,609 tons of Bessemer iron, states that the cost of converting the ore into pig is 77 cents per ton; the cost of converting 9,573,539 tons of basic iron into pig is 62 cents per ton; the cost of converting 5,339,766 tons of southern pig from the ore into pig is $1.23 per ton.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not follow the Senator with the figures I have.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will give the Senator the figures in a minute. The labor of converting it from pig into ingots is 61 cents.

Mr. STONE. That is, the southern pig.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; it is 61 cents for converting it into Bessemer ingots and billets; and for the open-hearth or basic ingots, 24 cents. If the Senator will then turn to another table which gives the cost of producing Bessemer rails from steel ingots, which is $1.25 per ton, he will find that the total from pig iron to steel rails is $1.86 a ton. Taking the iron from the pig to the steel rails——

Mr. OLIVER. From pig to steel rails?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes. I think I said yesterday—and I believe that was correct—from pig to steel rails.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the Senator said yesterday; but the Senator from North Carolina said it was from ore to steel rails.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I did not say from ore. I said that I understood the Senator from Iowa to say yesterday that it was from pig to ingots, or from pig to steel rails.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no. He said yesterday that it was from pig to ingots.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; from pig to ingots or from pig to steel rails.

Mr. SMOOT. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what the Senator from Iowa said. I read it here this morning, and I do not think I am mistaken about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Carolina is substantially right. Taking pig iron as a basis, the cost of converting it into an ingot for the purpose of making rails is 61 cents per ton for the regular Bessemer ingots. The cost of converting the ingot into the rail is $1.25 a ton, making a total of $1.86 a ton for the conversion from the pig into the steel rail.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that is about 12 or 13 per cent of the added value.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think that depends upon what you take as added value. If you take pig iron at $14 a ton——

Mr. SIMMONS. I was taking the Senator's statement on yesterday.

Mr. CUMMINS. Taking pig iron at $14 a ton and steel rails at $28 a ton it is about 12 per cent.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question, with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania for that purpose?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand, the Senator from Iowa takes the labor cost by adding the labor cost of the manufacture of pig iron, the labor cost of converting pig iron into ingots and the ingots into rails, producing that result, at something like $1.86.

Mr. CUMMINS. At $1.86.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, to assume that that is the labor cost of a ton of steel rails shows how little knowledge the Senators who are juggling with these figures have of the real process of manufacture. They ignore the fact that a ton of pig iron does not produce a ton of steel rails; they ignore the important fact of waste, for instance. In the Bessemer process it takes a ton and a quarter of pig iron to produce a ton of ingots; it takes about 1 7/10 tons of ingots to produce a ton of steel rails. There is continual waste in each process, and in figuring up the labor cost you have to figure first the labor cost of producing a ton of pig iron from the ore, then add to it the labor cost, say, of converting a ton and a quarter of pig iron into ingots, and then add to that the cost of a ton and one-tenth of ingots into rails, and so on. All these things must be considered in estimating the labor cost, and in arriving at the labor cost of any article you have to consider the accumulation of cost of everything, every process through which the article has passed from the time it left the earth until it reaches the consumer. The Senator from North Carolina says that each one is compensated by a separate duty, but the last duty is the accumulation of all previous duties.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask the Senator a question. In discussing the labor cost with the view to fixing duties by the standard of measuring the difference between the labor cost here and abroad——

Mr. OLIVER. Plus a reasonable profit.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, we will leave that out for the present.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not leave it out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Measuring the difference between the labor cost here and abroad for the article, we want to ascertain the cost of the process of conversion in the factory of the article upon which the duty is laid. For the purpose of fixing the duty according to that basis—according to the Republican basis, which I do not agree to—measuring the difference between the labor cost here and abroad, I maintain that you only need to take into consideration the cost of making the product upon which the duty is imposed.

Mr. OLIVER. Does the Senator wish me to reply to that?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I will reply that you want to estimate the cost of every hour of labor that is put upon any article within the boundaries of the United States of America—that is, the labor cost of any article—and you might just as well say that in estimating the labor cost of this penknife which I hold in my hand you only have to estimate the cost of the last work done upon it.

Mr. SIMMONS. All I desire to say about that is, while the Senator may be technically correct, he is not correct——

Mr. OLIVER. I am practically correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. He is not correct for the purpose for which we are trying to ascertain what the labor cost is and what the difference in that labor cost here and abroad is.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Whatever conclusions the Senator from Pennsylvania may draw from the statistics on this subject, I think upon reflection he will be inclined to withdraw his charge that I, at least, have juggled with any figures.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, I did not intend to intimate that the Senator had intentionally juggled with figures, and if I used the term "juggled" it was not in any offensive sense.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure of that, and I wanted to give the Senator an opportunity to make the RECORD clear upon that point.

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I may not agree with all of the conclusions drawn by the Senator from North Carolina, but I want the Senate to remember, and especially the Senator from Pennsylvania to remember, that I gave simply the labor or the wage cost of converting pig iron, first into ingots, and then from ingots to steel rails; and that cost, according to the most approved information we can get, is $1.86.

Now, there is a broad sense in which all value is given to an article by labor. If we could conceive of a world uninhabited, but stored with the resources of which we are now the possessors, it would be quite true to say that the world was of no value whatsoever and would continue to be valueless until man put some labor upon something in it and produced something that some other man wanted to buy; but in all that I have said I want it to be clearly understood that I am giving the figures with regard to what was actually paid to the men who work with their hands in converting one article into another. I shall show presently that the cost of the materials—an item which I know is in the minds of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania—I shall show that the materials which go to make up a ton of pig iron cost the producer of this country much less than they cost the producer in England or in Germany, and that therefore we ought to start with a credit rather than with a debit in ascertaining what the duties ought to be upon those articles which follow pig iron in production.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Iowa means a debit on account of the lower cost of materials in this country. I agree with him. The cost of materials is less here. But I have not gone into that, and for lack of time I will not go into that now. I shall probably wish to take that up later.

Mr. CUMMINS. Simply because England imports iron ore, 50 per cent of her iron ore from Spain.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. And she pays a great deal more per ton for that iron ore, which is no richer than 30 per cent, than it costs any producer to buy 50 per cent iron ore at the lake ports in America.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield for a brief statement, but I desire to go on with my speech.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely desire to make a short statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from North Carolina to yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; for a brief statement.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from Iowa, I want to call his attention to the tariff hearings of 1909 in the House of Representatives, at which Herbert Knox Smith filed his report on standard rails. It is found on page 1765 of the House hearings. He reports the cost items of rails for the five years from 1902 to 1906. I will read from his report:

Cost items.

Bessemer pig iron	$14.52
Waste	1.95
Cost pig iron in rails	16.47

Tons produced, 14,020,303.

That is not iron ore; it is pig iron, and the total cost of pig iron in rails is $16.47. Now, he goes on and estimates the cost of making steel rails. By his report the steel rails cost $22.23 a ton, and these are the items of cost:

Cost pig iron in rails	$16.47
Labor	1.98
Manganese, etc	.20
Fuel	.35
Steam	.62
Molds	.15
Rolls	.17
Materials in repairs and maintenance	.42
Supplies and tools	.27
Miscellaneous and general works expense	.51
General expense	.14
Depreciation	.16
Total cost	22.23

Mr. President, in this report, giving the figures from 1902 to 1906, the labor cost is placed at $1.98 and the operating expenses at $2.79, and in operating expenses there is not an item included which does not represent labor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President, I shall examine all those tables later, but my friend from Utah seems to assume——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield. I am very much delighted at this controversy between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah seems to assume that the manufacturer abroad has no wastage——

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. That he has no other expenses, and that he is able to make a ton of steel rails out of a ton of pig iron. Now, I suppose a ton of pig iron in England will go as far toward making a ton of steel rails as it will in America; and if it is the idea of the Senator from Utah that the Republican Party proposes to lay a duty upon steel rails in order to compensate the American manufacturer for the waste or the diminution which occurs in these processes, he is carrying the doctrine to an extent I never heard it applied before.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I had assumed also that there is depreciation in property abroad and that there are other expenses abroad, just as there are here, and I have thought that our doctrine—his doctrine and mine—simply required us to put a duty upon the article that would measure the difference between the cost of doing these things abroad and at home.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield further?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator certainly does not mean to say that I quoted these figures to prove that there was no waste or depreciation in foreign countries. I simply answered the Senator, because he said that the labor in producing steel rails from the ore to the finished product was $1.86. I say that the report of Herbert Knox Smith does not prove that. The report is here in print; I have it; no doubt the Senator has read it; and if he has not, he can find it here. It has been published, and the report says from pig iron to rails the labor cost is $1.98.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. And, Mr. President, so far as depreciation is concerned, I should like to ask the Senator if he does not recognize the fact, in connection with the question of depreciation, that if there is 16 per cent depreciation in a plant that cost $150,000 in this country and the same percentage of depreciation in a plant in a foreign country that cost $100,000, there is a difference that should be made up to the American manufacturer so far as depreciation is concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. The depreciation might be much greater abroad than at home, and it might be much less.

Mr. SMOOT. But does not the Senator recognize the fact that if it is exactly the same, if it is 16 per cent in a foreign country and 16 per cent in this country, and the factory costs more in this country than it costs abroad, there is a difference in depreciation that has got to be made up?

Mr. CUMMINS. In so far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I refuse to consider the matter of depreciation in discussing the question of wages or of labor. The depreciation belongs to the reward of capital, and that comes under an entirely different phase of this subject. I will give some attention to the matter of capital when I come to discuss the whole subject.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think I ought not to be required to yield any further to this controversy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina refuses to yield further.

Mr. SMOOT. I only desire to refer briefly to one item.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will yield to the Senator briefly.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to speak of one other item, and that is this: Included in the operating expenses, Herbert Knox Smith says the cost of steam is 62 cents. Steam requires labor to make it, and it is stated in the report that, including labor, the steam item amounted to 62 cents. That is a part of the labor cost just as much as the work of the man who takes the hot ore and carries it from one place to another.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have been very much edified and very much gratified at this controversy between the two schools of tariff thought represented upon the other side of the Chamber, and I have been glad to yield a part of my time in order that they might fight out this controversy between themselves; but, after all that has been said in the course of these interruptions, my proposition remains true, that, according to the only authentic official report that we have upon this question, the labor cost of producing the articles made by the Steel Corporation and by the Bethlehem Co., known in the trade as the heavier and bulkier products of iron and steel, is only about 15¼ per cent of the total cost of production. This bill levies average duties of about 15 per cent upon these very products, not a general ad valorem but an average ad valorem upon these specific products shown by these Government reports to represent only about 15¼ per cent of labor.

So that from the standpoint of difference in labor cost here and abroad, according to the contention of Mr. Schwab—and his contention was the same as that of nearly every witness who came before the Finance Committee—according to that contention the bill provides for twice as much duty as the difference between the labor cost of these products here and in competing countries abroad, and from that standpoint there is no just cause of complaint on the part of the manufacturers of these products in this country.

LABOR COST OF FINER PRODUCTS.

But, Mr. President, it was contended yesterday, and it has been contended all along in the House and in the hearings, that there are certain finer products of steel in which the element of labor cost enters more largely. I think most of the witnesses claimed that the labor cost of such products is about 50 per cent of the total cost. Some of them, I believe, went as high as 60 per cent, and I think, speaking as to one particular product, it was stated before the committee that the labor cost represented 80 per cent.

I have caused to be taken, because I think it very important in connection with this discussion, the various products in this bill in which the element of labor seems to be very high in proportion to the total cost, and I have had made estimates of the labor cost according to these Government publications, and I have compared them with the duties carried in this bill upon those articles, and I think I shall be able to show the Senate that in every case the duties carried in this bill more than measure the difference between the cost of labor here and abroad, even conceding, which I do not, and which no Democrat does, that the labor cost abroad is one-half less than it is here.

Let us take cutlery. I think it is one of the articles mentioned by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] yesterday as carrying a very high percentage of labor cost. The labor cost in that industry is high as compared with that of many other articles covered by the bill.

According to the census of manufactures taken in 1905, covering the calendar year 1904, the wages paid in the cutlery industry in this country in that year amounted, in round numbers, to $7,000,000, and the value of the product, in round numbers, $18,000,000; the labor cost about 38 per cent. Now, Mr. President, the House bill carries upon cutlery an average duty of 31.25 per cent. If the labor cost abroad is only one-half what it is here, and the labor cost here is 38 per cent, then the difference in labor cost here and abroad is 19 per cent. So the House bill, carrying 31 per cent, carries about 12 per cent in excess of the difference between labor cost here and abroad.

Another article which it is claimed is made at a high per cent of labor cost is files. I find that in 1904 the wages paid in this industry amounted to $1,500,000; value of products, $4,391,000; percentage of labor to total cost, 34.50 per cent.

An examination of the House bill shows that the duty upon files carried by that measure is 25 per cent. Allowing for the difference claimed between wages here and abroad, putting the wages at 34 per cent and the wages abroad at half of that, 17 per cent, the House bill carries in excess of the alleged difference in the labor cost 8 per cent.

Another one of the items of relative high labor cost is screws. The entire wages paid labor was half a million and the product a little over two million. The percentage of labor cost was 26. The House bill carries a duty of 25 per cent on screws, so that it carries 12 per cent more than the amount which it is claimed would measure the difference between the labor cost here and abroad upon the basis of its being twice as high here as in Europe.

Saws—another item in which the labor cost is high. The wages paid in 1904 was $2,700,000; value of product, $9,800,000; percentage of labor cost, 27.58, one-half of that amount representing, as it is claimed, the difference between labor cost here and abroad—13.79, or about 14 per cent. The duty under the House bill is 12 per cent, so in that particular instance the duty would not cover the alleged difference.

Firearms—the manufacture of pistols, automatic and otherwise, and all kinds of guns.

The amount of wages paid in this industry, according to the Government report to which I have referred, in 1904 was $3,722,000; value of product, $8,275,000; labor cost, 45 per cent. One-half of that amount, representing as claimed the difference between the labor cost here and abroad, would be 22½ per cent. The House bill carries upon firearms a duty of 35 per cent, or a duty in excess of the alleged difference in the cost of production here and abroad of 12½ per cent.

Watches—As I recollect it, there were but few, if any, items in the bill where it was claimed before the committee that the labor cost was higher than in making watches and articles of watch movements. According to this report the labor cost, without giving the other figures, is 40 per cent; one-half of that would be 20 per cent. The bill carries 30 per cent, or 10 per cent in excess of the alleged difference in the labor cost here and abroad.

Clocks. Labor cost according to this report is 40 per cent. One-half to represent the difference in labor cost here and abroad would be 20 per cent. The bill carries 30 per cent, or 10 per cent in excess of the alleged difference in labor cost here and abroad.

Tools. I believe there were more witnesses examined before the committee with reference to this schedule embracing tools than any other. Their complaint was most strenuous, because they claimed a large percentage of cost of labor, and that unless we retained the present duties that industry would be destroyed because of the lesser cost abroad.

The wages paid in that industry in the year I have been speaking about was $6,000,000; output, $20,000,000; per cent of labor, 30; one-half of that would be 15. The House bill carries 25 per cent, or 10 per cent more than the alleged difference between the labor cost here and abroad.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the difference in labor cost is near so important in determining competition as the advocates of protection would have us believe.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair) Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply wanted to be sure that I understood the Senator from North Carolina. He has just referred to steel tools. I assume he means machine tools.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; it is tools generally, not elsewhere specified. I was not able to get the figures as to machine tools.

Mr. CUMMINS. I thought possibly the Senator was referring to the complaint made by the manufacturers all over the country as to machine tools.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was not.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under the bill he is now discussing they are put upon the free list.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was not discussing those. They come in under the general clause providing duties on articles not provided for specifically.

We are exporting some of these products in large quantities. Take, for instance, saws. We exported and sold abroad in competition with the world last year about $9,000,000 worth of saws.

We sold abroad last year in competition with the world $6,500,000 worth of tools. We sold abroad last year in competition with the world nearly $2,500,000 worth of firearms. It would seem that if, in competition with our European competitors in the neutral markets of the world, we are able to sell these articles without a loss, these articles in which is is contended the element of labor enters largely, we at least ought to be able to sell them here in our own country, where we have an advantage in freights, in competition with foreign producers.

But I was about to say, Mr. President, that I do not believe that the difference in labor cost is near so important in determining competition as the advocates of protection would have us believe.

The States of this Union, with varying soils, climate, and labor conditions, carry on successful competition contradicting this theory.

COTTON IN TEXAS, ETC.

It costs more to make a bale of cotton in my State than it does in Texas or in Louisiana or in Mississippi, because of the greater average of fertility of the land of those States. Our average yield is as great as theirs, but we have to accomplish it through the use of expensive fertilizers and a much more extensive system of cultivation; and yet, Mr. President, we are raising cotton successfully in competition with those States.

It costs more to make a ton of pig iron in Pennsylvania than in Alabama, and yet Pennsylvania is able to compete and does compete successfully with Alabama in iron.

UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION PRODUCES CHEAPER, YET INDEPENDENTS SUCCESSFULLY COMPETE.

Independent representatives of this industry who appeared before the committee insisted that the United States Steel Corporation largely monopolized the export trade of this industry. They claimed that the United States Steel Corporation could manufacture cheaper than the independents and were therefore able to export at a profit.

Notwithstanding the fact that the United States Steel Corporation, for one reason or another, can and does manufacture cheaper than the independents, they have been able to sustain themselves in competition with this cheaper-produced product and, according to Government reports, in recent years have been increasing their percentage of production more rapidly than the Steel Corporation, showing right in our own country, by reason of greater capital, by reason of better organization and other advantages that accrue from a combination such as the United States Steel Corporation, an article can be produced very much cheaper, yet the producer at the higher cost is able to maintain himself in competition with the cheaper-produced product and to grow and expand and to acquire a larger part of the local market.

Now, Mr. President, coming back to the testimony of Mr. Schwab for a minute, in his testimony before the Finance Committee he asserted, as I recall his statement, that the average wage paid at Bethlehem in the steel and iron industry is $766 per annum. The average English wage would be, therefore, according to him, something less than $400.

Now, let us see what the Immigration Commission in its report upon this subject says.

I have here Table 46, page 66, referring to industrial conditions in iron and steel manufacturing. This table gives the per cent of males of 18 years of age and over working for wages and earning under $400. It shows that in the Pittsburgh district it is 59.2 per cent; in the east Pennsylvania district it is 74.6 per cent; New York district, 55.6 per cent; Middle West, 82.4 per cent; Birmingham district, 75.1 per cent. Total of the iron and steel manufacturing industry receiving less than $400 per year, 68.4 per cent, while 72.1 per cent of the foreign-born labor in this industry is shown to be earning less than $400.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if he understands those figures the same as I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have the report here. I did not want to read the whole report. I will hand the report to the Senator and let him read it, and he can answer in his own time.

Commenting upon this table, the commission says:

> The average annual wage of the native white in the Pittsburgh district is $677 and of the total native born $623. Both the native born and the foreign born exhibit the lowest average wage in community "C," which is east of the Pennsylvania district, where the annual earnings for the total native born are $450, as contrasted with $271 for the total foreign born.
> Average total native born, $504; average total foreign born, $325.
> Table 45 of this same report shows that the average earnings of the foreign-born laborer in the Pittsburgh mills is $367; in the Birmingham district, $309; and in the iron and steel industry at large, $325.
> According to this report of the commission it therefore appears that 68 per cent of the employees in the iron and steel industries of this country are receiving less than $400, which, according to Mr. Schwab's testimony and argument, is about the same amount paid in Europe.

SIXTY PER CENT FOREIGNERS EMPLOYED IN STEEL INDUSTRY—GREAT PROFITS.

> More than 60 per cent of the laborers employed in the steel industry in the East are foreigners, 72 per cent of whom, according to the report of the Immigration Commission, are receiving less than $400 a year and in some districts less than $300.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator understand that wherever an employee works six months or three months, then leaves, and another employee takes his place, the average of the rate per year includes the man or the boy who works six months or three months, and an average is then made of the whole number?

The figures are just a little more than one-half what Mr. Schwab quoted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know anything about what the commission did. The commission finds that the average native born in the districts discussed received $504 a year and the average foreign born $325 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be absolutely true; and yet you could not tell what is the wage in any industry in the United States unless the table shows what the wage was for 12 months, and then taking the number of employees in the mill, and whether they worked 3 or 6 or 9 months, and the amount paid for salaries, and then dividing it by the number of employees.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know what the commission did, but I find this. Here is the summary:

General nativity and race of individuals.

Sections.	Total native-born of foreign father.	Total native-born.	Total foreign-born.
East:
Pittsburgh district	552	623	363
Community C—Eastern Pennsylvania	472	450	271
Community D—New York	446	514	371
Middle West—Community E			285
South—Birmingham district	411	400	309
Total iron and steel manufacturing industry	488	504	325

This industry, with its product protected by an average duty of 35 per cent, recruiting 60 per cent of its labor from southern and eastern Europe, where labor conditions and wages are the lowest of all Europe, comes to Congress, and in the name of American labor, in the interest of the high standard of living of the American laborer, demands protection against German labor and English labor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator put in at that point in his speech, if he has not already prepared it, how many hours of labor and the number of days per week required of those laborers?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not that, but I can state it generally. In the recent report set forth in the report of the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, and in Mr. Knox Smith's report, it is found that at the blast furnaces and in some other departments of the steel and iron industry they have the continuous process by which a man works 7 days a week 12 hours a day. While it was contended that was necessary, it was shown in the report that while it is necessary in certain departments to hire continuous labor, that the process is practiced where there is no such necessity and practiced for reasons of economy.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator wants to be fair.

Mr. SIMMONS. Surely.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that the 12-hour-a-day labor in the steel industry applies only to the blast-furnace men.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will find that statement very positively contradicted in the report. It applies to some other departments where there is no such necessity as there is in the blast-furnace department.

Mr. SMOOT. We had no witnesses before the Finance Committee who stated that there were any 12-hour-a-day men with the exception of the blast-furnace men. It was at their request, and it was stated by the men themselves before the committee that they preferred to work the 12 hours, because of the 12 hours they were not required to work over 5 or 6 hours. If the blast went on with no interruption and the process was perfect, there was not very much to do, and they were there as watchers rather than as workmen.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator think it is necessary, except for purposes of pure economy, to work a man 7 days in the week 12 hours a day?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not.

Mr. SIMMONS. It was admitted, if the Senator will permit me, that that could be avoided, that there was no insurmountable difficulty that could not be overcome. But it was said by one of the witnesses, and I think Mr. Schwab, although I am not sure about it, that that would be too expensive; and it is for the purpose of saving expense in this industry, where more profits have been made than in any other industry in this country, that some laborers are required to work 7 days in the week and 12 hours a day, and there is a shift every 2 weeks when one man has to work 24 hours a day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator I will state that I do not approve of employing any class of labor and requiring them to work 12 hours a day. I will also state, in justice to Mr. Schwab, as I think the Senator will remember, he testified before the committee that his company as well as one other company had undertaken to change their system some years ago, and that they were perfectly willing it should be changed and hoped to see the time when it would be; that the only reason why it had not been, as far as his company was concerned, was because of the fact that the industry was upon that basis, and unless they were all put on the same basis one would have an advantage over the other in making goods at a less price.

Mr. SIMMONS. And they, for the sake of advantage in cost incident to putting on another shift, were doing this thing.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. And make them work continuously.

Mr. SMOOT. I have so stated. It was also stated by the men themselves that out of the 12 hours sometimes they did not work 5 hours. Even if they worked but 2 hours, as far as I am concerned, I would never approve the employment of men and compelling them to be even on watch for 12 hours.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that point I interrogated Mr. Schwab when he was giving his testimony, and Mr. Schwab's words will be found on page 1274 of the hearings. He said:

> Mr. SCHWAB. I can only say that the steel interests a year ago met in New York with a view of changing this condition of affairs by putting on a sixth extra workman and by making such changes as would give a workman one day a week off. The experiment is now being tried at one of the Steel Corporation's works in Pittsburgh, which we are following with great interest. We proposed it to our workmen, and almost unanimously they desired that the condition continue as it is at present. This class of men that work 12 hours a day for 7 days in the week are blast-furnace men. It is a continuous metallurgical operation, and somebody has to be employed all the time.

Then I inquired of him. I asked:

> But that does not apply to your entire force?
> Mr. SCHWAB. Oh, no. These are the men who work at the blast furnaces. All the others work 10 hours a day. We give all the workmen, other than the blast-furnace men, a holiday on Saturday.

Then later on the Senator from North Carolina himself interrogated Mr. Schwab. He said:

> Senator SIMMONS. I want to call attention to the fact that in the report they state that that seven days a week is not confined to those metallurgical operations.

The Senator had just stated that the employment extended beyond that.

> Mr. SCHWAB. That is true. There are some situations in the rolling mills, but they are very few. But that is not the ordinary practice. But in any operation that is necessary, by reason of metallurgical conditions, to be continuous, the practice is to employ the workmen 12 hours a day. It is universal all over the world.
> Senator SIMMONS. Do you not see the same thing in some other departments?
> Mr. SCHWAB. It is only done, as I say, in continuous operations. You can take all our men in the engineering department—the machinists, mechanics, and laborers—all the men of that sort work 10 hours a day.

Mr. President, I put that in the RECORD with the consent of the Senator from North Carolina, and I thank him for giving me the privilege, to show that while I do not approve this condition, and we had the assurance from Mr. Schwab and I think from others that they were working out the problem of changing it, it applies only to the men who because of metallurgical conditions are rather compelled to do this. It is a universal practice. As Mr. Schwab says, it is universal the world over.

Mr. SIMMONS. This is what the Bureau of Labor has to say on this matter in its report on the steel industry:

> The investigation developed that the seven-day working week was not confined to the blast-furnace department, where there is a metallurgical necessity for continuous operation and in which department nine-tenths of the employees worked seven days a week, but it was also found that to a considerable extent in other departments, where no such metallurgical necessity can be claimed, productive work was carried on on Sundays just as on other days of the week. For example, in some establishments the Bessemer converters, the open-hearth furnaces, and blooming, rail, and structural mills were found operating seven days a week for commercial reasons only.
> The hardship of a 12-hour day and a 7-day week is still further accentuated by the fact that every week or two weeks, as the case may be, when the employees on the day shift are transferred to the night shift, and vice versa, employees remain on duty without relief either 18 or 24 consecutive hours, according to the practice adopted for the change of shift. The most common plan to effect this change of shift is to work one shift of employees on the day of change through the entire 24 hours, the succeeding shift working the regular 12 hours when it comes on duty. In some instances the change is effected by having one shift remain on duty 18 hours and the succeeding shift work 18 hours.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I will go on and finish my speech.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to apologize to the Senator from North Carolina for interrupting him. I dislike very much to do it, but I want to say right here that the head of one of the largest steel concerns in the country told me within two months that they were making an earnest effort to change the condition of affairs in their plant and that they undoubtedly would make the change.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if they can not accomplish it in 24 hours by simply hiring a few more men and increasing their expenses a little?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. If the Senator from North Carolina were familiar with large manufacturing enterprises, he would not even ask that question. It is a revolution. What I was going to say, and I will be very brief, is that the main opposition, the most determined opposition to this effort to change, comes from the men themselves, who——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I submit that the Senator is injecting a speech into mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina declines to yield further.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is not making a statement of facts, but is simply injecting a speech.

Mr. OLIVER. I will not further interrupt the Senator. I was endeavoring to enlighten him, but he does not seem to relish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have had an abundance of enlightenment through the report of the Bureau of Labor. Here is an industry employing men and requiring them, where there is no absolute necessity for it except to save money, to work 12 hours a day and 7 days during the week and every 2 weeks to work 24 hours 1 day. That is an industry employing probably a larger per cent of foreign labor than any other industry in this country. It is recruited from the very scum of Europe, not from the higher-priced labor countries of Europe where they say that they are not able to compete with the labor, but from the lowest-priced labor countries of Europe—not from Germany or England, where wages are nearer the same as ours, but from Italy and Hungary, where the difference between wages here and abroad is greater and where the wages are less. This industry, enjoying the benefits of high protection, has accumulated enormous profits during the last 15 or 20 or 25 years through protection—protection in the products of its factory and its free trade in labor—and this is the industry that can not afford to employ an extra shift of men so as to relieve against the necessity of the men having to work 7 days in the week and every 2 weeks 24 hours in a day at the end of a shift.

These conditions as to employment of foreign labor and long hours that I have described, Mr. President, in the steel industry obtained during the same period of time covered by the statement of the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co. when he wrote, under date of November 5, 1909, the following:

> The capital stock of the Bethlehem Steel Co. amounts to $15,000,000 (all owned by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation), divided into 300,000 shares at $50 par. While nominally only $1 per share has been paid in, the surplus of the company is practically sufficient to pay the stock in full, and the company intends to issue stock to represent this surplus.

Referring to this letter, Hon. A. MITCHELL PALMER recently said:

> Apparently this intention of the company was carried out and the earned profits added to the capital account, for in 1910 we find that the Bethlehem Steel Co. earned, net, after liberal additions to depreciation and furnace relining reserves and considerable redemption of funded debt, the comfortable amount of $1,789,462.09, which was sufficient to nearly double the then surplus and declare and pay a dividend of 10 per cent, amounting to $1,500,000 on the capital stock of the company, which, according to Mr. Schwab's statement, consisted of $300,000 contributed in cash and $14,700,000 earned profits. What this return on the actual cash investment amounted to is a simple problem in arithmetic, in the solution of which the men at Bethlehem, whose wages have been tabulated by the Bureau of Labor, would find an interesting though unprofitable occupation.

Mr. President, this Bethlehem record of 10 per cent dividends upon $15,000,000 actual investment by its stockholders of only $300,000, is a record of "get rich quick" without parallel in the history of the world. The president of this corporation enjoying the blessing or curse of free trade in labor—employing 60 per cent of the scum of Europe at starvation wages, while the products of this alien horde is highly protected against the higher price labor of Europe—protests against any cut in its protection, and declares if this is done it will have to go out of business or further cut the wages of its aggregation of Hungarians, Poles, Magyars, and what not.

In the name of humanity I should hate to see the pay of these underpaid and underfed foreigners further reduced, but in the interest of the thousands who buy its overprotected product I would dearly love to see the extortionate profits of this petted child of fortune cut down a little bit, if not more. I should feel that such a cut would be healthy. While it would grieve Mr. Schwab and his Bethlehem stockholders, it would gladden the hearts of the thousands who have to buy his products.

THE ARGUMENT THAT WE CAN NOT COMPETE WITH THE FOREIGN PRODUCER IS ANSWERED BY THE FACTS OF OUR EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. President, the argument of the opponents of tariff reduction that we can not compete with the foreigner in this market, that any material reduction in the present high rate of duties will result in foreign invasion of our markets, is overwhelmingly answered by our annual exports of merchandise. That it is profitable is shown by the eagerness it is sought after. That the profits are satisfactory nobody denies.

Last year we exported and sold abroad in Europe, in Asia, in Africa, and South America, all over the face of the earth, over $900,000,000 worth of the products of our factories.

If we can not compete with the foreigner in our own market with a tariff advantage such as this bill carries—an advantage of 22 per cent—how are we able, year after year, to sell nearly a billion dollars' worth of products of these factories in the neutral markets of the world where we have no tariff advantage?

If the manufacturers of the articles embodied in this bill would not be able to compete with the foreigner in this market with the 22 per cent tariff advantage which it would give them, how were they able last year to sell at a reasonable profit $230,000,000 worth of these very products from one end of the world to the other without any tariff advantage and under probable freight disadvantages in competition with the like products of the very countries they now claim will scale this 22 per cent tariff wall and take from them their American customer?

CANADA.

In the calendar year 1910, as appears from the Canadian Yearbook, Canada imported in iron and steel and manufactures thereof $61,183,000, of which Great Britain sold her $11,212,000; Germany, Holland, Belgium, and all other countries except the United States, $1,930,000; and the United States sold her $48,040,000, or over four times as much. That, Mr. President, in the face of the fact that Great Britain enjoys in the Canadian market the tariff preference over us of 35 per cent.

MEXICO.

According to the Bureau of Statistics, we exported to Mexico, of iron and steel, including agricultural implements, cars and carriages, which included automobiles, in 1910, $18,130,000; England, $3,722,000; Germany, $2,423,000; Holland and Belgium, a little less than $250,000; or, we exported about five times as much as Great Britain, almost eight times as much as Germany, and over sixty times as much as Belgium. These figures demonstrate we are able to compete with the other iron-producing countries in this neutral market of the world.

Mr. President, it can not be contended that in Mexico we enjoy any privilege over our foreign competitors. Freight rates are probably little to our disadvantage, tariff rates are equal; and yet, under these conditions, we sell to Mexico $18,000,000 worth of products of our iron and steel industry against Great Britain's less than $4,000,000 worth.

STEEL RAILS.

In 1910 we exported, all told, of steel rails $10,546,000, as against England's $13,275,000, Germany's $12,924,000, Belgium's $4,209,000, and Holland's about $3,480,000. If we exclude the exports of these countries to other countries in Europe, which they dominate and control against us by reason of freight rates, and exclude the exports to the colonies of each of these countries, which they in a large measure and in many cases entirely control, and take into consideration only foreign markets where all countries stand on an equality as to tariff and somewhere near an equality as to freight rates, we exported nearly as many dollars' worth of steel rails to these neutral markets of the world in 1910 as all of Europe combined. We exported in that year to these neutral markets $10,546,000 worth of steel rails, as against Great Britain's exports of about $4,000,000, Germany's exports of about $5,000,000, Belgium's exports of about $2,500,000, and Holland's exports of about $1,300,000.

Mr. President, in the face of the fact, admitted of all men, that our manufacturers are selling annually nearly a billion dollars' worth of their products of all kinds in nearly every quarter of the globe, in Asia, in Africa, in Europe, in South and North America, in competition with the world and at profits so satisfactory that this trade is eagerly sought by them; in the face of the fact that our manufacturers of iron and steel sold to Canada last year more than four times as much of these products as Great Britain, notwithstanding Great Britain has a preferential tariff advantage over us of 35 per cent; in the face of the fact that in 1910 we sold to Mexico, where we have no advantage over our competitors either in tariff or freight rates, products of iron and steel, including farming implements, carriages, and so forth, twice as much as England, Germany, Belgium combined; in the face of the fact that last year we sold of steel rails to the world at large $10,000,000, as against England's $12,000,000, Germany's $13,000,000; and that leaving out the contiguous, or approximately contiguous, countries of Europe, where the European manufacturer has a freight advantage over us, and leaving out the dependencies of our European competitors, where for various reasons they have an advantage over us, we sold in the neutral markets of the world, where trade conditions are equal nearly, as many steel rails as all the balance of the world; in the face of the fact that in the neutral markets of the world, where we have no advantage in either tariff or freight rates, markets which until recently our competitors have dominated; markets in which they have better bank-exchange arrangements and facilities than we have; markets in which by reason of long possession they understand the habits, the customs, the taste of the people better than we, and cater to them to an extent that we have not learned; I can not understand, if in the face of these facts we are able to meet these competitors elsewhere upon the basis of fair profits, why we are not able to meet them upon the same basis in our own country, with our customers at our doors, and where both tariff and freight rates are in our favor.

Mr. President, our manufacturing industries are fairly well organized. I am not now referring to the trust combinations, but business organizations. I say they are fairly well organized, and through their various organizations they are able to make themselves heard, and do make themselves heard, whenever their interest is involved in any way in legislation. They are never forgotten. Speaking with reference to our population as a whole they may be said to represent the thousands, but the consumers who represent the millions are too numerous for organization. They have no committees. When legislation affecting their interest is pending the consumers have no direct personal representative or voice here. As a result, in our tariff legislation, in recent years, while the interest of the industries has been carefully safeguarded, protected, and often unduly promoted, the interest of the consumer has been too largely overlooked and forgotten.

The Democratic Party, Mr. President, while not forgetful of the interest of those great industries which have contributed so largely to the greatness, the wealth, and the prosperity of the Nation, does not forget the absent consumer, however humble. The authors of this bill in the other House, mindful of the great fundamental Democratic principle of equality, while not forgetting the seller and his interest, have not forgotten the buyer and his interest as well.

Mr. CULLOM. Unless the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] desires to speak, I shall move an executive session. We have had no executive session this week.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Illinois withhold that motion for just a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. I will.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is upon the calendar a notice from me that I would address the Senate on this general subject to-day immediately after the routine morning business. It is obvious that I must in some way change that notice. To-morrow we have a special order. I do not know whether the Senator form Missouri desires to speak next or not.

Mr. STONE. As the RECORD shows, on yesterday I stated that by the courtesy of the Senator from Iowa, who had a notice that he would speak after the routine business to-day, and who indicated to me that he preferred to postpone his remarks, I would address the Senate to-day. But under the circumstances at present I think I will not proceed now. It is nearly 4 o'clock. As there is a special order for to-morrow, if it should suit the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow, instead of 2, we might be able to conclude the consideration of that measure before the close of the calendar day.

Mr. GALLINGER. If Senators will permit me, I will now move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is utterly useless to contemplate finishing the assignment for to-morrow on to-morrow. There are a number of speeches I know that will be made against the measure, and it will take several days. I expect to discuss it very fully.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator think it will take several days.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. STONE. Then I suggest that we meet at 12 o'clock each day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have made the motion for to-morrow—that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope the Senator will not fix it as a permanent rule that we shall meet at 12 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. The motion is only for to-morrow, I will say to the Senator.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Missouri has the floor, but I will say to him, while I am on my feet, that all I will do is to ask that the notice I have given be withheld from the calendar hereafter, and when this matter comes again before the Senate I have no doubt the Senator from Missouri and myself will be entirely able to agree as to the order of speaking.

Mr. STONE. There will be no difficulty about that.

I wish to make this observation before the Senate goes into executive session on the motion about to be made by the Senator from Illinois: I can not see that there is very much need or very much benefit to be derived from continuing the general discussion of this tariff bill by any Senator unless the discussion is one in which the Senate as a whole, or at least some reasonable part of the membership, is interested. We have just listened to a very able and unusually instructive address by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], when he takes the floor, I know will deliver an exceedingly interesting and instructive address. I can not understand, sir, why it is that Senators are apparently indifferent about the consideration of this important measure. Of all questions coming before the Senate and before Congress at this session the tariff question is paramount. The attention of the country is more fixed upon it than upon any other, and it is the question around which, above all others, the great struggle of this year for political supremacy will be waged. I presume by what I have seen here in the last day or two that Senators are so well informed with respect to this particular bill, or so well equipped to pass intelligent judgment upon it, that they do not care to hear anything about it. If that is true, I think we had better take it up by paragraphs and proceed with it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. STONE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. BACON. I should like to say to the Senator that as the address of the Senator from North Carolina was not entirely agreed to by Senators on the other side and they had evidently a good deal of opposition to the particular propositions which he advocated, it might be well to let some of them do a little of the speaking before the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Iowa proceed on the same side. It would give the Senators who are opposed to this bill the opportunity to make their speeches consecutively, without having to interject them in a spasmodic manner, as they have been doing to-day.

Mr. STONE. Well, perhaps that is true. The Senator from Georgia always makes pertinent and wise suggestions; but that does not quite touch what I have in mind. Why should we carry on a debate here in the Senate before half a dozen Senators? Why should we not take up the bill by paragraphs, and dispose of it at once? The Senator from Utah, I have no doubt, is prepared to present the ultra-Republican view.

Mr. SMOOT. The true Republican view.

Mr. STONE. The Senator says the true Republican view, which is from his standpoint the ultra-Republican view. It is a mere matter of terms; but I confess a degree of impatience at the things we see here in the Senate.

Mr. President, I have been away a good deal for the last two months. I came back a short time ago and Senators on this side of the Chamber, at least, have been prodding me, as they have been other Democratic members of the Finance Committee, for apparent dilatoriness in bringing the tariff measures before the Senate. They were full of the militant spirit of getting at it and having something done. Now we see what we see; and I think we had just about as well take up the bill by paragraphs and dispose of it, since Senators know all about it, and the general discussion does not interest them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I assume that the Senator from Missouri would not press that upon the Senate in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STONE. I am not pressing it; I am just saying that unless Senators manifest hereafter more interest in this important work, then I can not see any good in this general discussion, unless the speeches are to be sent out for campaign purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume that that is what our Democratic friends are intending to do.

Mr. STONE. It will be done, and we can do it with much better reason than it can be done from the other side.

Mr. GALLINGER. That depends.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can hardly join in the request or suggestion of the Senator from Missouri. I do not want to beg for an audience, and I do not intend to do so. I think it would take just as long to discuss this bill paragraph by paragraph as to discuss it from the general standpoint in the first instance. I regret very much that my friend from North Carolina had so small an audience, but possibly the spur that has now been administered by the Senator from Missouri will secure a larger number of Senators hereafter.

So far as I am concerned, I shall not debate the subject for the purpose of informing the country generally. I intend to debate it for the purpose of informing Senators, and a great many of them need the information.

It is one of the queer things in connection with the debate this afternoon that the men who really know a great deal about the subject were the men who were here. I am speaking not of myself, but I have in mind the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and others. Those Senators who have given the least study to the subject are the Senators who were not here, and therefore I want to emphasize in that respect what has been said by the Senator from Missouri. I do not take the Democratic view of it, nor do I not take the Republican view of it as entertained by some of my associates, and I want to convince them, as long ago somebody has convinced the country, that these duties ought to be reduced.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that a comparative statement showing the rates of metals and manufacture of metals under the tariff act of 1909, together with the so-called Underwood bill, being House bill 18642, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] be printed for the use of the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 17 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 2, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] will take the chair.

AMENDING MINING LAWS IN ALASKA.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18033) to modify and amend the mining laws in their application to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That no association placer-mining claim shall hereafter be located in Alaska in excess of 40 acres, and on every placer-mining claim hereafter located in Alaska, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, including the year of location, for each and every 20 acres or excess fraction thereof.

SEC. 2. That no person shall hereafter locate any placer-mining claim in Alaska as attorney for another unless he is duly authorized thereto by a power of attorney in writing, duly acknowledged and recorded in any recorder's office in the judicial division where the location is made. Any person so authorized may locate placer-mining claims for not more than two principals or associations under such power of attorney, but no such agent or attorney shall be authorized or permitted to locate more than two placer-mining claims for any one principal or association during any calendar month, and no placer-mining claim shall hereafter be located in Alaska except under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That no person shall hereafter locate, cause or procure to be located, for himself more than two placer-mining claims in any calendar month: Provided, That one or both of such locations may be included in an association claim.

SEC. 4. That no placer-mining claim hereafter located in Alaska shall be patented which shall contain a greater area than is fixed by law, nor which is longer than three times its greatest width.

SEC. 5. That any placer-mining claim attempted to be located in violation of this act shall be null and void, and the whole area thereof may be located by any qualified locator as if no such prior attempt had been made.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Line 5, page 2, strike out the words "two principals or associations" and insert the words "two individuals or one association."

Line 11, page 2, strike out the word "provisions" and insert the word "limitations."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendments will be adopted and the bill as amended be passed. I have nothing to say, Mr. Chairman, unless some gentleman desires some information about the bill.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Alaska ought to explain the bill, or some one.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Well, I will explain the bill briefly and then the gentleman from Alaska can also do so. It is a bill placing limitations on the filing of placer-mining claims in Alaska. Under the present law an association can be formed and this association can take up 160 acres of land, and by doing $100 worth of work on the whole 160 acres during the period of two years they can make their claim good. This bill provides that the individual can take up for himself 20 acres of land and for two individuals 20 acres each, making 60 acres, or for an association 40 acres, so that one individual can file either for himself and two other individuals or for himself and an association on 60 acres of the land and they can only file two claims in each month.

Mr. MADDEN. For mining purposes?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Not for agriculture?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No. Under the present law an individual can file for an association on 160 acres and he can keep on filing just as often as he has time to do so.

Mr. MADDEN. Of what does an association consist?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Two or three men associated together.

Mr. MADDEN. How few?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would say two or three would constitute an association.

Mr. MADDEN. Are they organized under the laws of the United States?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No.

Mr. MADDEN. It is just a voluntary association?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What title do they get; what responsibility is imposed upon them?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Under the present law, do you mean? Three men can associate themselves together as an association; two can stay in the United States and one go to Alaska and file on 160 acres of mineral land. He can the next day file on another 160 acres, and he can keep on filing as long as his paper and pencil last; and the only obligation imposed upon him is to do $100 worth of work in two years on each 160 acres.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the association get title to the land in the name of the association, or in the name of the individuals?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It gets it in the name of the association and incidentally transfers it to the individuals.

Mr. MADDEN. How is the association organized?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. They organize themselves and call themselves an association.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there not any law under which they are organized?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No.

Mr. MADDEN. How can they get a title to the land in the name of the association?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Under the United States statute which authorizes them to do so.

Mr. MADDEN. It authorizes any individuals to form a voluntary association and give any name they please to the association, and takes title in the name of the association?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is pretty near as loose as that, and we propose to change that in this bill. This bill allows a voluntary association to be formed, but only allows that association, or the man who is acting for the association, to file on 40 acres of land for the association, and on that 40 acres he must do $100 worth of work on each 20 acres or a fraction thereof every year.

Mr. MADDEN. Under the present law there is no limit to the number of acres of land that can be settled upon by the association?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. One hundred and sixty acres is the limitation.

Mr. MADDEN. They can make as many settlements as they wish, though?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. So that there is not any limit?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Practically none.

Mr. MADDEN. This bill proposes to limit the amount of land that can be acquired by the association to 40 acres, on 20 acres of which they must make improvements?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It proposes to limit the number of acres to 40, as the gentleman states, and on each 20 acres of that there is to be $100 worth of work done each year, and the attorney for the association can only file two claims a month.

Mr. MADDEN. They can file as many claims as they please at the rate of two a month?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Two a month. Now they can file one every 15 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not fix a limit beyond which they can not go?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This bill was framed by the Delegate from Alaska, who has made a careful study of this situation, and is recommended by the Interior Department. It is recommended by the present governor and has been recommended by the governors of Alaska for the last 12 years. They thought that this limitation was sufficient. They did not want to hamper anyone who desired to go to Alaska for the purpose of honestly developing mineral lands, but they did want to stop the people who go there and take the lands up for speculative purposes and who never make any development. These gentlemen, who are familiar with this subject and who have investigated it, thought the limitations of this bill were sufficient.

Mr. MADDEN. Under this proposed law any association could go into Alaska and acquire 10,000 acres of land for mineral purposes?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. In the course of time it could; but I will say to the gentleman they would have to do a hundred dollars' worth of work on every 20 acres every year, and they could not hold that land indefinitely, like they do now, and practically do no work on it.

Mr. MADDEN. They have to do that every year, do they?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Every year. I will ask the Clerk to read a letter which I received from the Acting Secretary of the Interior on the subject as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 1, 1912.

Hon. H. D. FLOOD,
Chairman Committee on the Territories,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In response to your request for report on H. R. 18033, Sixty-second Congress, second session, entitled "A bill to amend the mining laws in their application to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," I have to advise as follows:

The limitation of an association placer to a maximum of 40 acres meets with the approval of the department, since it is believed that it will better insure the development of the minerals therein. The association and patent work now required by law to be performed on an association placer of 160 acres will then be required to be placed on each 40-acre location; also under the present law eight persons frequently join in a single location of 160 acres and immediately thereafter transfer to one person, which results in the control of the maximum area by one individual through the use or employment of straw or "dummy" locators, which practice will be obviated or at least greatly circumscribed by the proposed amendment.

The department believes that the time within which a locator must begin to develop his claim under the present law is too long. It is now possible to hold possession of a claim for two full years before any work is required, and this has resulted in the holding in some cases of lands for speculative purposes. For these reasons the provision of the bill requiring assessment work to be performed during the year in which the claim is located meets with approval. The proposed limitation of the number of locations which may be made through the use of powers of attorney is also approved, and in this connection attention is directed to the observations upon this question on page 10 of the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year ended June 30, 1911.

It is suggested, however, that a further limitation than that proposed to be imposed by section 2 of the bill be made by striking from line 2 of page 2 of the bill the words "two principals or associations" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two individuals or one association," which would limit still further the making of locations through powers of attorney, permitting, for instance, the locator to locate one 20-acre claim for himself and one 20-acre claim for each of two individuals, or one location of 20 acres for himself and one 40-acre association placer for the association he is authorized to represent.

The provision in the last clause of section 4, limiting the dimensions of a placer claim, is practically covered already by law and the decisions of the department, special reference being made to the case of the Snowflake Fractional Placer, reported in 37 L. D., 250.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS, Acting Secretary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] yield to a question?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the bill which was argued here the other day before the House, giving a Territorial form of government to Alaska, become a law?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; it has not passed the Senate yet.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has not passed the Senate?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If that bill should become a law, would that legislature have the right to change the manner of acquiring placer claims in Alaska?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, it must be by a law of Congress?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Exactly. I have nothing further to say, Mr. Chairman. I ask that we now proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

BROTHERHOOD OF NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as we are in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for general debate, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. MCKINLEY] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a memorial of the Brotherhood of North American Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. MCKINLEY] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of a memorial. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the memorial referred to:

Memorial of the Brotherhood of North American Indians setting forth the facts and circumstances concerning the treaties and agreements with certain North American Indians wherein the treaties and agreements have not been fully complied with and carried out by the Government and suggesting remedies for the benefit and relief of the Indians and the betterment of the Indian race.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April —, 1912.

To the Congress of the United States of America:

The Brotherhood of North American Indians respectfully represents that the North American Indians, living in many States of the Union, some of whom have been recognized and contracted with by the Federal Government and some of whom are under the jurisdiction of State government, have many matters of importance to bring to the attention of the Congress of the United States of America, and have important grievances and complaints which need and require the attention of the Congress and the executive department of the Government in order that the treaties and agreements with the tribes shall be fulfilled and in order that important wrongs which the Indians have suffered may be redressed in the only way in which such wrongs can now be redressed—that is to say, by the payment of adequate damages for lands taken without any consideration, for lands taken without adequate consideration, for Indian moneys spent without the consent of the Indians or authority of law, and for expenses of administration which have, in many instances, been charged to the Indians when it is the duty of the Government to bear the expense of the self-constituted guardianship.

Many of the citizens of the United States are not unmindful of the fact that it was an Indian nation that granted to the colonists of the Eastern States their first succor and comfort, and that in turn for this kindness and pacific attitude a treaty was entered into as early as 1682, known as the treaty that "never was sworn to and never was broken." Yet, notwithstanding these and other undisputed facts, the Indian nations, tribes, and bands, and in the last analysis, individuals, have not received their just dues, have not been accorded equitable treatment, have not received the consideration and compensation agreed upon, and have suffered untold deprivations and wrongs which should, in this age of progress and education, be righted and the Indians throughout the whole United States placed upon a basis that will insure their future independence and will insure every individual Indian a chance on an equal footing with his white neighbor.

Many letters and personal protests are being received by the brotherhood from tribe after tribe, and in order that the true situation concerning our people may be known and understood, the following facts and statements of the Indians themselves are respectfully set forth, with a view to having the Congress of the United States consider this subject in a light in which it has never before been considered, and grant to every tribe of Indians in the United States the right to have its differences adjusted and its claims presented and acted upon by the courts of the United States which were created by your honorable body.

Some of the Indian tribes of this country have been able to obtain from time to time, extending over a period of about 50 years, sufficient influence to have their claims and grievances inquired into, adjusted, and paid, but the time has come when every Indian tribe should be granted the right to have an accounting with its guardian, the United States of America, and the Congress of the United States should grant this privilege.

It is impossible in a memorial intended for the consideration of many persons to set forth generally all facts which can be presented, and it is not the intention in this memorial to do anything more than present the facts concerning a few Indian tribes, with the hope that sufficient interest may be aroused and sufficient consideration given to the subject to enable the Congress to form a general opinion regarding the necessity for the action requested.

The Shoshones, the Bannocks, the Cayuses, and the Walla Wallas, etc., have been recognized by the United States to have lands in the States of California, Oregon, Idaho, Nevada, and Utah, aggregating 71,078,400 acres of land; these lands were taken under the pretense of various treaties from 1856 to 1866, and further inroads were made on their possessions by acts of Congress and Executive orders.

Many of the treaties do not show a cession of the lands, but simply define the boundaries of the lands set apart for or belonging to these tribes and, in these treaties, the Government agreeing to pay a certain fixed sum of money per year to each tribe or band for a certain stated period of years for game lost to them; but the Government does not agree to pay them anything for the land and has never paid them anything for the land. They agree to give to the Bannocks, or each member of the tribe, 320 acres of grazing land and 160 acres of land for irrigation, and without any further agreement and act of Congress the allotments were reduced to 160 acres of grazing land and 20 acres of land suitable for irrigation. Some of the affiliated bands or tribes, parties to the ownership of these lands, have fared much better, but no uniform process of dealing with these Indians has ever been established, and no determination of the exact amount due each tribe has ever been reached. Many of the things agreed to with these Indians have never been carried out, and in some instances other Indians have been settled upon their reservations without compensation to the Indians for whose benefit the lands were finally set apart for allotment and were recognized as the owners of the land without consulting the original owners and without any compensation to them. Some method of adjusting these affairs should be adopted, so as to determine the rights of all the parties in interest.

THE BANNOCK TRIBE OF INDIANS OF FORT HALL RESERVATION IN IDAHO.

STATEMENT OF CHIEF PAT L. TYHEE.

I am chief of the Bannock Tribe of Indians and live on the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho. I was present at the treaty of Fort Bridger, 1868. There were present at that time the following men who are now alive:

Teton Bill, Jim Ballard, Logan Appana, Lincoln School Boy, Zee Dee Hop, Major George, Old Man Race Horse, Ben Anowine, William Ytzagan, Oliver Teton, Farmer Charlie, Jack Hoyt, and there are others now alive who were present at the making of this treaty. At the council the Indians told the United States commissioners the boundaries of their lands. I have given a statement of the boundaries of the lands as was explained to the commissioners. They told us that that was to be our hunting ground. The reservation was never explained to us until Maj. Reed came among us as agent. At that time he showed us the boundary of our reservation. The reservation which he showed us has been made smaller five different times. We never got any money for the land which was taken away from us except about 12 years ago, which was the last time that the reservation was cut into.

The Bannock Tribe roamed a wide stretch of territory, but the territory which I have described above is what the Bannocks owned. They were friendly with the Shoshones. The Shoshones roamed over a wide stretch, but they made no claim to the territory which I have described above. At the present time, the Pocatello Band of Shoshone and some Sheepeaters are on the Fort Hall Reservation. There has been a good deal of intermarriage between the Bannocks and the Shoshones, so that there are but few Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation at the present time who are not part Bannock and part Shoshone.

In the States where I was raised up from a little child I know the mountains and the trees and the rivers. I am 82 years old. I am one of the owners of the American soil, because my father was not a foreigner. God created the heaven and the earth and also created me. I was created here on this American soil. I don't like for the Government to give me a small portion and keep me under its supervision. I like the free use of my country like my forefathers had. Since my reservation was established they have made four treaties with me. Every time they made a treaty with me they agreed to pay me so much, and they cut my land smaller and smaller. Every time they agreed to pay me so much money they are taking my rights away from me, and now my land is so small that I can hardly make my living on it, can hardly move around. It is like being in a penitentiary. The game and the hunting privilege is gone; taken away. They have forced me to stop hunting, but I had the privilege one time of free use of the country. Since last year my reservation has gotten so small that the Government only allotted to each Indian 20 acres of irrigable land and 160 acres of grazing land; that is all I am now entitled to.

According to the old treaty I was entitled, each Indian on my reservation was entitled to more than 320 acres of land, 160 acres of grazing land and 160 acres of irrigable land, but last year they were cut down.

Before last year I used to have 140 acres under fence, but they only gave me out of the 140 acres 20 acres; that is all I am entitled to under fence. The Indians depend on the grazing land on the reservation for their domestic use of wood and also of grazing, and that is set aside for the tribal purposes, and now the Government has changed their law. They would put a dam there and flood the Fort Hall grazing lands and that hurts my feelings. Why should the Government throw that open for allotment? It belongs to the Indians for domestic use, for their hunting and wood and grazing. If they flood that land they would take the Indians' rights, almost their lives, for if they flood that land then we have no place to make a living. We live there, we depend upon it, and if they appropriate it we will have no place to keep ourselves and make a living; but if they allot that to the Indians, we will have a peaceable life, plenty of hunting of all kinds of game, plenty of all kinds of wood. I do not want this to be flooded. That is one reason why I am here to try to lay that complaint before the brotherhood. Also about the 20 acres of irrigable land. I am not satisfied with it, and the rest of the Indians are not satisfied with the 20 acres. No white man could make a living on it; no white man would take up 20 acres of land. They would not want it. I do not want the Government of the United States to compel the Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation or anywhere else outside of that reservation to take such a small piece of land. The Government should give the Indians what they are entitled to by the treaties, for we are the owners of the soil. We were here before any other people. We are not foreigners. It does not look right to us that the Government, since the American Continent was discovered, should have tried to put the Indians out of the land, tried to take their rights away from them, the game, the wood, the minerals, the oil. They should treat the Indians as well as they treat their own race of people. Nowadays the Government treats me almost like a slave. Nowadays I have to buy my own coal, buy my timber. Before the white man discovered the American Continent I had free use of all that was created on this continent. Since the white people discovered this country, they make themselves wealthy on the Indians' land. They manufacture everything here; have factories of all kinds. They ought to look after the Indians more than they do and take care of them, treat them well; not treat them like slaves. But they keep forcing and forcing the Indians farther west. I do not like to see my tribe driven farther west to the oceans.

I have a grazing fee coming from stockmen on my reservation that I have never received one cent of. It was paid to the Government. I want to get that if I can.

STATEMENT OF JACOB BROWNING, A SHOSHONE INDIAN OF THE FORT HALL RESERVATION, IDAHO.

On May 14, 1880, the chiefs and headmen of the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheepeaters agreed to surrender their reservation at Lemhi and to remove and settle upon the Fort Hall Reservation, in Idaho. The chiefs and headmen of the Shoshones and Bannocks, of Fort Hall, agreed at the same time to the settlement of the Lemhi Indians upon the Fort Hall Reservation, and also to cede to the United States certain-described territory.

The agreement in question was not ratified by Congress, but the Government took our lands and paid the Indians from the Lemhi Agency the amount agreed in article 3 of the agreement. The Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation were to receive the sum of $6,000 per annum for 20 years, "this sum to be in addition to any sums to which the above-named Indians are now entitled by treaty"; but our Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation have not received any of the money which was to be paid at the rate of $6,000 per year for 20 years. We have inquired why we did not receive this money, but have never been given any explanation. We think we should be paid for the cession of this land and that we should receive the $120,000, with interest, for the time it was agreed to be paid.

STATEMENT OF GEORGE TENDOY, SON OF CHIEF TENDOY, FORMERLY OF THE LEMHI RESERVATION, BUT NOW OF THE FORT HALL RESERVATION.

The Government told my father and our people that if we would leave the Lemhi Reservation and go to the Fort Hall Reservation they would give each of us 160 acres of irrigable land and 160 acres of grazing land on the Fort Hall Reservation. That is why we ceded our land on the Lemhi Reservation to the Government, because we thought each of us would get 320 acres on the Fort Hall Reservation.

The Government also promised us in this agreement that they would pay the expenses of moving our people from the Lemhi Reservation to the Fort Hall Reservation, and promised to provide $5,000 to be expended for this purpose. We understood this money was to be used to buy our provisions, to buy forage for our stock, and also to pay the cost of hiring teams and wagons for moving. As soon as we left the Lemhi Reservation the Government did feed us for the first day, but they did not give us any provisions after the first day and did not supply our horses with any hay at any time during the journey, but they did give us a little horse feed after we reached the Fort Hall Reservation. We do not know where this money went. It was not spent for our people. Our people were promised pay if they would assist in moving; that is, our people who had horses and who helped to move the people who did not have horses were to receive pay, just the same as if our people had been moved by white persons, but the Government never paid any of our people for this assistance in moving.

Instead of the Government keeping its promise to give us 160 acres of irrigable land and 160 acres of grazing land on the Fort Hall Reservation, they have given us only 20 acres of irrigable land and 160 acres of grazing land. This is not satisfactory to our people. We think we ought to have what the Government promised us, especially since there is plenty of land on the Fort Hall bottoms that has not been allotted and which is susceptible of irrigation and which would make us good homes. Since our people moved to the Fort Hall Reservation they have stayed there the year round and have tried to make a living upon the land which the Government gave them, but they can not do so very well, because the 20 acres of irrigable land is not enough and because the Government does not supply enough water during the growing season to water even these 20 acres of land. I myself have tried to farm my land during the past three seasons, but the crops have not done very well because I could not get enough water, because the lateral gates from the main canal are placed at such low levels that the water will not flow naturally upon our land. We thing that the supply of water should be increased and that these lateral gates should be changed to better levels, so that our people can have all of their irrigable land irrigated. If this were done we could raise better crops and have more money to spend. The Government undertook this work for us, and they should do it right.

There is no supply of fresh water, and the Government should bore or dig wells for us, so that we could have plenty of water for drinking purposes and for watering our stock. The Government moved us from our old home and wanted us to live on the Fort Hall Reservation, and we think that they should now carrry out their promises to us.

I was sent to Washington to talk these matters over with the Brotherhood of North American Indians and to ask that something be done for our people. The chiefs and headmen asked me to come here and tell these things to the Government for the benefit of our people.

Our people hope that Congress will do something for us and will authorize that the agreements made with our people shall be carried out as our people understood them.

STATEMENT OF JACOB BROWNING, A SHOSHONI INDIAN OF THE FORT HALL RESERVATION, IDAHO.

On May 14, 1880, the chiefs and headmen of the Shoshoni, Bannock, and Sheepeater Tribes agreed to surrender their reservation at Lemhie and to remove to and settle upon the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho; the chiefs and headmen of the Shoshones and Bannocks of Fort Hall agreed at the same time to the settlement of the Lemhie Indians upon the Fort Hall Reservation, and also to cede to the United States certain described territory.

The agreement in question was not ratified by Congress, but the Government took our lands and paid the Indians from the Lemhie Agency the amount agreed in article 3 of the agreement. The Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation were to receive the sum of $6,000 per annum for 20 years, "this sum to be in addition to any sums to which the above-named Indians are now entitled by treaty," but our Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation have not received any of the money which was to be paid at the rate of $6,000 per year for 20 years. We have inquired why we did not receive this money, but have never been given any explanation. We think we should be paid for the cession of these lands and that we should receive the $120,000 with interest from the time it was agreed to be paid.

On July 30, 1863, the Government made a treaty with the Northwestern Bands of the Shoshoni Indians, represented by their chiefs and warriors. That treaty was ratified, with certain amendments, March 7, 1864. While it was a treaty of peace and friendship, my people assented in that treaty to the provisions of the treaty of Fort Bridger.

Article 4 of the treaty provides that the country claimed by Pokatello, for himself and his people, is bounded on the west by Raft River and on the east by the Porteney Mountains.

Notwithstanding the provisions of this treaty, the territory claimed by Pokatello, for himself and his people, and assented to by the Government, the lands have been taken by the white people. Our people have not been paid for this land. We believe that we should be paid for this land. The Government recognizes it as our land and the treaty agreement has been violated. Either the land should be given to us that is described by article 4 of this treaty or we should be paid a fair value for the land.

October 1, 1863, a treaty was entered into between the Western Bands of the Shoshoni Nation, of which my father was a member, and the Government. This treaty was ratified June 26, 1866. Article 5 describes the boundaries of the lands, while article 6 promises that whenever the President of the United States shall deem it expedient for them he is authorized to make a reservation for their use in any part of the country described in article 5. Although this promise was made by the Government, it has never been kept by our "Great White Father." My father's people wander from place to place; some of them are on one reservation, some of them on another, while many of them live in the small towns of Wells, Elko, and Teeth, of Nevada.

I believe the Government should give my father's people a reservation, so that they can have allotments of land like my brothers have been given on the Fort Hall and other reservations. The Government should look into this and give my father's people their rights.

BANNOCK REPORTS.

REPORTS OF THE FORT HALL INDIANS.

We, Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation, are being allotted by the Government.

Mr. Sams is the acting agent, at which he is working right to-day. Mr. Sams has almost completed his work, but the result is that Mr. Sams forbids any Indians to take any choice of the bottoms land, of which the majority of the Indians depend on for hay for the cattle and horses during the winter; and what is the reason that Mr. Sams would not allot the land to the Indians? The bottoms must belong to him, he seems to have so much to say about the bottoms. The Indians all want to hold onto that part of the land; they don't want to give it up.

About the allotment—the Indians are not satisfied with the 20 acres. We want to get and have the same rights as the white men have. The 80 acres would be more satisfactory than the 20 acres. I know for myself the white man has no 20 acres for a farm. Some have 360 acres. We were the first ones who owned the land, and why shouldn't we have our rights about our land?

THE WATER RIGHTS IN CHESTERFIELD.

The water that the white people are now damming comes from or on the reservation, and that is the Indian's water. There are also 22 Indians who had land allotted off the reservation here a few years ago who are not getting any water also; and also the spring or head of the stream is on the reservation. It looks to me that the Indians have just as much right as the white men, and more, because the water belonged to the Indians at first; but that is no reason for the white people to shut the water off from the Indians.

Mr. Tom La Vatta is in the same condition—no water—it is also taken from him. Mr. Tom Tipson is also in the same condition, and also the Bannock Creek Indians; their waters are taken from them.

PUBLIC ROADS.

The white people build a road over the reservation, the width being 100 feet all the way, and we do not know anything about that. An accident happened last fall, and we do not know anything about the accident. I know that if the white men got killed anywhere they would look into the matter very close and deep.

CATTLEMEN.

Mr. Evans is one of the cattlemen that is now on the reservation. We Indians all forbid the cattlemen off the reservation from now on. We do not want any more on there. We haven't got any money for their cattle grazing on our land, and also they killed one woman and man since they have been on our land. There are also two churches on our reservation, and we don't know anything about one church there on the reservation; one we do know something about. About the other one, the Indians are going to more often, and the other is making more trouble than good.

There are also many small boys attending that school, and the boys are too small to work on the farm, but still the men work too hard for the small boys from morning until night and at hard and heavy work. There have been two boys crippled this fall—had their legs broken by moving a barn.

CANAL.

Five years ago there has been a canal built through our reservation, and I think that that canal was built for the benefit of the Indians. Instead we getting our share of the water it goes on to Pocatello for the white people, and why is that done? We don't get hardly any water at all. This is all of our report, I think.

Mr. PAT. L. TYHEE.

SISSETON AND WAHPETON BANDS OF SIOUX INDIANS.

TO WHAT EXTENT HAS THE UNITED STATES PROFITED IN THE VARIOUS TRANSACTIONS WITH THESE INDIANS?

Now, let us see to what extent the Government has profited in its various transactions with these Indians, taking $1.25 per acre, the minimum price of public lands, as a basis of calculation.

TREATY OF 1851.

As has been seen, these Indians, by the treaty of 1851, ceded to the United States over 32,000,000 acres of land, and that the only consideration ever received by them for this vast domain was the $305,000 paid out under the treaty. It has been shown that $250,000 of that $305,000 was paid by an agent of the United States to one Hugh Tyler, a stranger in the country, in violation of the terms of the treaty and the act of Congress making the appropriation as well. The 32,000,000 acres ceded at $1.25 per acre amounts to $40,000,000, and if the Indians are to be charged with the whole of that sum we find a net profit in this transaction, but if the $250,000 wrongfully paid to Hugh Tyler be not charged, then the profit to the Government would be $39,945,000.

In this connection we desire again to invite attention to the fact that under the treaty of 1851 the United States took this 32,000,000 acres of land and at the end of 50 years took the consideration agreed in the treaty to be paid therefor, and that all the Indians ever received for this vast domain was nine and seventeen thirty-seconds of a mill per acre, which, as stated by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, was "a great and monstrous wrong without parallel in the history of any civilized Government, and for which, by every reason of justice and fair dealing, full reparation should be made." (S. Rept. No. 1441, 55th Cong., 3d sess., p. 6.)

LANDS ON THE NORTH SIDE OF THE MINNESOTA RIVER.

It will be remembered that the Senate, by resolution of June 27, 1860, fixed the price of the lands of these Indians lying on the north side of the Minnesota River at 30 cents per acre. It was ascertained that said lands contained an area of 569,600 acres, which, at the price fixed by the said resolution, amounts to $170,880. These lands at $1.25 per acre amount to the sum of $712,000, and by deducting therefrom the $170,880 we find the profits to the Government in this transaction to be $541,120.

LANDS WHICH SHOULD HAVE BEEN SET APART FOR THESE INDIANS AS DIRECTED BY THE ACT OF MARCH 3, 1863.

As has been seen, that act of 1863, in the most positive terms, directed the President to set apart for these Indians 80 acres of good agricultural land for each member of these bands, which, at that time, as found by Chief Justice Nott of the Court of Claims, numbered 4,524, and the area of lands which should have been set apart for them is 361,920 acres, and which, at $1.25 per acre, amounts to $452,400.

TREATY OF 1867.

In order to carry out the agreement of the United States contained in article 6 of the treaty of 1867, to place these Indians in an agricultural position, such as they occupied prior to the outbreak of 1862, as specified to be the object and purpose of said article 6, Congress, at various times, appropriated the aggregate sum of $464,953.40, and said sum was wrongfully charged by the court against the annuities provided for by the treaty of 1851, in direct violation of said sixth article of the treaty of 1867, and also in strict violation of section 2097 of the United States Revised Statutes.

DAMAGES.

As has been seen, Congress, by the act of 1863, charged $100,000 as damages against the annuities of these Indians. The court charged the additional sum of $586,328.96 against the annuities of these Indians on account of damages resulting from the outbreak of 1862, without authority of law and in direct violation of the positive and explicit terms of sections 2097 and 2098 of the United States Revised Statutes, and besides these people committed no damage, being loyal throughout said outbreak.

SUBSISTENCE.

The sum of $200,000 wrongfully and illegally charged against the annuities of these Indians.

AGREEMENT OF 1872.

The total area, as has been seen, of the country ceded by the agreement of 1872 is 9,149,422.12 acres, which, at $1.25 per acre, amounts to the sum of $11,436,777.65, and by deducting the $800,000 paid the Indians under said agreement, we find a balance in favor of the Government of $10,636,777.65.

RECAPITULATION.

Treaty of 1851	$39,945,000.00
Lands on north side of Minnesota River	529,870.00
Lands not set apart under act of 1863	452,400.00
Article 6, treaty of 1867	464,953.40
Damages	586,328.96
Charged for subsistence	200,000.00
Lands ceded by the agreement of 1872	10,636,777.00
Total	52,815,330.01

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Article 9 of the treaty of June 5 and 17, 1846 (9 Stat. L., 853), it was agreed that the buildings occupied as a missionary establishment, including 20 acres of land now under fence, shall be reserved for the use of the Government agency; also the houses used for the blacksmith house and shop shall be reserved for the Pottawatomie's smith, but should the property cease to be used for the above-mentioned purposes, it shall revert to the use of the Pottawatomie Nation.

Under the terms of the act of April 6, 1954 (10 Stat. L., 270), for the relief and benefit of Council Bluffs, Iowa, Franklin Street, county judge of Pottawatomie County, Iowa, on the 10th day of May, 1854, entered the tracts designated in said act, one of which tracts is the west half of the southwest quarter of section 30, township 75, north of range 43 west, which tract embraces the 20-acre tract reserved by the treaty. Said tract having been diverted for purposes other than specified by said treaty of the same reverted to the use of the Pottawatomie Nation, but said nation has never had the use thereof, because, under the authority of an act of Congress, it is embraced within the city of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The said tract by reason of it being within the said city is very valuable, and the United States, having diverted it from the use specified in the treaty, is responsible to the Indians for the value thereof.

The Citizen Band of Pottawatomies of Oklahoma and Kansas allege that the United States Government owes them large sums of money for lands which were ceded to the Government under various treaties. This money, these Indians allege, in many instances, was wrongfully withheld, and also that the Government never fulfilled the stipulations of many of the treaties made with those Indians as fully as it should have done. A comprehensive history of their claims and the various treaties, dating from 1789 to 1890, will be made later.

The Citizen Pottawatomie Indians came to Oklahoma in 1871 and settled on a reservation 30 square miles in extent, which land was bought from the Government in 1867. The lands of the Citizen Pottawatomie Indians are now allotted. They are reasonably industrious and progressive, but most of them are poor. They now ask Congress, in the name of justice, that some relief be accorded them in the departments, Congress, and the courts, as the circumstances will allow.

ASSINNIBOINE INDIANS.

By the treaty of September 17, 1851, known as the treaty of Fort Laramie (Revision of Indian Treaties, 1047), which treaty the Court of Claims has decided is binding upon all parties thereto (45 Ct. Cls., 177), a large tract of country containing several millions of acres of land was recognized as belonging to the Assinniboine Indians. This tract of country has been taken from these Indians without their consent and without compensation to them therefor. Some provision of law should be enacted whereby these Indians who believe they have been deprived of their lands without their consent and without compensation may be enrolled to receive their just dues.

BLACKFEET NATION OF INDIANS.

By the treaty of September 17, 1851, known as the treaty of Fort Laramie (Revision of Indian Treaties, 1047), certain territory as therein described was recognized as belonging to the Blackfeet Nation of Indians. (Nos. 398 and 399, maps of Montana, 1, and Wyoming, 1, Indian Land Cessions in the United States, Royce.)

By the treaty of October 17, 1855 (11 Stat. L., 657), certain territory, as therein described, was recognized as belonging to the Blackfeet Nation of Indians, to which other territory on the east was added by the act of April 15, 1874 (11 Stat. L., 28). (Nos. 399, 565, and 574, Montana, 1, Royce.)

By the same treaty the Blackfeet Nation of Indians agreed that certain territory therein described, which was assigned them by the treaty of Fort Laramie, should be a common hunting ground for 99 years. (No. 398 Montana, 1, and Wyoming, 1, Royce.)

By agreements of 1888 (25 Stat. L., 113) the Blackfeet Nation of Indians ceded to the United States all the lands set apart for them by the treaty of 1855 and added thereto by the act of 1874, except certain small reservations No. 693, 694, and 695, on Royce's maps of Indian land cessions. (Montana, 2.)

But the Blackfeet Nation of Indians have never ceded or relinquished their title to the lands agreed to be set apart as common hunting grounds by the treaty of 1855 (Nos. 398 Montana, 1, and Wyoming, 1, Royce), about two and a half million acres of which is now embraced in the Yellowstone National Park. The balance of the land has been opened to settlement.

MEMORANDUM, FORT BERTHOLD INDIANS, FORT LARAMIE, OF 1851.

From time immemorial the Sioux, the Cheyennes, the Crows, the Assiniboins, the Gros Ventres, Mandans, and Arickaras owned and occupied a vast region of country in what is now the States of Montana, North and South Dakota, Wyoming, and Colorado.

The fact that the boundaries of the lands owned and occupied by these several tribes were not clearly defined caused much trouble and contention among the several tribes, and in order to reach a satisfactory adjustment thereof the President appointed a commission consisting of D. D. Mitchell, superintendent of Indian affairs, and Thomas Fitzgerald, United States Indian agent, to meet the various tribes in council with the view of determining and fixing the boundaries of the lands belonging to each tribe. The commission met the several bands in a general council, held at Fort Laramie, which resulted in the treaty of September 17, 1851, known as the "Treaty of Fort Laramie" (Revision of Indian Treaties, 1047), by the terms of which the lands recognized as belonging to the respective tribes were definitely fixed by proper and accurate description.

That treaty was ratified by the Senate February 24, 1852, with an amendment of section 7 as to the payment of certain moneys, which amendment was accepted by the Sioux, the Assiniboins, the Gros Ventres, the Mandans, and the Arickaras (Laws relating to Indian affairs, 1884, pp. 317–322), but the treaty has never been proclaimed. The Court of Claims has decided that the treaty is binding on all parties thereto. (45 Ct. Cls., 177.)

The lands belonging to the Gros Ventres, Mandans, and Arickaras, as recognized and defined by that treaty are fully described therein, and contain an area of about 13,142,560 acres. These lands so recognized as belonging to the several tribes of Indians remained in that condition until the year 1870, when, by Executive order dated April 12 of that year, certain portions of the lands so recognized as belonging to said Indians by the treaty of 1851 were set apart as a reservation for them, the area thereof being about 8,320,000 acres and being about 4,822,560 acres less than the area of the lands described in the treaty of 1851, which latter lands the Indians were illegally deprived of without their consent and without consideration, and which lands have never been restored to the public domain by Executive order, treaty, or act of Congress. This situation remained unchanged until 1880, when, on the 13th day of July of that year, an Executive order was issued restoring to the public domain all the lands described in the Executive order of April 12, 1870, except about 1,500,000 acres and a tract of land not included within the boundaries of the land described in the treaty of 1851 but lying north thereof and containing about 1,412,000 acres, which was added thereto, the two tracts containing a total area of about 2,912,000 acres.

The evident purpose of the Executive order of 1880 was to restore these lands to the public domain to the end that the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. might obtain title to the odd sections falling within the grant to that company, the Indian title to which the Government obligated itself to extinguish by section 2 of the act of July 2, 1864, incorporating said company (13 Stat. L., 367). That this was the object of the Executive order is clearly shown by the description of the lands restored by the order, which order recites: "Beginning at a point where the northern 40-mile limit of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad intersects the present boundary of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation; thence westerly along the line of said 40-mile limit to its intersection with the range line between ranges 92 and 93," and so forth.

Whatever the purpose had in view in restoring these lands to the public domain, the fact remains that they were illegally restored without the consent of said Indians and without consideration passing to them, and that such restoration did not extinguish the Indian title thereto.

The area of the land set apart by the Executive order of April 12, 1870, is 8,350,000 acres (Indian Office Report 1876, p. 226), and by deducting therefrom the 1,500,000 acres retained by the Executive order of July 13, 1880, we find that the order illegally restored to the public domain 6,820,000 acres of the lands described in and acknowledged to belong to these Indians by the treaty of 1851. By adding thereto the 4,822,560 acres of land described by treaty of Fort Laramie, which was not included in the Executive order of 1870, we find the total to be 11,642,560 acres, and by deducting therefrom the 1,412,000 acres lying north of the Missouri River and north of the lands described in the treaty which were added to the reservation by Executive order of July 13, 1880, there still remains 10,330,560 acres, which these Indians have been illegally deprived of without their consent and without consideration passing to them. As before stated, these Executive orders did not extinguish the title of the Indians to these lands.

This brings us to the consideration of the agreement with these Indians of December 14, 1886, ratified by act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 989).

As has been seen, the reservation of these Indians at that time, after the illegal acts of the Government restoring certain portions of their lands to the public domain, contained an area of 2,912,000 acres. By that agreement these Indians ceded a portion of their diminished reservation to the United States, estimated to contain an area of 1,600,000 acres (Indian Office Report 1887, p. 29), and the diminished reservation thereby established contains an area of 965,120 acres. By deducting that from the area of the diminished reservation of 2,912,000 acres, it will be seen that the country ceded by said agreement contains an area of 1,946,880 acres, being 346,880 acres in excess of the estimated area contained in the cession.

In consideration of the lands ceded, the agreement provides for payment to these Indians of 10 annual installments of $80,000, aggregating $800,000, being at the rate of 50 cents per acre for the estimated area contained in the cession (1,600,000 acres).

The twenty-fifth section of the act of March 3, 1891, ratifying the agreement with these Indians provides that when the lands thereby ceded shall, by operation of law or by proclamation of the President of the United States, be opened to settlement, they shall be disposed of to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws, and each settler shall pay, in addition to the fees required by law, the sum of $1.50 per acre. (President's proclamation, May 30, 1891, 27 Stat. L., 979.)

As has been seen, the ceded country contains an area of 1,946,880 acres, which at $1.50 per acre, the price fixed by the act of March 3, 1891, amounts to $2,920,320, and by deducting therefrom the $800,000 provided for by the agreement of 1886, it will be seen that the Government got the best of the Indians in this transaction to the extent of $2,120,320, besides the 346,880 acres in excess of the estimated area of the cession, at $1.50 per acre, amounting to $520,320, the total advantage to the Government in this transaction being $2,640,640—that is, the guardian got the better of the ward to that extent, measured in dollars and cents.

MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA BANDS OF SIOUX INDIANS, OTHERWISE KNOWN AS THE SANTEE SIOUX INDIANS.

By the treaty of August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., 954), the United States agreed to pay said Indians $1,410,000, out of which sum certain payments were to be made, as therein specified, leaving a balance of $1,160,000, which was to remain in trust with the United States, at 5 per cent interest paid thereon annually for the period of 50 years, commencing July 1, 1852. The third article of said treaty setting apart a reservation for said Indians was stricken out by the Senate in the ratification of said treaty, and by the amendment thereto the United States agreed to pay said Indians at the rate of 10 cents per acre for the land embraced in the reservation provided for by that article, the amount, when ascertained, to be added to the trust fund. It was ascertained that said reservation contained 690,000 acres and at 10 cents per acre amounted to $69,000, which being added to the trust fund makes a total of $1,229,000, yielding an annual interest of $61,450.

The ignorance of the Indians was taken advantage of and a clause inserted in the treaty of 1851 that interest on the principal sum for 50 years should be in full payment of both principal and interest, so that as a matter of fact the Indians never received a penny for the lands ceded by the treaty of 1851.

Of the $220,000 agreed by the treaty of 1851 to be paid to the chiefs, the sum of $70,000 was paid by an agent of the United States, one Hugh Tyler, a stranger in the country. (See S. Ex. Doc. No. 61, 33d Cong., 1st sess.)

Under date of April 29, 1868, the United States entered into a treaty with various bands of Sioux Indians, among them the Santee Sioux (15 Stat. L., 635), by article 2 of which a reservation was established for the several bands, parties to said treaty, as therein described and bounded, and which treaty was proclaimed February 24, 1869. Immediately upon the ratification and proclamation of said treaty the several bands, parties thereto, became vested with an undivided interest in and to the lands within the said reservation so established.

By the act of Congress of March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes" (26 Stat. L., 888), the several bands, parties to the treaty of 1868, were given separate reservations out of the lands set apart as a reservation by said treaty, except the Santee Sioux, and by the terms of said act the Santee Sioux were deprived of their vested rights under the said treaty of 1868. The said act of 1889 is unjust, arbitrary, and unconscionable, and, besides, wholly unconstitutional, in that it deprives the Santee Sioux of their property without compensation and without due process of law.

COLVILLE TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The Colville Indian agent made the announcement that the Indians under his agency who had intrusted him with the care of their Government money would all be paid between the months of May and June, 1911. It was understood by all that each individual Indian having an allotment on the Colville Reservation was entitled to $500 at the first payment.

The date came and has passed almost one year, and the actual number of Indians who got their first payment is estimated at one-third of the total number, and these were mostly from among those that really did not need the money as bad as other poor, unfortunate, and uneducated Indians. Some received all the way from $10 to $500 in partial payments. Many were compelled to buy articles under the supervision of the Indian farmer in order to secure the benefit of their money. The remaining two-thirds have not received a cent, and it begins to look as though they never will get it, for the agent pays no heed to their applications whatsoever.

Upon the request of the Indians to the agent for their money, the agent promises to send their application to Washington, D. C., to get the authority to pay the money, and the Indians have been waiting for six months, and these applications have never returned.

The agent makes the excuse that the Indians are not capable of taking care of the money, or they may spend it for liquor, and many are not paid because the agent claims they are not on the roll, which is not true, because if they are entitled to an allotment they must be on the roll.

There has been a treaty made between the Colville Indians and the Nez Perce and the Umatilla Indians, and the understanding was that all the children of the latter two tribes could be allotted on the Colville Reservation, but that is all they would be entitled to. It was definitely understood that they would not receive any of the money due the Colville Indians. These two tribes, the Nez Perce and the Umatilla, have already sold their lands and have long been paid their money and already disposed of it, so they need not expect any money from the Colville's Government money.

The treaty for the Colville Indian money was made in 1892 and many of the old Indians who helped make this treaty have died without receiving any of their money. Now the authorities claim that the heirs of these deceased Indians are not entitled to their money. The statement is made that the deceased people's money is divided among the several Indians, yet we find that our payments never are increased when there is a death, which goes to show that this money must be taken by some one who is posing as a friend to the Indians and who is robbing them at every opportunity.

The agent of the Colville Indians has openly refused to allow native-born Colville Indians any allotments on our reservation. There is a case of one family who asked to be allotted, and they were refused. The Colville Indians are willing that they should have allotments and they are willing that they shall be entitled to their proportionate share of the Colville Government money.

JAMES BARNARD, CHIEF OF THE COLVILLES.

One thing I am sorry about. Some time ago the Indians in the northern country made a treaty and the whites divided my reservation—cut it in two.

Here is another treaty that was made in early times: There is a strip of land about 6 miles wide running down to what is called the Spokane River. The Government made a treaty for this 6-mile strip and the money was never paid. In those days the old-time chiefs did not have any education and had not learned the ways of the Government, so when the treaty expired they did not make any move to renew the treaty. The people who made the treaty are all gone; have all died out. The treaty was made in 1891 for one part of our reservation for one and one-half million dollars. Shortly after the treaty was made some lawyers came in there and signed a kind of a contract for the collection of the money, and after they got the contract signed the lawyers brought the papers into Washington. It was never known whether the papers were destroyed, or what was done with them, or whether they are now in the Indian Office here. The Government never said anything about it. Maj. Anderson was one of the lawyers. About three years ago I went into Spokane and saw a lawyer by the name of Peacock; got him to write a letter to Senator JONES inquiring with regard to the money. I got an answer from Senator JONES that the money had already been sent out there and told me that within 10 days he would write me another letter. I got a second letter, telling me that the money was in the Indian Department. After finding out where the money was I inquired of the Indian Department about the money. Senator JONES went to the Indian Department and asked, "Why do you not send this money to the Indians?"

The Indian Department told Senator JONES that the Indian agent, Webster, was working hard in taking the census, and as soon as he got through with the taking of the census of all of the Indians they would get the report from him; that they were waiting for his report. And we have never seen Webster for the last six or seven years. The report was that he was among the Indians taking the census, but he never showed up.

Last year I wrote to Senator JONES again and asked him about the Indian money, and he said I would receive the first payment the 1st of next March. They started in paying off some of the Indians last June, and there are only about one-third of the Indians who got anything—some of them about $500, some $150, and some $10 and $15, and so on—and that is the way the Indian has been paid off since they started in to pay, and only one-third of the Indians have been paid anything within that time. We asked the Indian agent how many Indians were entitled to that money, and he never told us how many there were. Many times we have asked the agent how many Indians are entitled to payment, and he says from 1,500 to 2,000, sometimes 3,000, or something like that; he never told us just exactly how many.

I asked an Indian farmer, How much interest is all this money drawing? The Indian farmer tells all the Indians it is drawing from 1½ to 2½ and 4 per cent interest in the national banks. I can not understand what he means about the interest on the money.

WHITE OAK POINT BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MISSISSIPPI RESIDING IN MINNESOTA.

The act of January 14, 1889, provides the President is thereby authorized and directed to designate and appoint a commissioner for the purpose of negotiating with all the different bands or tribes of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota for the complete cession and relinquishment in writing of all their title and interest in and to all the reservations of said Indians in the State of Minnesota except the White Earth and Red Lake Reservations, and to all and so much of these two reservations as in the judgment of said commission is desirable. The commissioners exceeded their authority under the act by making more promises than required of them under the act, in order to secure the assent of the Indians to the act, trusting that the Government would fulfill those promises, which promises the Government has utterly failed to fulfill. The act provides for the completion of the allotments before the lands are to be opened to settlement. The total number of White Oak Point Chippewas of the Mississippi remaining unallotted, including children born since 1900, is 173. There are 34 adults unallotted. Notwithstanding the fact that many Indians have not been allotted, the Government closes business with this band of Chippewas of the Mississippi who were allotted in severalty under the law upon the Chippewa Reservation, the so-called "Minnesota National Forest," and few were allotted on the White Oak Point Reservation.

About three years ago Congress created what is called the "Minnesota National Forest" out of this Chippewa Reservation, and the Indians are not allowed to cut any wood, even the dead and down timber, for firewood without permission from the rangers, and even on their allotments they are not allowed to cut timber; they have to get permission to cut hay on the hay lands, but the forestry people lease the hay lands and cut and sell green wood that they do not allow the Indians to cut and sell. In the event that House bill 22590, a bill for the civilization and relief of the White Oak Point Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, and for other purposes, introduced March 29, 1912, by Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH, does not become a law, the delegation of the White Oak Point Band who are now in the city of Washington representing their band protest against opening any more of their lands either outside or inside of the forest reserve, and the Indians shall not accept pay for these lands from the Government so long as they are to be disposed of contrary to the treaty. This band of Indians demand the same rights as the White Earth Chippewas of the Mississippi, for the simple reason that they belong to the same tribal band and are under the same treaties, and no discrimination whatsoever should be permitted or be made.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS, LA POINTE BAND, BAD RIVER RESERVATION, WIS.

STATEMENT SUBMITTED TO BOARD OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS BY A. DENOMIE, APRIL 15, 1912.

With a request that the board forward it to the proper officials, Mr. Denomie left a statement which, in substance, is as follows:

Concerning himself, Mr. Denomie says that he is a member of the La Pointe Band of Chippewa Indians residing at Odanah, Wis., being a citizen, and that he, his wife, and three children have allotments; that in spite of his limited education he was elected successively constable, justice of the peace, and town treasurer of the town of La Pointe, overseer of highways of Mayfield, and assessor in the town of Washburn; that he was twice chosen by an Indian council a member of a committee on heirship, in which capacity he served until the agent appointed another committee to displace that chosen by the Indians and later expelled Mr. Denomie with trumped-up unsustained charges from the reservation on charges which were later changed to "talking too much"; that he (Mr. Denomie) has considerable expert knowledge of timber matters and of mining, having done much important work in both lines.

Mr. Denomie asks the Graham committee either to send two of its members to the La Pointe or Bad River Reservation and investigate conditions there, thus securing for themselves the facts and truth as they exist, or else subpœna five or six members to come here and give testimony, whose names he says he can furnish any time desired, including himself.

Against the Stearns Lumber Co., operating under contract on the La Pointe Agency, he brings charges of illegal operations under the following heads:

1. The cutting of timber not contracted.
2. Allowing fires, set under permit that they claim to have, to spread beyond proper confines, scorching sound timber, rendering it liable to be cut, destroying timber not in contract by fire.
3. The construction or contemplated construction of dams which would endanger by inundation and eventually destroy much sound timber.
4. Failure to promptly execute contracts by cutting and removing green timber; allowing its depreciation in value by reason of fire and other causes, resulting in loss to the Indian owners.
5. Failure to give an accounting to Indian owners for the cutting of scorched timber not in existing contracts.
6. Engaging in open violation of a pledge made to the Indians in various mercantile activities, including the sale of dry goods, clothing, milliinery, groceries, grain, tobacco, drugs, and wagons, and maintaining a coupon system which restrains free trade.
7. Preferring to cut unaccounted timber to the Indian owner, thus deferring the cutting of contracted, accountable timber, to the loss of the owner.

Against the local management of the La Pointe Agency, Mr. Denomie charges:

1. That in the past there has been conspicuous persecution of intelligent Indians who, in the interest of themselves and less able members of the tribe, have remonstrated against local conditions.
2. That Indians with inherent rights have been discriminated against in favor of Indians without rights on the reservation.
3. That the Indians right to participate in their own affairs through their tribal councils has been disregarded.
4. That the Stearns Lumber Co. have been condoned in the illegal operations before charged.

Against the Indian Office Mr. Denomie charges:

1. The sending of incompetent officials who largely ignore the progressive Indians and give undue credence to statements of those of the ignorant class, and who render reports favorable to the lumber interests of those now operating.
2. Neglect of complaints made by Indians.
3. Whisky fighting only pretentious; is a farce and misleading. The men handling such have been protected and guarded by officials.

I have carefully read the foregoing statement, which I submitted to the officer of the Board of Indian Commissioners as therein stated, in the belief that the charges therein can be substantiated before any body competent to investigate them.

In addition to what I said here the other day, I desire to further express to my fellow brothers my feelings and views on this work for unity whereby we may win. With the aid and by uniting our forces with our sympathizing white brethren there is nothing impossible. If we only find and follow the right way it is possible that we may regain our lost reigning powers of this our glorious country.

We have the larger proportion of the population on our side, but helpless as we, in their fight against the Money Trusts, whose powers seem to control our very Government officials whose appointment they cause for their use. I mean outside of those money-crazed monopolists the common people, in general, have a friendly feeling toward us and our cause, and by uniting our forces with them there is a possibility of overthrowing the money oligarchy and regaining that which our forefathers in their ignorance have lost, the inheritance of their children.

Right is might. Our oppressors—the money powers—are in the wrong, wrong—in error. Error is evil belonging to the so-called devil. Evil can not prevail but must perish. Only good, which is God, is real, eternal, and indestructible. Error is unreal, therefore is temporal and mortal. We have a just and right cause. We are on the good, God side, therefore the real and indestructible, immortal, the side that can not be defeated. Discovering these facts is winning half the battle and will prevent permanent defeat.

As I said, we have friends even in our enemies' camp with whom we must unite, besides using the educational forces of our young men who have reached the age of enlightenment. I say besides them we must work in unity and concentrate our action on them. First, we must find out who are our friends. They are the common people who suffer as we. Second, we must not forget to watch out for those who make glaring offers of full dinner pails, but which really means empty instead of full.

From boyhood I have heard the old claiming they never sold the land of their children to the United States. A few days ago I happened to meet a man who claimed to be a Government official and who was very intimate, telling me confidentially, without my having asked him, that as a Government official he had opportunity to search the records showing whether the Indians of my country had ever sold their territory and was unable to find any such record that would be in any way binding.

So, my fellow brothers, it has been the custom of the Government in dealing with the Indian people to select the ignorant, uneducated ones who do not realize the value of things in question. This happened in our reservation recently, when the ignorant were selected to go out and condemn lands by subdivision; lands whose timber should be cut by the lumber company. Men who did not know what township they stood on, to say nothing about the sections or its subdivisions, were selected for the work by the agent. So it has been the custom in dealing with matters of untold wealth.

Another wrong is this giving authority to the Secretary of the Interior to use his judgment in important matters without consulting the Indian owners or securing their consent. These are the causes that bring to us our present troubles.

Now, my fellow brothers, I want to advise this, that the greater part of us being incapable by insufficient education to cope with the white man in attending to our business matters. I want to ask you and advise you, for the future welfare of your children's children, to trust more to your educated members to handle your tribal matters as well as personal matters, and to seek to secure for your children the best education possible in good, unhampered, Government schools.

Now, my fellow brethren, while I do not consider it at this time to be advisable to speak about anything in the nature of politics, I desire, however, to say this much, having failed to see any attempt made on the part of our present administration to uncover the facts in our present deplorable condition with the view of adjustment, I say having failed to see any move toward this end, I for one have totally lost my confidence in this present administration for any right treatment, therefore I am in favor of a change of administration before I can look for betterment. I am not for Harmon, but for a Bryan Democratic President. CHAMP CLARK, our next President, is my choice. To him I look for the betterment of the present deplorable, oppressive conditions of the common—consuming—people as well as our own people. For him I shall cast my vote, and for him I have caused a paper to be started called the Odanah Star, of Wisconsin.

NAVAJO INDIANS.

Certain appropriations were made to carry out the treaty of June 1, 1868, with the Navajo Indians (15 Stat. L., 667), of which the sum of $156,651.74 was covered back into the Treasury. A full history of this transaction may be found printed in the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1882, pages 68 and 69.

THE QUINAIELT TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Under the treaty of July 1, 1866, the Quinaielt Tribe of Indians was recognized as being the owner of a large tract of land, which is shown in the eighteenth annual report of the Bureau of American Ethnology, otherwise known as Royce's Land Cessions, plat 60, map of Washington, by No. 371.

The following extracts are taken from the report:

"July 1, 1856. January 25, Queniult River and Olympia, Washington Territory, Statutes at Large, XII, 971, Qui-nai-elt and Quilleh-ute. Cede tract within the following boundaries: Commencing at a point on the Pacific coast, which is the southwest corner of the lands lately ceded by the Makah Tribe to the United States, running thence easterly with and along the southern boundary of said Makah Tribe to the middle of the Coast Range of mountains, thence southerly with said range of mountains to their intersection with the dividing ridge between the Chehalis and Queniult Rivers; thence westerly with said ridge to the Pacific coast; thence northerly along said coast to the place of beginning.

"Reserve a tract or tracts to be selected for them by the President.

"Queniult Reserve set apart by Executive order of November 4, 1873, extending the boundaries of the original reserve. The extension is shown on Washington map No. 2."

THE NEZ PERCE TRIBE OF INDIANS OF IDAHO.

Reference to their claims are fully set forth in Senate Document No. 97, Sixty-second Congress, first session.

STATEMENTS OF YELLOW BULL AND ALEXANDER MORRIS, NEZ PERCE INDIANS OF IDAHO.

About a year ago, in 1911, few young men made new regulations concerning the funeral, remains, or body. To hold the remains from 4 to 10 days. Heretofore our bodies were usually buried when the relatives and ministers thought was the right time, or as soon as they are ready to bury the body.

The new regulations seem not to be favored by the majority of the Indians. We respect our bodies, and should put them away when ready.

Unless accident happens to the body, or found, or where a journey may have to be taken, where examination is necessary. Otherwise the new regulation is not favored by Indians. These young men are in connection with the undertakers living near the Indians. It does not seem necessary to hold the body where a person dies from sickness. The furniture stores, where coffins, etc., are sold, are the people who took hand in this regulation. The same men ask for pay aside from coffin, in advance, that they will sell coffins, etc. We must hold the body back until they send a doctor. They do not notify the doctor until they are ready, and the doctor also waits for words from them.

Now, that seems unjust to the Indians. We ask to adjust this new regulation. Our old way seems better.

STATEMENT OF CHIEF BLACK WOLF, KLICKITAT INDIAN, OF KAN-A-POO, WASH.

I come here to Washington for the first time and when I saw, for the first time, the beautiful Union Station, the Capitol of the United States, the White House, and all of the fine buildings in Washington, I thought this was all very fine. Then I wondered how they did all these things, where they got all of the money to pay for it. It seems to me that the source from which this money came was the lands which were the birthright of our people, the mineral wealth which made them their money, the timber and the streams were also our birthright. The cities, the railroads, and the great improvements of this country were made from the wealth that belonged to our people, but the officials of this country are not satisfied with that; they are now trying to tax us and make us pay a certain interest for the support of these things out of the little that we have left. Do you think this is right? Would it be more just that a revenue be paid to us for the wealth and the privileges that the people who come to this country from another continent receive than to make us contribute to help them further along. I notice that the white men are very exacting in getting everything that is promised to them, or that they can claim under a contract, but had they been as honest with us in paying everything they agreed to pay under treaties and contracts, it does not seem to me that they would have neglected our people and repudiated their contracts where the consideration was coming to us instead of to them. Do you think this is right? Do you think that all of the people understand these things, or is it only a few men who are doing us this great injustice? If it is only a few men, then we must find out who those few are and try and assist in getting honest and just men to administer the affairs of state, especially the affairs in which we are the most interested.

It seems to me that if the other people, the white people, understand the situation as it really is, they would change their attitude toward the Indians; they would assist us in getting our rights, our justice, and treat us on the same equality with them, giving us liberty and justice equal to all citizens of this country, and not try to keep us suppressed and downtrodden as has been the practice ever since my recollection. If we had the encouragement that we should have, if we had the opportunity that we should have, if we were granted rights with other people, if we had the privilege of ascertaining our rights, we would be in a different condition from what we are to-day.

BLACK WOLF KAN-A-POO, COLUMBIA INDIAN.

It made me feel glad to hear the good tidings which came to us from the East when my brother Saluskin and the others came back from Washington. It seems to me that this Brotherhood of North American Indians is like a mother, and that mother is going to help us all—help all the Indians on this North American Continent. Then take it from the father's side. The father has helped every class of people, every nation on the face of the earth. We should follow the rules that have been made to control the whole world. So I said to myself, "I will go there and see what the brotherhood is and see just what kind of a man he is to establish such a thing as this Brotherhood of North American Indians.

It seems to me that the race of Indians has been renewed again—that it has been given new life. New laws have been made for the Indians. The Government ought not to have laws just for the white people and hide the good things from the Indians. This Continent of North America gives a chance for every one to live, a chance for everybody to get wealthy. Looking around and seeing the large buildings all around us, what does it stand for? It stands for the Government of the United States, which is governing all the nations in the Union, which is, I call it, a wise and powerful Government. The Government as it stands to-day is keeping the wealth and the property that is taken out of this country for others and not giving us a chance to get any of it at all. We Indians are dying out, without anything in our pocket, poor, without anything in our homes. Dear brothers, this is the thought that was in my mind, and I thought I would mention it to you. That is all I want to say about that, but I want to say a few more words.

I have 287 Indians in my tribe, and I am representing that many Indians. We want all the allotted land along the Columbia River. I was told when they made those allotments for the Indians along the Columbia River that the laws had come from Washington, D. C. After the land was improved by the Indians there came a white man, and he fenced one-half of the allotments that was made to us. He did that to many of the Indians in my tribe. I went to headquarters, the agency, but they never gave me any help at all. The sheep herders brought their sheep and herded them right in our allotments, which was fenced and improved and crops growing up, and they never paid any attention to us at all; but before the allotments were made they told us that after the allotments were made in our names that we were to keep it and nobody would have any right to invade or do anything on our allotment. Any crop that we wanted to raise it would be ours, and we would get a little money for whatever we raised there.

Then the railroad came through, and they never paid us anything for the land when they cut through our allotments. Stock has been killed by the trains and also some of our Indians. The agreement that the railroad made with the Indians was never kept. The agreement was made with our head chief, a man who has passed away. And there are many more ways in which the Indians have been mistreated by the white people.

The railroad said that if we wanted wood we could have the ties that were taken up by the railroad. Several times I have gone myself to get wood, but could not get any.

MEMORIAL OF THE KLICKITAT INDIANS OF WASHINGTON.

To the Great White Father:

Long ago when this world was created, when there was no one here but the red man, there were also created the red salmon to run in the rivers, the red deer to run in the mountains, and the camas root in the valleys to provide food for the red man. All this time we were happy. We lived our own way and hunted the deer and caught the fish, dug the camas root and picked huckleberries, and were very happy.

The white man came and drove us from our lands; told us that we could not hunt the red deer or catch the red salmon or dig the camas root or pick the huckleberries. Finally, when we did not move as quickly as the white man thought we should, he forced us to leave, and by a treaty with some of our ancestors, in which members of our tribe or band never joined, he took these lands from us, but he gave us the right to hunt in the mountains, to pick berries, and to catch the red salmon. Now our people are threatened with arrest and punishment if they catch salmon, as our people always have, and if they hunt the red deer; and we are told that the mountains which we thought were our own to hunt in and to camp on in the summer are to be sold and taken away from us.

The white man has even changed the color of the fish in our streams by introduction of new kinds called the white salmon, and we want you to see if we can not be left in peace; if we can not have our rights.

There are about 100 of our people, who never received any help from the Government, who do not receive any moneys, and who have taken homesteads in our little neghborhood. We have no schools furnished us by the Government or any schools of any kind, and our young people are not being fitted for the duties of citizens of the United States, except as we are able to teach them ourselves and to show them how to do right.

We hope that you will listen to our appeal; that you will prevent our mountains being sold and taken away from us; and that you will see that we have the right to hunt and fish as we have always had, and that our children are provided with lands, as they have a right to have lands for themselves. We believe that we have rights or should have the rights which the Yakimas have, but we have never received any help from the Government.

YAKIMA INDIANS.

Attention is called to the fact that many of the Yakima Indians are now old men and women, and that if they are ever to receive any benefit from the lands that have been alloted to them the relief will have to come soon. These Indians feel that they should have the benefit of their lands while they can enjoy them; that if the present policy of the Government is followed out they will receive no benefit from their lands during their lives. They do not particularly care to leave this land or property to their children or their heirs, as their children and heirs have received lands in the same way that they have, and they think that they should be allowed to enjoy their lands and their property during their lifetime.

The present policy of the agents in withholding the rent money and money received from the sale of inherited land is entirely wrong. They believe that each Indian should be entitled to have this money to use as he sees fit. The Indian can not be taught to use the money without being able to spend some of it in order that he may become self-sustaining.

If our Indians could have the use of their money they would be more industrious; they would buy agricultural implements; they would procure the necessaries of life; they would build homes; they would buy stock; and they would do many things that they can not now do because they are poor and have no money.

At the present time our Indian money is deposited around in various banks, and our Indians are engaged in making millionaires out of the bankers who loan this money out from 10 to 12 per cent, after paying us about 3 per cent. These bankers are making from $50,000 to $75,000 every year out of our Indian funds. The millions of dollars that belong to the Yakima Tribe that have been on deposit in these various banks for years past has made large fortunes for these bankers.

There are many Indians on the Yakima Reservation that in years past have suffered for the common necessaries of life, such as food, clothing, and medical attention, and yet these Indians are possessed of allotments that are worth from $5,000 to $10,000 each. The Indian has pride, and it hurts his feelings to keep constantly after the Indian agent in order to obtain what is his own. The Indian reasons that the money is of no benefit to him unless he can have it and use it, and he does not understand why he should not be allowed to use the money for his own purposes when he sees his white neighbor living in a good house, wearing good clothes, having good stock, and driving good horses, and having many other little things that the white man seems to like so well.

Now, the white people, especially those in the Government service, say that the Indian is not progressive; that he stands in the way of the development of the country. Suppose we see whether it is the Indian or the white man that stands in the way of development. Any Indian that has reached the age of 30 years is just as much developed to-day as he ever will be. If the Nation is not satisfied with the way in which he handles his own affairs, suppose that his allotment, or a large part of his allotment, should be reduced to money and placed out at interest at the same rate that the bankers get out of the money, the Indian would be able to live very comfortably on the income from his money. Take as an illustration an allotment that is valued at $8,000 or $10,000. If that money was placed out at 10 per cent interest, it would bring the Indian $800 to $1,000 every year. But no; the Indian must not be allowed to exercise any such business principle as this. He must have his small amount each month, $10 or $15, no matter what his needs may be; he must even beg to get that; and then the white man expects the Indian to be progressive under this treatment. It looks to the Indian that the white man was standing in the way of his progress, and certainly it is a poor recommendation of the Government service that our people have not been better civilized and educated in the 100 years of Government control, so that they are now self-sustaining and self-supporting on their own moneys and their own land. They would be self-supporting and self-sustaining if they could use their lands and their money and if the Government would give them all that they are entitled to.

One of the complaints we have to make is that the Yakima Agency permits hunters to come upon our lands and to hunt, and a great many of our people have had their cattle carelessly killed by these hunters, their fences torn down, and their property destroyed, and many of the Indians have come near being shot themselves. The agency permits white people to fish along the streams in our reservation, and these fishermen have been in the habit of tearing down our fences, burning up the posts, and otherwise destroying our property. This should be stopped.

Our people are compelled to lease their lands in some instances by the agent to persons that they do not want to have them. Our people should be allowed to lease their lands to such persons as they please, and they should not be compelled to lease to any person that the agent says they must lease to.

We, the undersigned, all being members of the Yakima Tribe of Indians, and residing upon the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the County of Yakima, State of Washington, being aggrieved by certain acts and practices of the Indian agency of the said Indian reservation, relative to the leasing of allotments, the sale of timber and inherited lands, and the retention by the Government of the proceeds thereof, do hereby urge that an investigation be had relative to the manner in which the Indian agency of the said Yakima Indian Reservation is being conducted in the premises, and for more particular cause of complaint, state as follows:

I. It has been the practice of the Indian agency for a considerable period of time of leasing or permitting owners of sheep to graze upon unimproved allotments without the consent of such allottees and without paying to such allottees any compensation therefor, thereby depriving said allottees of the use of their several allotments for grazing and pasturage of such stock as they may possess. We feel that our unimproved allotments should not be used through permission of the Indian agency without our consent nor without proper compensation being made therefor.

II. For a considerable period of time prior hereto it has been the practice of J. W. Phillips, additional farmer located at the city of Toppenish, Yakima County, Wash., and under the direct supervision and control of the Indian superintendent of the Yakima Indian Reservation, to lease the allotment of competent Indians on said reservation without first obtaining the consent of said Indian allottees, and also of leasing said lands upon terms and conditions less advantageous to said Indian allottees than they, the said Indian allottees, were themselves able to make.

III. We protest against the sale of any surplus land or lands of the Yakima Indian Reservation, and also against the sale of any timber comprising any part of said Yakima Indian Reservation.

IV. It has been the custom of the Government upon the sale of inherited Indian lands to retain the money received therefor and without distributing the same to the heirs rightfully entitled thereto. Many of our Indians are in need of funds with which to make necessary improvements upon their allotments, and notwithstanding that they in many instances are rightfully entitled to large sums of money derived from the sale of heirship lands, they are unable to obtain the same with which to make such needed improvements. We feel that it is to the best interest of the Indian that these heirship funds be distributed amongst the heirs entitled to the same to the end that they may better their conditions and become less dependent upon the white inhabitants and the Government.

V. We have reason to complain against the present superintendent of the Yakima Indian Agency, for the reason that he, in many instances, acts in the interest of white men as against that of the Indians.

Wherefore we pray that an investigation be had, as before mentioned, to the end that the foregoing unlawful practices may be remedied and the interest of the Indian better conserved.

STATEMENT OF ALEC TIEO, OF THE YAKIMA RESERVATION.

There has been a large tract of land near the town of Mabton which has been cut off of our reservation by the Government surveys. The land mentioned lies between the Yakima River and the section line on the south side. Our people never consented to this land being taken by the Government.

As to the southwest side of the reservation, the Government surveys changed the lines of the reservation twice and cut off large portions of our reservation each time, as will be shown by the original lines of the reservation and by the surveys made by the Government.

Now, on the Columbia River at Tumwater Falls is where the Indians used to fish in early times. My grandfather, my grandmother, and my uncles used to fish there, and all the rest of my people. Now, the white people—20 or 25 years ago—they came in there and put the fish wheels in, and they won't allow my people to fish where the fish wheels are, and so they could hardly fish now for their own use. A man by the name of Sewford, who owns a cannery on the Oregon side of the Columbia River near the Washington and Oregon line, refused to let us fish unless we would sell the fish to him.

When the Government made the reservation and moved my people from our homes near Tumwater, Wash., to the Yakima Reservation, the Government promised my people that at any time during the fishing season they could return from the Yakima Reservation to our old home fishing grounds and fish all we pleased so as to have all the fish we would need for our winter use, but now my people who moved from their homes near Tumwater, Wash., and went to the Yakima Reservation, as requested by the Government, are not permitted to go back to our home fishing grounds and fish as the Government promised them.

If we have any fish from the fishing grounds, we have to buy them from the people who are now running the fish wheels. The white people and a few Indians have been running the fisheries in the streams where the Government promised us we could fish, and they have refused to let our people go there and fish.

In the treaty with the Government, "the exclusive right of taking fish in all the streams, where running through or bordering said reservation, is further secured to said confederated tribes and bands of Indians, and also the right of taking fish at all usual and accustomed places, in common with the citizens of the Territory, and of erecting temporary buildings for curing them, together with the privilege of hunting, gathering roots and berries, and pasturing their cattle upon open and unclaimed land."

Many people other than the ones belonging to our reservation are permitted to hunt and catch fish within the bounds of our reservation and in places exclusively reserved for ourselves.

We had a ditch called the Irwin ditch. That was the name of the agent at that time. This ditch was 12 miles long from the Yakima River to the Toppenish Creek. It was built by Indians. Now, several years after that they made us pay for water 75 cents an acre; they say to pay for repairing the ditch and for a ditch tender, as quite a lot of us pay, and those who don't pay don't get any water. The Government said we were to get water free. This year our agent says we have to pay 50 cents an acre for 80 acres, whether we cultivate or irrigate all of the 80 acres or only a small part, so we made a kick on that. We told him we were not going to do all that. Now we got a man in there superintending the ditch—his name is Mr. Webbers—and if we don't pay for the water he shuts it off and does not permit us to irrigate the land.

Mr. Young, our agent, told the ditch superintendent if we did not pay for our water for him to shut it off. Now, all the Indians on Yakima Reservation are capable of running their own ditches and taking care of their own irrigation, and we don't want the white man to look after our ditches any more. And we want our people to select our superintendent and ditch tenders, and also want to make our own assessments for the expenses of keeping up our ditches, and want the right to fix the amount that our people shall pay for the use of water, and also the amounts that the white people shall pay for taking water from our ditches. We are able and willing to conduct our own business affairs, and if we are permitted to do so in regard to our irrigation plants we can handle our irrigation business with much less trouble and at less expense than they are being handled now by the white man. And if we are permitted to fix our own assessments and do our own collecting, hire and pay our own men, we can soon accumulate a surplus which will enable us to add to and extend our irrigation system.

Now, Mr. Webbers hires no Indian help, and Indian help built our ditch.

They are making a road on our reservation, and the foreman is a white man, and he always hires white men to do the work on the road, and will not give the Indians employment, and the Indian's money pays the white man for doing the work.

During the war with the Yakima Indians, Joel Palmer, superintendent of Indian affairs for Oregon Territory, in November, 1855, gathered up all guns, axes, knives, cooking utensils, tepees, skins, hides, and furs, and a great deal of other personal property of the value of possibly $50,000. He thought we were going to fight the white people, and he destroyed the property in order to make us weak so that we might not be able to fight. That we didn't fight the white people, and did not intend to, and some time after Mr. Palmer had burned our goods and had found out that we were not enemies to the white people, he promised to have the Government pay us for our property, and the money to be received for our goods that were destroyed to be divided between the Warm Springs, Wasco, Wishham, and Deschutes Indians.

WISHCUM (YAKIMA) TRIBE,
Toppenish, Wash., April 17, 1912.

When war started among the Yakima Indians, Kimyacon, then our father of Wishcum Tribe, Little Wapant and his brother Skulman Wapant and Mulack-Mulack, these three of Wishcum Tribe, and the Desuesh Tribe were Catummess and Tuos-k-ne. All these the Desuesh Tribe and the Wishcum, they helped the white men (soldiers) and had war with Yakima Indians. After the war was over the general told my father, Little Wapant, that as long as he lived and if he died and left children the Government would help them. And this I want to find out. I sent this note by Alex Teio. Little Wapant children that still living are two men and two women, Sarah Lundley and Mable Teio, Luke Wapant, and I am.

From JAMES WAPANT.

As has been shown heretofore there are many Indian tribes whose lands have been disposed of, and it is now impossible for the children and some of the Indians of the tribe to whom land was allotted at the time of the making of the allotment to receive the lands to which they are entitled.

There are to-day being advertised by the General Land Office and the Indian Office millions of acres of land upon Indian reservations for sale to white persons.

According to the latest circular relative to the opening and sale of Indian lands by the Indian Office, there are 500,000 acres for sale in the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont.; 1,776,000 acres in the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.; 1,000,000 acres in the Colville Indian Reservation, Wash.; 1,145,000 acres in the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash.; about 1,850,000 acres in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian Reservations, S. Dak. and N. Dak.; about 216,000 acres in the Coeur D'Alene Indian Reservation, Idaho; about 450,437 acres in the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont.; about 425,000 acres in the Rosebud and Pine Ridge Indian Reservations, S. Dak.; about 500,000 acres in the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak.; several thousand acres in the Colorado River Indian Reservation, in Arizona; and even lands are being offered for sale in the Chippewa Indian Reservation, Minn. In fact, about all the Indian reservations in the country are being offered by the Government for sale to homesteaders, except five reservations: The Fort Hall Indian Reservation, Idaho; the Hoopa Indian Reservation, Cal.; the Jicarilla Indian Reservation, N. Mex.; the Klamath Indian Reservation, Oreg.; and the Moqui Indian Reservation, Ariz.

The foregoing does not take into consideration the hundreds of thousands of acres of land in the State of Oklahoma that have been disposed of to white persons.

The foregoing reasons have caused the Indians of North America to band together to assist and aid each other in getting their rights established and have the Government recognize what is coming to them under treaties and under agreements and under executive orders. The Indians have not been encouraged by the officials of the Government in this work that they are now undertaking. Although lodges have been established in nearly every State where Indians reside and they have been working together to better their conditions, and notwithstanding that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs himself authorized his speech and letters to be sent out broadcast to the Indian agents and superintendents throughout the country, the Indians have met with opposition from Indian agents, superintendents, and farmers discouraging this work, discouraging them from organizing, and discouraging them from trying to assert their rights and make themselves better citizens and more intelligent and more healthy people.

Many of the brothers who have come to the meetings have told of the treatment and discouragement they have received at the hands of the superintendent or farmer or agent, and when this was brought to the attention of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs it was said that it was not the purpose of the Interior Department or the Indian Office to discourage this movement.

Then he was shown a letter from Agent Young, of the Yakima Reservation, in which Young denounced the efforts of the Indians in organizing the brotherhood and said in that letter that the Government was against it.

Perhaps there are a great many reasons why there is opposition to the Brotherhood of North American Indians. When we know that $1,799,022.23 of the Indians' money last year was spent for salaries—perhaps for political reasons—to maintain supervision and control of us and our affairs, that may be the cause of opposition to the Brotherhood of North American Indians. When we know that hundreds of millions of acres of land have been taken away from us for the benefit of land-grabbers throughout the United States, that may be another reason for opposition to the Brotherhood of North American Indians. When we know that treaty after treaty has been violated and that the money agreed to be paid to the Indians has been withheld for the benefit of somebody else, that may be another reason for opposition of the Brotherhood of North American Indians; and when we know that no Indian can take on his own reservation the best timberland for his allotment, but that it must be held and put in a forest reserve or a mineral reserve, that may be another cause for opposition to the Brotherhood of North American Indians. When we know that when they agree with Indian tribes to pay them a certain fixed sum of money for a certain concession of land, not naming the number of acres ceded, but all that is left after those tribes or bands have been allotted, they have often been short 300 or 400 allotments, that may be another reason for opposition to the Brotherhood of North American Indians. When we know that millions of dollars of individual Indian money is on deposit in certain banks or depositaries, which brings the Indians only 2½ or 3 per cent, and that this same money is being loaned out by these banks or depositaries at from 10 to 24 per cent per annum and the use of it distributed among people whose sympathy is not in harmony with the Indians, that may be another reason for opposition to the Brotherhood of North American Indians.

When we take all of these things into consideration—and we could, perhaps, enumerate a hundred more—then it becomes apparent why people are planning to down and oppose our plan of organizing to protect our people and our rights.

Where is there a corporation, where is there an organization of people, where is there a city or community that does not organize and have some one to speak for them and ask for certain laws and rules and regulations to govern their business or their affairs?

Why have we Senators and Representatives here enacting laws, and why is there so much opposition to certain plans from certain sections of the country, if it is not for the selfish interests of those people most concerned?

You take the manufacturing districts of any of the States of New England, they want certain protection in law which they call tariff. Take the people in other sections who want things to come in from the foreign countries cheaper, and they are opposed to it, and it creates a controversy in the Congress of the United States. But ours is so different, so localized, and so to our personal interests that we can not understand how it could be that any Indian would oppose the organization which is for the benefit and uplifting and the good of his own people. All they need to know is the purpose, the objects, and what it will accomplish, and let other people understand we will get assistance.

There are many reasons why the Indians should stand together, protect and assist each other, and organize themselves into a society for their own protection and assistance. There are many reasons why the white people, both those who live in the vicinity of the Indians and those who live at a distance, should aid and assist the Indians in this organization which stands for the uplifting and betterment of the Indian race. The first reason is well set forth in the objects, constitution, and by-laws of the Brotherhood of North American Indians.

OBJECTS.

The objects of this brotherhood are to teach, obtain, and maintain rights, liberties, and justice for all Indians equal to that of any people and inferior to none; to preserve and perpetuate the ancient traditions, arts, and customs of North American Indians; to unify their efforts and interests; to council together; to promote and encourage industry and thrift among Indian people; to collect, secure the preservation of, and to publish the records, papers, documents, and traditions of historical value and importance to North American Indians; to mark by appropriate monuments places historic and sacred to the American Indian; to impress upon present and future generations of American Indians the importance of united action for the common good; to promote a feeling of friendship, brotherhood, and good citizenship among its members; and to provide for the aged and infirm of our race.

And another reason is that it stands for peace and friendship and a better understanding between the Indian and other races; and, thirdly, if the Indians are taught through experience how to handle their own money and their own affairs, by having given to them an opportunity to do so themselves, they will benefit the communities in which they live and also benefit the associates that surround them.

The merchants, traders, farmers, and bankers all should be interested in seeing to the development of the Indians in their vicinity, or those who live near them, for the good of the community, and for the improvement it will bring to the country, as well as the surrounding neighborhood. The officials of the county, State, and Federal Governments should be much interested in uplifting and urging the better development of the Indian, and in seeing that they get just treatment and that the obligations of the Government are carried out with them, and that there should be a feeling of confidence and friendship between them and their associates.

The churches and philanthropical societies should be interested in the movement and enterprise of the Indians, and should encourage and assist them in every possible way.

On reviewing the history of the United States, we find that the Indians assisted this Government in every struggle they ever had from the Revolutionary War to the present time. In the colonial days we find that they aided and assisted the early settlers of this country, and that in most every instance where hostility was known between the races the first outrage was committed on the Indians, instead of being committed by the Indians on the whites. It is a wonder that an aboriginal people, the original owners of the soil, should not more deeply feel the outrages committed upon them that the invaders of their territory should feel or think they had a right to a grievance against the Indians.

In a few generations the Indians have been forced to change their mode of living, their mode of industry, their occupation, and their habits, and little encouragement has been given to them to adopt the new mode of civilization and the new occupations of life which were submitted to them, but on the contrary they have been discouraged and told that they were not fitted for those occupations and that some one else, at their expense, must use their means, their lands and privileges, and speak and do for them. Is it not time to bring about a change? Is it not time for them to get the encouragement and assistance of good, honest-thinking people? Is it any wonder that the following planks were adopted in the Brotherhood of North American Indians?

DECLARATION OF INDIAN POLICY BY THE BROTHERHOOD OF NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

The Brotherhood of North American Indians favors and advocates—

1. The right to have Indian delegates on the floor of the Congress of the United States, said delegates to be Indians by blood and to be chosen exclusively by recognized Indian tribal vote, one delegate for each 60,000 Indian population, the delegates to have the same powers and compensation as delegates from the Territories now have.

2. The right to ratify or reject by vote of the tribe or tribes affected, after 60 days' notice, any legislation by the Congress of the United States affecting or relating to the sale, allotment, or other disposition of Indian land, in all cases where there has not been an agreement with the Indians sanctioning the disposition of the same.

3. Liberal appropriations for the Indian Service in accordance with the progressive needs and requirements of the Indians.

4. An advisory board of Indians for each Indian school or agency, consisting of three or more members, to be chosen by tribe or tribes of Indians represented, whose judgment in matters of Indian policy shall have equal weight with the recommendations of the superintendent or agent in all matters affecting the Indian tribe or tribes under the jurisdiction of the superintendency or agency.

5. Greater industrial assistance and development in all agricultural communities.

6. Greater cooperation between the Federal Government and State governments in matters of education of all Indian youth with opportunity to attend State public schools, whenever these are preferred by the Indians.

7. A more liberal policy on the part of the Indian Office in allowing the Indians the use of their individual Indian moneys.

8. The right of petition and assembly without restriction or restraint, and the right to come and go at will without the permission of any superintendent or agent.

9. Qualifications being equal, Indians by blood to be given preference in the Indian Service as superintendents, financial clerks, farmers, and merchants.

10. Protection, as persons, under the Constitution of the United States, for all Indians, whether as tribes or individuals, of life, liberty, and property, and the right to enforce such protection in the courts.

This and many more statements of fact could be set forth showing the attitude of the Department of the Interior and the Indian Office toward the Indian tribes of the country. So far as has come under the notice of the officers of the Brotherhood of North American Indians there is not a tribe of Indians who has not a valid complaint against the administration of its affairs. It may be possible that the Indian Office has done the best that its representatives knew how at the time, but the fact remains that the Indians have not been satisfied with the administration of their affairs. In a number of instances where complaints have been made to the Indian Office the Indians are told that the executive department of the Government is merely administering the laws as laid down by Congress; that they have no other course than to interpret the laws according to general usage and in interpretation; and that if the Indians are not satisfied with the administration of the laws they should appeal to Congress to have the laws changed. It matters not what the reason may be for the administration of affairs against the real interests of the Indians so long as the Indians are actually deprived of their portion by some branch of authority of the Government. We do not believe that the Government will deny that there are rights of which the Indians have been deprived, and there certainly could be no better time than the present for Congress itself to permit the Indians to have an accounting, by tribe or nation, from the Government and the right to have their differences adjusted in the courts of the United States.

We appeal to Congress to give us the same right that every other people has and is given by their government—the right to have their differences with their government heard and tried and decided in their courts. The relations which exist between the United States Government and the Indian tribes are of a contractual nature, and the treaties and agreements made with our people have not been carried out according to the understanding of our people. We ask you if you can cite us to a single instance where one party to a contract has been denied the right to have his understanding of it tested, except in the case of the Indian nations of the United States?

Some of the tribes of the country have in the past appealed to Congress and have been granted the right to have their differences heard and adjusted. We believe that all of our people should now have the right in common with all other people to go into the courts of the United States and ask for an accounting and an adjustment of their differences.

If Congress should have the slightest doubt regarding the necessity for this action there are hundreds of Indians who stand ready to appear before any committee that may be selected by you and to give reasons why the Indian tribes of the United States should have the right to have their differences heard and adjusted. Many of our people are old and will not live much longer. They have rights which should come to them during their life, and we appeal to you to take action in the near future in order that our people may know that the United States Government has their interests at heart and is willing to try them with fairness and justness.

Respectfully submitted.

BROTHERHOOD OF NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS,

AMENDING MINING LAWS FOR ALASKA.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no person shall hereafter locate any placer-mining claim in Alaska as attorney for another unless he is duly authorized thereto by a power of attorney in writing, duly acknowledged and recorded in any recorder's office in the judicial division where the location is made. Any person so authorized may locate placer-mining claims for not more than two principals or associations under such power of attorney, but no such agent or attorney shall be authorized or permitted to locate more than two placer-mining claims for any one principal or association during any calendar month, and no placer-mining claim shall hereafter be located in Alaska except under the provisions of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, lines 5 and 6, by striking out the words "two principals or associations" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two individuals or one association."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, there is another committee amendment on page 2, line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. That has not been reported yet. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 11, by striking out the word "provisions" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "limitations."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with committee amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FINLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 18033, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on either amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk called the Committee on Insular Affairs.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House bill 17756.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17756) to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the bill as read is on the House Calendar. It was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. And it is No. 79 on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that if it was put on the House Calendar that it was put there improperly. There seem to be two prints of the bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. It might be a very nice question as to whether it should be on the Union Calendar or not, but it being on that calendar, I think it should remain there until some change of reference be made by proper action. I do not see that any such change of reference has been made.

The SPEAKER. It should be on the Union Calendar, then. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 65 of an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 65. That all lands that have been or may hereafter be acquired by virtue of the preceding section shall constitute a part and portion of the public domain of the government of the Philippine Islands, and shall be held, sold, and conveyed, or leased temporarily, under the same limitations and restrictions as are provided in this act for the holding, sale, conveyance, or lease of the public lands in said islands: Provided, That all deferred payments and the interest thereon shall be payable in money prescribed for the payment of principal and interest of the bonds authorized to be issued in payment for said lands by the preceding section, and said deferred payments shall bear interest at the rate borne by the bonds. All moneys realized or received from sales or other disposition of said lands, or by reason thereof, shall constitute a trust fund for the payment of principal and interest of said bonds, and also constitute a sinking fund for the payment of said bonds at their maturity. Actual settlers and occupants at the time said lands are acquired by the Government shall have the preference over all others to lease, purchase, or acquire their actual holdings within such reasonable time as may be determined by said Government, without regard to the extent of their said holdings."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the House in general and of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] in particular to the fact that there are two prints of this bill. On January 12, 1912, the bill was introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed. On January 29, 1912, it was committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

On February 7, 1912, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have just been handed a copy of the second print, which shows that on the 7th of February the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged, but I should like to know in what manner it was discharged. I have looked through the RECORD of February 7 and find no record of anything having occurred on that day with reference to that bill. I think that the bill having been referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, that committee could be discharged only by a motion made in the House.

The SPEAKER. Judge Crisp tells me that the way that change of reference happened was that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] came up and agreed that the change should be made.

Mr. JONES. I came up, Mr. Speaker, after speaking with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] agreed with me that the bill properly belonged on the House Calendar, and he thought there would be no question raised if it were transferred to that calendar. This being the case, it was not deemed necessary to have the change made in the open House.

Mr. MANN. I do not in the slightest degree question the statement of the gentleman from Virginia, because he would not make a statement that was not absolutely accurate, although I have no recollection of the occurrence at all.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that he made a promise for me or for this side of the House, I will live up to it; but I do not think that both those gentlemen together had authority to change the reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman as to that, but if it was done, it would seem that everybody was bound by it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will agree to be bound by it if the gentleman from Illinois says so.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it does not make any difference. The gentleman does not object to taking it up, does he?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES. I imagine the gentleman will agree by unanimous consent that the bill be considered on the House Calendar, because it is properly on the House Calendar. It does not appropriate any money. That is the proper calendar for it, and it was by an inadvertence that it was placed on the other calendar.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will agree that the gentleman may ask unanimous consent that it be considered as on the House Calendar, and I will not object to so considering it.

Mr. JONES. I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill as on the House Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of this bill is to remove any ambiguity there may be in the language of section 65 of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, known as the organic law of the Philippine Islands. It is to make clear and definite and unmistakable the meaning of that section.

Section 15 of this organic act provides that the public lands which were acquired by the United States from the Kingdom of Spain under the treaty which was ratified on the 11th day of April, 1899, and which amounted to some 60,000,000 acres, with the exception of timber and mineral lands, may be disposed of by the Philippine Government "to actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of said islands" on such terms as may be prescribed by general legislation, not to exceed 16 hectares, approximately 40 acres, to one individual and not to exceed 1,024 hectares, approximately 2,500 acres, to any one corporation.

This same act provides in section 64 for the acquisition by the Philippine Government of some 400,000 acres of land owned by certain religious bodies in the Philippine Islands, known as the friar lands, and in section 65 there is this provision as to their disposition:

That all lands acquired by virtue of the preceding section shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the Government of the Philippine Islands, and may be held, sold, and conveyed, or leased temporarily for a period not exceeding three years after their acquisition by said Government on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act.

Mr. TILSON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. JONES. After I have completed this sentence. So that if these lands are disposed of under section 15, which applies to the public lands which the United States acquired under the treaty of Paris, then they can not be sold in quantities in excess of 40 acres to an individual, or in excess of 2,500 acres to a corporation.

Mr. TILSON. Is it the purpose of this amendment to change the law in that respect?

Mr. JONES. No. The purpose of this amendment is to make clear and definite the meaning of the language which I have quoted from section 65. The language is, as I have just quoted it:

All lands acquired by virtue of the preceding section—that is the section which provides for the purchase of the friar lands—shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the Government.

They must be held, sold, and conveyed, according to the terms of this section, "subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act."

The Philippine Government holds that the words "shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the Government" do not mean that the friar lands shall constitute a part of "the public domain" of the Government. That the words "public property" are not equivalent to the words "public lands" or "public domain," and that therefore these lands are not to be held and disposed of subject to the limitations and conditions which section 15 imposes upon the disposition of "the public domain," but that, on the contrary, it is at liberty to sell them, the friar lands, in quantities in excess of 40 acres to individuals.

Mr. BUTLER. These are the friar lands?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Then your intention is to make it so that the lands can not be sold except as provided in the fifteenth section?

Mr. JONES. In the fifteenth section. It is the contention of the committee that Congress intended that these lands should be held and disposed of under precisely the same limitations and conditions that are made applicable to other Government-owned lands under the provisions of section 15.

The Philippine Commission, however, has sold to three men jointly one body of this land containing 56,210 acres.

Mr. BUTLER. What body of land?

Mr. JONES. They have sold a body of land on the island of Mindoro, known as the San José estate, to three American citizens.

Mr. BUTLER. A part of the friar lands?

Mr. JONES. A part of the 380,000 acres of friar lands. It was supposed that there were about 420,000 acres of these lands, but when the sale was consummated the friars insisted on retaining certain tracts, and so, as a matter of fact, 388,000 acres only were purchased, to pay for which the Philippine Government issued and sold $7,000,000 of bonds.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STERLING. How much of these lands have been sold on other conditions than that provided by law with reference to Government lands?

Mr. JONES. There were some 388,000 acres purchased, and about 125,000 acres remain undisposed of. The gentleman will find in the views of the minority, filed by Mr. Olmsted, a list of the lands that have so far been disposed of.

Mr. STERLING. If this bill becomes a law, will it affect the title to those lands already purchased?

Mr. JONES. No; it is not intended to be retroactive; at any rate, there is nothing in the bill to that effect.

Now, as I have stated, the Philippine Commission sold one tract of this land acquired from the friars to three individuals. One of these individuals was Horace Havemeyer, another was Charles H. Senff, and another was Charles J. Welch. Mr. Senff was at one time the vice president, as well as a director, of the American Sugar Refining Co., and Mr. Havemeyer was at one time a director in that company.

Mr. COOPER. Is that what is called the Sugar Trust?

Mr. JONES. That is what is known as the Sugar Trust. Mr. Welch, the third member, has been largely interested with these gentlemen in the sugar business.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Are these parcels of land contiguous?

Mr. JONES. It is one parcel and has been bought by three individuals jointly. They purchased the land through a dummy. They sent to the Philippine Islands a man named Poole, who purchased this land under a contract, which provided that the deed was to be made to his assignees. When the time came to consummate the sale Poole required that the deed should be made to Horace Havemeyer, Charles H. Senff, and Charles J. Welch.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Share and share alike?

Mr. JONES. That transaction aroused a great deal of feeling throughout the Philippine Islands.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. What was the date of that transaction? Was it before or after the passage of the Payne tariff law?

Mr. JONES. It was in the latter part of the year 1909. It is some time since I have read the testimony and I can not give the exact date from memory. The report gives the exact date.

Mr. TILSON. It is safe to assume that these are valuable sugar lands.

Mr. JONES. These are very valuable sugar lands, and I understand that these gentlemen have already invested hundreds of thousands of dollars in developing the lands and in building a sugar mill. They have built great sugar centrales, a short railroad, and expensive wharves and docks.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will it not be to the interest of those men who own these sugar lands to maintain American sovereignty over the islands?

Mr. JONES. I am not prepared to answer that question positively. They may, and they doubtless do, think so. I am not prepared to say, however, that if the Filipinos were granted their independence these people would not be amply protected in all their rights. They may not agree with me as to this. Philippine independence would cause them to lose the free markets of America for their sugar, and for this reason they will, I presume, be opposed to independence.

Mr. Speaker, the sales of these friar lands in quantities larger than the law permits the so-called public lands to be sold, especially this sale to Messrs. Senff, Havemeyer, and Welch of over 56,000 acres in one body, aroused—I was about to say naturally aroused—a great deal of feeling and indignation on the part of the Filipino people. They naturally conceived the idea that the Philippine Commission was permitting the Sugar Trust and other capitalists from the United States and elsewhere, to buy these friar lands in large quantities for the purpose of exploitation. They believe, too, that unless a stop is put to the sale of these lands in large bodies to aliens there will be created in the Philippines a system of absentee landlordism similar to that which has given rise to so much discontent and discord in Ireland.

On the last day of the second session of the Sixty-first Congress a resolution was adopted by this House providing for an investigation of these sales. In the following December, the first month of the last session of the Sixty-first Congress, the Insular Affairs Committee began the investigation provided for in that resolution. Several prominent gentlemen from the Philippine Islands came to the United States and testified before the committee. Among those gentlemen was Dean C. Worcester, a member of the Philippine Commission, and also the secretary of the interior, under whose department these lands are administered; Capt. Sleeper, the director of public lands; Frank W. Carpenter, executive secretary; and the attorney general of the Philippines. During this investigation, which covered many weeks, Mr. Havemeyer, Mr. Welch, and a number of others appeared before the committee and testified. There were four separate reports made by members of the Committee on Insular Affairs. One of them was signed by nine members, and was presented by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]. That report held that inasmuch as these lands had been bought from the proceeds of bonds sold by the Philippine Government they were to be distinguished from the public lands acquired from Spain under the treaty of Paris; that this was shown to be the intention of Congress when they were described in the act as "public property" and not as "public domain."

As the friar lands were not "public lands" they were not subject to the limitations and conditions imposed upon public lands in section 15, and therefore could be sold to individuals without limitation as to quantity. Six members of the committee took the ground that the limitations prescribed in section 15 applied to friar lands as well as to those lands acquired from Spain, and that, therefore, all sales made to individuals in excess of 40 acres were illegal.

Mr. STERLING. On that point——

Mr. JONES. In just one moment. Three members of the committee, in the views prepared by the late Judge Madison, of Kansas, took the ground that the friar lands were not subject to the limitations and conditions as to quantity imposed in section 15, but that under the law no sales of public lands could be made to aliens. Still another report was signed by Judge RUCKER, who took the ground that the Judiciary Department should be instructed to institute proceedings to construe this law. All four of these reports will be found with the published hearings which were had before the Committee on Insular Affairs and which embrace some 1,300 or more closely printed pages. But the point, Mr. Speaker, which I desire to make and to emphasize is this: That each one of these reports held that there was such diversity of opinion as to the true meaning of section 65 that it was the duty of Congress to so amend that section as to make its meaning entirely clear. In that conclusion we all concurred.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there? If I understand the gentleman correctly, the Filipino people did not object to the sale of the lands upon the ground of inadequacy of price?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. BUTLER. It was because too much of the land was being sold to certain individuals?

Mr. JONES. Yes. The Filipinos take the ground that these lands ought to be carefully preserved for the benefit and use of the actual occupants and such other natives as may desire to purchase them for homes. They are opposed to selling them in large tracts to nonresident aliens. They believe that if this is the proper policy to be pursued in respect to the lands acquired from Spain it should be followed as to the lands purchased from the friars. Indeed they hold, and not without good reason, that if it is unwise to sell the 60,000,000 acres of public lands in large quantities it is far more so to sell the remaining 125,000 acres of friar lands in large quantities. The commission, however, has taken a very different view of the subject. It not only holds that it is legal, but that it is desirable to sell these lands in large bodies to individuals. They can not sell them in large quantities to corporations.

Mr. BUTLER. The friar lands?

Mr. JONES. There is another section of the organic act which relates to the landholding of corporations. Section 75 declares that all corporations engaged in agriculture shall by their charter be restricted to the ownership of not to exceed 1,024 hectares of land. No corporation engaged in agriculture can, therefore, hold more than 1,024 hectares, or 2,500 acres, of land no matter from whom acquired. There is no such inhibition in the law as to individuals, and therefore the Philippine Commission contends that it can sell the friar lands to individuals in any quantities.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. In a moment. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STERLING. Do you think there is any doubt of the title to these three tracts of 56,000 acres? It seems to me that section 65 expressly puts the friar lands under the same condition as the public lands.

Mr. JONES. That is my contention.

Mr. STERLING. And if that be true, their title would be bad.

Mr. JONES. I think the conclusion of the gentleman is correct. But the titles to the lands which have been disposed of in quantities in excess of the restrictions of section 15 must be decided in the courts. This bill does not undertake to disturb those titles. It seeks to put a stop to further sales.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield for another question? Are these lands being disposed of at a profit?

Mr. JONES. The price of these lands has been fixed at their cost plus the interest on the cost price and the cost of administration. The Havemeyer people paid something over $6 per acre for the large tract sold them.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Gold or Mexican?

Mr. JONES. That includes the original cost of the land, 4 per cent interest up to the time of sale, and some cost of surveying and administration. This is on the gold basis.

Mr. STERLING. Is the Government of the United States responsible for the payment of the $7,000,000?

Mr. JONES. Not legally. There was a question 10 years ago when the present law was under consideration as to whether the United States was morally responsible inasmuch as the Philippine Government could not issue the bonds without the authority of Congress. There were those who held that the United States would in the circumstances be morally responsible.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Illinois asked if the United States is not responsible for the redemption of these bonds, $7,000,000, and the gentleman from Virginia said, "Not legally." Is not the Government of the United States bound to see that there shall be no exploitation of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. JONES. I think so. It seems to me that the Government of the United States is bound to see that there is no exploitation. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], with reference to the sale of these lands to corporations. And in order to make my question clear I am going to state what I understand to be the law with reference to the sale of those lands, namely, that not more than 2,500 acres, as I understand it, can be sold to a corporation, but it was held by the administration in the Philippine Islands that that limitation did not apply to the friar lands. Is that true?

Mr. JONES. This is the truth about it, and it is what I have been endeavoring to explain. The commission held that the restrictions contained in section 15 as to the sale of public lands did not apply either to corporations or individuals as to friar lands; that it was not the intention of Congress to make applicable to these lands the limitations contained in that section. But there is a section, section 75, which, as I have explained, provides that no corporation engaged in agriculture shall be permitted to hold over 2,500 acres of land. If it were not for the fact that no corporation engaged in agriculture can, under its charter, hold in excess of 2,500 acres, the Philippine Commission would have sold to corporations, as it has sold to individuals, friar lands without limitation as to quantity. It is conceded by the commission that an agricultural corporation can not hold land in excess of 2,500 acres.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that it would be a wise limitation if the corporations were not permitted to buy land at all? Does he not believe it would be a better plan to have the land and its uses reserved to creatures of flesh and blood and not to creatures of law?

Mr. JONES. I will be frank enough to say that I would favor that policy. I think such a policy would be welcomed by the Filipino people, but the object of this bill is simply to make clear and definite the language in section 65.

I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] that the limitations of section 15 apply to the friar lands as well as to those acquired from Spain, but the Philippine Commission holds otherwise. The purpose of this bill is not only to make clear the intention of Congress, but to place upon the present law the interpretation for which I contend.

It was my contention, and it was the contention of the other five gentlemen who signed the minority report in the Sixty-first Congress, and it is the contention of all of the majority members of the committee in this Congress and of two of the minority members that the Philippine Commission erred in holding that the limitations contained in section 15 did not apply to the friar lands. After the four reports to which I have referred had been presented to the House at the close of the Sixty-first Congress the Secretary of War advised the Philippine Commission that it should not dispose of the remainder of the friar lands in large tracts until Congress had been afforded the opportunity to pass upon this question.

But the President has stated in a message which he recently sent to Congress that it is his purpose to direct the Philippine Commission to proceed to dispose of these lands to individuals in any quantities, and therefore it is imperative that Congress take some action upon the subject, unless it is willing that the remainder of the friar lands shall be sold to a few American capitalists for purposes of exploitation.

Mr. NYE rose.

Mr. JONES. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. NYE. The gentleman has already cleared up a part of the question I was going to ask with reference to the direction of the War Department. Was there any opinion rendered by the Attorney General as to the question of the validity of those sales?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to go into any discussion of this legal question, since it was the opinion of every member of the committee which investigated the action of the Public Lands Bureau that in view of the great diversity of opinion as to the proper construction to be placed upon the language of section 65 Congress should be asked to make that language so clear that it could not be misunderstood. The attorney general of the Philippines held that the restrictions of section 15 did not apply to the friar lands.

The Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Wickersham, also gave an opinion to the same effect. But I ought to add, I think, in justice to and out of respect for the Attorney General, that I have reason to believe that when he wrote that opinion he did not give to the subject the same consideration he would have given had he known that the question was "loaded." It was an opinion of which, I think, the Attorney General was not particularly proud.

Mr. NORRIS. It was just a fact in the history of the thing that I wished to have my recollection refreshed upon.

Mr. JONES. The legal question was gone into quite fully by the Committee on Insular Affairs. In the report of the hearings, which covers some fifteen hundred pages, the gentleman will find various legal opinions bearing on this subject. But it is true that the attorney general of the Philippines and the Attorney General of the United States held that the restrictions of section 15 did not apply to these friar lands. I have not been able to agree with either of these distinguished lawyers as to their construction of the section. But this bill, if passed by Congress, will settle the question definitely and leave no room for further discussion.

Now, just a word more in regard to this.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Just one question. I presume that it ought to be brought out at this point. I presume the gentleman will concede that this land ought to be sold without the limitations unless Congress shall take definite action in the matter, as contemplated by this bill?

Mr. JONES. It will be so sold. The Secretary of War in his last annual report served notice upon Congress to that effect. If Congress adjourns without passing this bill, there is no question but that the Philippine Commission will be directed or advised to proceed with the sale of the friar lands without limitation as to quantity in the case of individual purchasers.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. It is not proposed, of course, to prohibit the sale of these lands?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. BUTLER. The amount of land in each sale is to be limited to 40 acres?

Mr. JONES. Yes; to individuals.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, is that an advantage to the Filipinos?

Mr. JONES. I think so.

Mr. BUTLER. In the judgment of the gentleman would this land bring as much if sold in 40-acre tracts as by the thousand acres, or so?

Mr. JONES. I am not prepared to answer this question. It is possible that they could be sold for more if sold in large tracts to wealthy aliens than they would bring if sold to the natives in small tracts.

These lands are the inheritance of the people of the Philippine Islands, and they are to a man opposed to their being sold in large tracts. They are bitterly opposed to the establishment of a system of absentee landlordism in the Philippines, and nothing has so aroused the feelings of the Filipinos against our Government as the sale of the San Jose tract to the Havemeyer syndicate. The Philippine people have got to pay for these lands, not the United States, and they desire that they shall be sold to the occupants or other actual settlers in small quantities, rather than to aliens in large bodies without regard to the price.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask, Have the Filipinos expressed themselves by action of their assembly?

Mr. JONES. I am not sure about that, but I do know that they have expressed their opposition in many other ways; that many important bodies in the Philippines have protested against these sales. Both of the Philippine commissioners to this country have expressed themselves as opposed to the policy of exploitation which has been pursued as to these lands. One of them represents the Progresista and the other the Nacionalista party. There is absolutely no division of sentiment in the Philippines on this subject.

Mr. FOWLER rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JONES. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there is anything more to be said unless some gentleman desires to ask me a question.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Do the hearings disclose any evidence as to how much these lands would bring if sold in 40-acre tracts?

Mr. JONES. They have been selling all of these lands for what they cost, with the interest and administration charges added. They have fixed that as the price.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not seen the hearings, and the whole subject is new to me. I am imposing upon the patience of the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. That is the rule that has been adopted for the disposition of the lands.

Mr. BUTLER. I respect the sentiments of the Filipino; at the same time, if these lands will bring more money when sold in larger lots, I should like to see as good a price obtained as it is possible to obtain, other things being equal.

Mr. JONES. If the Filipino people, who must raise the money to pay off the bonds sold to purchase these lands, are a unit in opposing their sale in large bodies, does the gentleman from Pennsylvania think the Congress of the United States ought to say that it knows better than they do what their interests are, and that if the lands will bring more if sold to the Sugar Trust or its associates, they ought to be so disposed of?

Mr. BUTLER. Knowing as little as I do about the subject I should be inclined to respect the wishes of the Filipinos.

Mr. JONES. I am glad the gentleman takes that view of it.

Mr. FOWLER. I am very much interested in this discussion, because it is a new subject to me. I am anxious to know whether any other people or organization of any kind have any interest in these lands, except the Philippine Government.

Mr. JONES. No; not in the public lands or in these friar lands. The act of July 1, 1902, provided that the public lands, some 60,000,000 acres, about 20,000,000 acres of which are agricultural lands, should be administered and disposed of for the benefit of the Philippine people. I do not care to take up the time of the House in going into an explanation as to how and why the friar lands were acquired; but there were some 420,000 acres of land in the Philippine Islands which were held by three religious bodies—the Augustinians, the Dominicans, and the Recolletos. Those orders had become very unpopular prior to American occupation. The holding of these lands was largely responsible for bringing about the revolution of 1906, which resulted in a great many of the friars being killed and many others being driven into the city of Manila; so that when we came in possession of the islands we found there a political and agrarian question which threatened to frustrate all attempts at the pacification of the islands. Gov. Taft came to the United States early in 1902 and appeared before the Committee on Insular Affairs and urged that Congress authorize the Philippine Government to purchase these lands from the friars, in order to settle this disturbing agrarian question. The lands have been purchased. There were living on these lands some 16,000 families, representing about 160,000 people. These people were all tenants of the friars. Some portions of the lands were sparsely settled and were used for grazing purposes. The commission has been selling these lands in small quantities, not exceeding 40 acres, to occupants and other individuals, but not being able to dispose of them as rapidly as was desired in small tracts, the Government reversed its policy and offered the unoccupied lands in large bodies to individuals for the avowed purpose of securing the money with which to retire the bonds sold to purchase them. This is the only reason that has ever been advanced for selling these lands in large bodies, and this in the face of the fact that the proceeds of the so-called public lands can be devoted to the retirement of these bonds just as well as the proceeds of the friar lands. The Filipinos contend that there is no need to sell these lands over their protest, in order to secure the money to pay off friar-land bonds.

Mr. FOWLER. If I understand correctly, these lands were purchased from these different societies in pursuance of this act.

Mr. JONES. They were purchased under the authority conferred in the act of July 1, 1902.

Mr. FOWLER. How many acres were there in all?

Mr. JONES. There were supposed to be about 420,000 acres. Probably there were not quite that many; but when the time came to sell them it turned out, and that has never been satisfactorily explained, that there were very valuable estates on the Pasig River near Manila, one containing 8,000 acres of land, which the friars said they would not sell. There were a great many tenants upon these lands and yet they were never included in the purchases from the friars. So only 388,000 acres of land altogether were purchased. The gentleman will remember, for it is an historical fact, that Mr. Taft was sent to Rome by President Roosevelt to negotiate the purchase of all the holdings of the friars in order to remove the agrarian question, which was supposed to stand in the way of pacification. It was particularly important that the occupied lands should be purchased, and yet several estates that were thickly settled were not included in the purchase, whilst several large estates sparsely settled were purchased.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman state the greatest number of acres that have been sold and transferred to one corporation?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. That has all been gone over and explained this morning and is in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES. The San Jose estate of 56,200, which was sold to Messrs. Havemeyer, Senff, and Welch. It was this sale which aroused the indignation of the Filipinos and led, as I have stated, to the investigation ordered by this House.

Mr. FOWLER. What does the gentleman's bill propose as to the limitation of the number of acres to be sold?

Mr. JONES. The bill which I had the honor to introduce and which we are now considering provides in effect that the land shall not be sold to individuals in excess of 40 acres or to corporations in excess of 2,500 acres, the same limitations which apply to the sale of the 60,000,000 acres of public lands in the islands. The committee can see no reason why these very rich lands should be sold in larger quantities than the 60,000,000 acres of other lands in the islands.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman think it is good policy to sell real estate to corporations?

Mr. JONES. I have already stated in reply to a question by the gentleman from Texas that I thought it would be the better policy to confine all sales to bona fide settlers, but it is not the purpose of this bill to change the organic law as to the holdings of public lands by corporations. This bill has but one object.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think it is good policy to limit real estate holdings of corporations to that which is necessary to carry on the business connected with the corporation?

Mr. JONES. I do; but the people who wish to go into the sugar business contend that it requires at least 5,000 acres to supply a sugar centrales.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BEALL of Texas). The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman be given time to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the gentleman from Virginia may conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I think it was stated in the papers that the Attorney General of the United States wrote an opinion approving that sale and saying that it was legal.

Mr. JONES. The Attorney General did write an opinion to that effect; but, as I have said, it was not a very carefully considered opinion. His apologists said he did not know when called upon to give his opinion that the question was "loaded." However, in justice to him, I will say that he subsequently undertook to fortify this opinion in another and more elaborate paper.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The information that I want is under what law or provision of law was the matter referred to the Attorney General of the United States to write an opinion on.

Mr. JONES. Somebody in the Insular Affairs Bureau asked him to give an opinion, I suppose.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Did it come up in a legal way, or was it voluntary?

Mr. JONES. I think he was told that it was very desirable to sell the friar lands to individuals in quantities in excess of 40 acres and was asked if it could not be legally done. I do not at this moment recall exactly how the question happened to be raised. My recollection is that some New York lawyer representing Messrs, Havemeyer, Senff, and Welch, requested the Insular Affairs Bureau to procure the opinion of the Attorney General. These people were not willing to purchase the San Jose estate until they had secured from the Attorney General an opinion to the effect that the Philippine Commission or the bureau of public lands had the right to sell it. In other words, they wished to know if the limitations of section 15 of the organic law applied to the friar lands.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I suppose the Insular Government has the power to manage those affairs itself, without reference to the Government at Washington—that is, with reference to the sale of those lands.

Mr. JONES. No. The Philippine Government is authorized to prescribe the terms upon which the public lands shall be sold, but it can not sell public lands to individuals in excess of 40 acres to one individual, and the committee is of the opinion that the same is true of the friar lands. Indeed, the Philippine Commission at one time was of this opinion. In 1904 it enacted what is known as the friar-lands bill, in which it was provided that the friar lands should be disposed of under the limitations specified in section 15; that is to say, in quantities not in excess of 40 acres to individuals. Subsequently, in the year 1908, this act of the Philippine Commission was so amended as to permit sales of any number of acres of friar lands to individuals. It is the contention of the Committee on Insular Affairs that this act was in contravention of the organic law, and therefore of no validity.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman has yet explained under what provision of the organic act or any other law the Attorney General of the United States got jurisdiction to pass upon the validity of that sale.

Mr. JONES. I will endeavor again to do so. Some people in New York, as I have said, sent a man named Poole out to the islands to look for sugar lands. When he got out there he learned that corporations engaged in agriculture could not hold more than 2,500 acres of land. He was advised, however, that it was the opinion of the bureau of public lands that the friar lands could be sold to individuals in any quantities. He reported these things to his principals in New York, and they in turn referred the question to the Insular Affairs Bureau in this city. The Attorney General was then asked for his opinion.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. By whom?

Mr. JONES. Just a moment. If I remember correctly, the attorney for Messrs. Havemeyer, Senff, and Welch came to this city and conferred with the Chief of the Insular Affairs Bureau, who, at his request, agreed to secure an opinion from the Attorney General.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Would not that question in the first instance come up to the law officer of the Insular Government in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. JONES. It did come up to him and he also passed upon it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. In what way did he pass upon it?

Mr. JONES. As the Attorney General of the United States did.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. In the same way?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Did he refer the question over to the Attorney General of the United States?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Did he refer it over to Gen. Edwards?

Mr. JONES. No. The Attorney General was requested by the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs to give his opinion. This request was made, as I have already stated, at the instance of an attorney who represented the New York capitalists, and who was not willing to advise his clients to purchase the San Jose estate in the absence of an opinion from the Attorney General of the United States to the effect that such a sale would be legal. It is perfectly clear to my mind that this attorney realized that there was grave doubt as to the right of the Philippine Government to sell any part of the friar lands in excess of 40 acres to one individual.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] has refreshed his memory, as it occurs to me, very accurately concerning how it came about that the Attorney General gave this opinion. I sought to refresh the gentleman's memory about that as preliminary to asking a question which might cause him to refresh his memory in respect to another subject, which is this—I speak now from a visit that I made to the Philippine Islands, talking with the various factions there, as well as for a time being a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs and hearing the testimony—the gentleman has spoken about the protest of the Filipinos against the sale of great bodies of land. Now, I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the same objection to the sale of large quantities of land applies to the sale of any lands to Americans. Is it not true that the opinion of the representative from the Philippines was that as long as Congress allowed the lands to be sold to the Americans just so long was the postponement of independence, because the United States would be interested in protecting the capital invested there by her citizens, and so is not the objection to the sale of small quantities of land to Americans equal to the sale of large quantities of land for that reason and for that reason alone?

Mr. JONES. I can not assent to the gentleman's proposition as a whole. There is a strong sentiment in the Philippine Islands against the sale of these lands in large quantities to citizens of the United States because the Filipinos believe that such sales will operate against granting them their independence. They are opposed to selling them in large bodies, either to natives or to foreigners. They hold that it is to their interest that the lands shall be held in small tracts by actual settlers.

One of the Philippine Commissioners to this country does hold that under the language of section 15 of the organic act no public lands can be sold to aliens. In this opinion he is by no means alone. Indeed, it seems to me that the language of section 15 is too plain to admit of any doubt upon this point. It is in these words:

> That the Government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized and empowered on such terms as it may prescribe by general legislation to provide for the granting or sale and conveyance to actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of the said islands such parts and portions of said public domain, etc.

Now, mark these words: The public lands can only be sold "to actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of the said islands." It seems to me that language could hardly be made plainer than this. I do not believe that any sale of these lands to an alien is a valid sale, but that question is not involved in this bill. The sole purpose of this bill is to prevent the sale of the friar lands in large quantities to anybody, native or alien. But before I leave this subject I wish to state that the report which was presented to the House at the last session of the Sixty-first Congress, signed by Messrs. Madison, HUBBARD, and DAVIS, maintains that the Pihilippine Government is without authority to sell an acre of the public lands to an alien. The opinion expressed in this report, which was written by the late Judge Madison, is based upon the language of section 15, which I have quoted. So that the Philippine Resident Commissioner, whose views have been referred to, is in good company when he contends that the Philippine Government is acting without warrant of law in selling the public lands to foreigners.

Mr. BUTLER. That construction is possible.

Mr. JONES. I firmly believes that is the correct one.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the title to these lands sold would not be good, I suggest.

Mr. JONES. It is not good for the reason they have been sold to aliens and for the additional reason that they have been sold in quantities in excess of the limitations prescribed by the act of Congress. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] took the ground in the separate report which he alone signed that resort should be had to the courts to settle the legal questions in dispute. It is not clear just how such a proceeding could be instituted, but Congress can and, in my judgment should, legislate upon the subject and settle it definitely and for all time.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman having just mentioned that I signed a separate report, will he allow me a moment?

Mr. JONES. I think I correctly stated the gentleman's position.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Except that I elaborated a little bit to the effect that I believed it was in the interest of the Filipinos to have those lands sold to Americans. I do not believe that the lands ought to be sold to anybody else, because they were under our protection, and the more lands sold to Americans the more protection the Filipinos would get, and I referred to the fact, if not in that report on some other occasion, that on my visit to the Philippines and seeing how much money we had expended and the great benefit to the Filipinos coming from the money we were expending from year to year there, that the Filipino was getting the benefit of. I talked to the greatest insurrecto over there—Dr. Dominico Gomez—and in talking with him in favor of independence, he said that they wanted independence, they wanted nationality, whether it was in 15 or 20 years, which was but a minute in the life of a nation, and I agreed with him, and I want to say in this connection, because I have an engagement and have to go, so the gentleman will pardon me for saying this: That I said to him, "Then you want our troops to get right away from here and we turn the government over to the Filipinos?" He said, "Yes; that is what we want."

"Well," said I, "suppose that Japan or some other nation would come down here and want to take our place?" "Oh," he says, "we do not want that done." Then I said to him, "You just want to call us up on the telephone and have our Army come back over here and take it away from this nation that had taken it from you?" He said, "As great a Nation as you are and as much as you have done for us, certainly that is what we expect you to do."

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Dr. Dominico Gomez from whom he has quoted is not the Dr. Gomez who was expelled from the Philippine Assembly?

Mr. BUTLER. Was it not about right?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I believe this man does spend a large part of his time in jail, but he represents that class of the Filipinos that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] is now talking for.

Mr. JONES. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Filipinos who constitute the membership of the assembly expelled him from that body.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Is that the one they call Dr. Gomez?

Mr. JONES. Yes. I wish to say further in reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] that there are two political parties in the Philippines—one the Nacionalista and the other the Progresista. Of the elective assembly 15 of its members belong to the Progresista Party and the remainder belong to the Nacionalista Party. One of the Resident Commissioners to this country is Mr. LAGARDA and the other Mr. QUEZON, the former being a member of the Progresista and the latter a member of the Nacionalista Party. Mr. LAGARDA was nominated by the Philippine Commission and Mr. QUEZON by the assembly. They and the parties which they respectively represent are opposed to the sale of the friar lands in large bodies. There is no division of sentiment among Filipinos upon this subject.

Dr. Dominico Gomez is an agitator. He does not belong to either party. He is in no sense a representative Filipino, and he is almost the last Filipino whose views should be quoted upon any subject relating to the Philippines.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. He is a party all by himself?

Mr. JONES. He is a party all by himself and always has been.

Mr. KINDRED. I have not been able to follow the full explanation of the bill as presented by the gentleman, but I would like to ask if the chief object of the bill is not to restrict the sixty millions or more of the public lands in the Philippines to the same conditions as regards their sale as the organic law now prescribes for the sale of other lands to aliens?

Mr. JONES. No; it is quite the reverse of that. The organic law restricts the sale of the 60,000,000 acres of public lands. It does not permit those lands to be sold to individuals in excess of 40 acres or to corporations in excess of 2,500 acres.

My contention and that of the Insular Affairs Committee is, that the friar lands are subject to the same restrictions as the public lands, and that they can not be sold in larger quantities than the so-called public lands can be sold.

Mr. NYE. The gentleman has kindly explained that four times.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I have repeatedly made this statement.

Mr. KINDRED. I thank the gentleman. Did I understand him to quote Mr. QUEZON, representing a majority from the Philippines, as in favor of this measure?

Mr. JONES. He is in favor of this measure. I do not care to take up any more of the time of the House in explaining this measure. No good is to be accomplished in discussing the purely legal questions involved. As to them there is wide difference of opinion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] holds one view and I hold another and a very different view. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] seems to agree with the construction which I place on the language of section 65. It is for Congress to decide what its intention was in respect to the disposition of the friar lands as that intention is expressed in section 65.

I believe that the Philippine Government, as I have endeavored to point out, has violated the organic act in two important particulars. This bill seeks to make the law so plain as to one of them that there can be no room for honest doubt in the future.

Mr. TILSON. May I interrupt the gentleman there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. JONES. Yes. I shall be very glad to yield for a question.

Mr. TILSON. Does it matter, so far as this House is concerned, whether one construction of that section is correct or the other? Is it not rather the business of this House to determine whether or not such restrictions as are now applied under section 15 of the law should be applied to the 388,000 acres of the friar lands?

Mr. JONES. I agree entirely with the gentleman.

Mr. TILSON. It simply makes the 388,000 acres of the friars' lands subject to the limitations that apply to the 60,000,000 other acres of public lands in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. JONES. That is just what it does. I am of the opinion, as I have said, that those restrictions now apply to the friar lands. Other gentlemen think differently. There are some who think that the 40-acre limitation is too small, but that is a question with which this bill does not attempt to deal.

Mr. TILSON. Is not the only question that we are to pass upon here the question, Is it right and proper that we should fix that limitation upon the disposition of the remainder of the friars' lands?

Mr. JONES. Yes. In effect that is the only question. And yet some gentlemen may be influenced in passing upon that question by what they believe the law now to be. There are some who think the limit should be raised from 40 to 80 acres, and others believe that 100 acres would not be too much to sell to a single individual. I doubt if anybody agrees with the Philippine Commission that it should be permitted to sell all that remains of the friar lands to one individual.

Mr. COOPER and Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and then I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. MANN. Where you change the words "public property" to "public domain," is that a matter of form, or a matter of substance? [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. I had not thought it was a matter of substance; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] did not agree with me, and therefore I propose to substitute the word "domain" for the word "property."

Now I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. As to the number of acres that ought to be sold to an individual or to a corporation, was it not testified by competent witnesses that an acre of those friar lands, the richest in the islands, is as good as 2 acres, or even more, in this country in productivity?

Mr. JONES. I think the testimony was to the effect that it was equal to 4.

Mr. COOPER. Yes; some of them said that it was as good as 4.

Mr. JONES. I think the Governor General of the islands, the Hon. William H. Taft, testified that it was equal to 4 in productivity.

Mr. COOPER. Yes. So that by selling the Filipino 40 acres of that friar land you sell him practically the equivalent of 160 acres of our average farm lands. And those witnesses testified also, as did Mr. Taft, now President, that 40 acres is more than the average Filipino would cultivate the year round.

Mr. JONES. On that point I should like to say that the committee report quotes from the annual report of Secretary Worcester, who is not only a member of the commission, but is the secretary of the interior, and these lands are all administered under his direction. This is what he says in his report:

> The average area of homestead applied for has been a trifle more than 11 hectares, which is doubtless far more than the average man will be able to cultivate.

Secretary Worcester, who practically administers the friar lands, and who wants to sell them in quantities of 100,000 acres if he can find a purchaser, says in his report that the average area of homesteads applied for has been a trifle more than 11 hectares, 5 hectares less than the maximum limit fixed in the law.

Mr. COOPER. Eleven hectares would be about 30 acres.

Mr. JONES. Which, according to Secretary Worcester, is more than the average man will be able to cultivate. It seems to me that if what Secretary Worcester says in his report is true, there is no need of raising the limit above what it now is.

There has been a good deal of discussion as to what was the understanding of the various members of the Committee on Insular Affairs as to the meaning of the language of section 65 when the act of July 1, 1902, was being considered in the House. At that time the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] was the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, and I wish to ask him if it was not understood when section 65 was framed that it made the sale of the friar lands subject to the limitations fixed in section 15? He had much to do with framing the bill and no Member of Congress is better qualified to say what it contained. But for the fact that there has been considerable controversy over this, I would not appeal to the gentleman to state what his understanding was.

I maintain, and have always maintained, that it was the understanding of the Committee on Insular Affairs and of Congress that the limitations which applied to the public lands applied also to the friar lands. I have before me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the speech which I made when the bill was before the House. I was at that time the ranking minority member of this committee, and I spoke at considerable length upon that bill. I wish to call the attention of the House to the language which I used at that time in reference to this very matter. I said then:

> What I particularly desire that the House shall know is this: These friar lands are the finest in the Philippine Islands, most of them lying adjacent or near to the city of Manila. The commission has authority to issue bonds and buy them, and after they are purchased they are to be held and treated as other public lands.

I made that statement on the floor of this House. It was not challenged by the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs. It was not questioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], who is now the ranking minority member of the committee. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], who, as I have said, was then chairman of the committee, if there was ever a doubt expressed as to the correctness of the construction placed by me upon the language of section 65? I would like to ask him if that was not the construction which he placed upon it, and if it ever occurred to him that it was susceptible of any other construction?

Mr. COOPER. Of course, Mr. Chairman, that was the understanding. I never so much as imagined that anybody would claim that there was any different understanding until I read what Gen. Edwards, of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, said. And yet he himself had urged upon me many times that there ought to be an enlargement of the area fixed by the statute of 1902, and I had refused many times. I said I did not believe that there ought to be larger amounts of land sold by the Philippine Government to any individual or corporation. Not only this, but anybody who knows the object of those sections of the statute which relate to the friar lands and to other public lands in the islands will understand that that must have been the intention of the committee. The object of the statute was to prevent the exploitation of the islands, and therefore the act of 1902 provided that where land was held in such large quantities by corporations, associations, religious bodies, or by individuals as to be detrimental to the welfare of the Filipino people, then the Philippine Government could take it by condemnation proceedings. Does anybody suppose that Congress intended the law to authorize the Philippine Government to take 400,000 acres of land away from the friars because it was a larger amount than ought to be held by an association and afforded opportunity for exploitation, and then at the same time intended to authorize the Philippine Government to turn around and sell that land to an individual, Mr. Poole, who went there as the agent for Mr. Havemeyer, a nephew of the great king of the Sugar Trust? Does anybody suppose that? No member of that committee ever in my hearing suggested such a thing. When I get an opportunity to talk about this I think I shall be able to show that some individuals of prominence in this Government understood the intention of Congress and the law of 1902 itself to be as I have indicated.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. The committee saw fit to put a limitation of 2,500 acres on the amount of land that a corporation could acquire from any source. Why did not the committee see fit to put a limitation upon the amount of land that an individual could acquire?

Mr. COOPER. They did, and under any fair construction of the statute that will be so held——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Sixteen hectares.

Mr. COOPER. If any man is so technical as to forget the reason for which the statute was enacted, the abuse that it was intended to suppress, if he will be so very technical as to thwart the intention and spirit of the law, he will contend that it does not prohibit the selling of more than 16 hectares to an individual.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. That is exactly what was done, and the records show that these large tracts of land were not purchased by corporations but by individuals.

Mr. COOPER. Any fair construction of the statute will agree with that put upon it by Mr. Moorefield Story, of the city of Boston, in replying to the Attorney General. Mr. Story, one of the leaders of the Boston bar, declares that a proper construction of the statute—any construction which would carry out its intent and do away with the evil which it was intended to suppress—must mean that an individual could not buy 200,000 acres from the Philippine Government, while a corporation was limited to only 2,500 acres, because there can be as great exploitation by selling an individual 200,000 acres as by selling it to a corporation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is laboring under a misapprehension as to the position of his colleague [Mr. MORSE]. Section 15 does limit the amount that the individual can purchase to 40 acres.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. From the Government.

Mr. JONES. From the Government; it also limits the amount which a corporation can purchase from the Government to 2,500 acres. Section 75 declares that every corporation engaged in agriculture shall by its charter be restricted to the ownership of not to exceed 2,500 acres of land, no matter how or from whom acquired.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] wants to know why the organic law did not provide, or rather he claims that the organic law ought to have provided, that no individual could acquire more than 16 hectares of land from any source. His position, as I understand it, is that no individual in the Philippines should be permitted to acquire from any source more agricultural land than he can actually cultivate.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. No; I think some limitation should be put on the amount of land that an individual could hold. I can see no reason for preventing a corporation from holding 2,500 acres of land and then permitting the stockholders and directors to acquire 100,000 acres of land. I insist that as long as that was not put in the organic act——

Mr. JONES. Acquired how?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Acquired in any way.

Mr. JONES. I understand the gentleman's position. Under the law no agricultural corporation can hold more than 2,500 acres. The gentleman thinks the law should also limit the holdings of an individual. The gentleman's position is that the law should limit to the holdings of the individuals as well as corporations, no matter from whom those holdings are acquired.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. My position is that this law which you now bring before the House ought to make that provision.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman complains of the organic law, because it does not limit the holdings of individuals in any lands.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I had very little to do with the framing of the organic law. I imagine one of the reasons of those who drafted the law for not so limiting the holdings of individuals, was that no such provision would stand the test of the courts. I doubt if Congress has the power to say that one individual can not acquire more than a certain number of acres of land. It can say how the public lands shall be disposed of, and it can say that corporations which it creates shall be restricted by their charters in the amount of their land holdings, as is done every day in the States, but I seriously doubt if Congress can say that no individual in the Philippines can hold more than 100 acres of land. There are many individuals in the Philippines who owned large tracts of land long prior to American occupation. Can the Government confiscate their lands? The Government can say, "We will not sell more than 40 acres of public land to an individual." I doubt, however, if it is competent for Congress or the Philippine Government to say to a Filipino who owns 40 acres of land that he can not sell it to a neighbor, because that neighbor already owns 5 acres; that he can only sell him as much as 35 acres.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will pardon me, I want to say that I did not understand the query of my colleague. I thought he was speaking of the law of 1902—the organic act. What I meant to say was that the organic act, properly construed, prohibited the Philippine Government from selling to an individual more than 16 hectares of land.

Mr. JONES. The contention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is exactly mine, that the restrictions of section 15 apply to the friar lands as well as to the public lands.

He can not understand any more than I can why sales of the 60,000,000 acres of the public lands should be restricted to 40 acres to individuals, and the commission be given a free hand in the sale of the comparatively small amount of friar lands. There are now only some 125,000 acres of these lands undisposed of, and why there should be such a desire on the part of the commission to sell them over the universal protest of the Filipinos in large tracts to aliens is incomprehensible to me.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Can the gentleman see no difference between imposing conditions upon the sale of 60,000,000 acres of land belonging to the Government of the United States, and which the Government of the United States permits the Philippine Government to sell for its own benefit, and putting restrictions upon lands which were private lands when we acquired the Philippines and which the Philippine people purchased with their own money and which this bill would prevent them from selling?

Mr. JONES. I can not. The public lands, as well as the friar lands, are the property of the Philippine people. Every dollar realized from their sales goes into the insular treasury. If it is a bad policy to permit a Filipino to own more than 40 acres of public lands, it must be equally bad to permit him to own more than 40 acres of friar lands. Surely the gentleman will not contend that the wisdom or the unwisdom of an individual owning more than 40 acres of Government lands should be made to depend upon how the Government acquired those lands.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want the gentleman to understand that I am not approaching this subject in any factious spirit. The fact is I do not know but that I shall vote for the gentleman's bill, but I want him to make out the strongest case that he has; and, therefore, to refresh the gentleman's recollection again in respect to the fact that a judge over there, contrary to the opinion of the Attorney General, in determining one of the cases before him decided, as I understand, exactly as the gentleman's contention here, to which decision the gentleman has not yet referred. I think it is the strongest feature he has in his case at the present time.

Mr. JONES. I think that is true. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to this decision.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. In that same connection the gentleman, I think, did not answer my question as to what was the consensus of opinion over there with reference to the inevstment of American capital, and I desire to call his attention to the question I asked of Mr. QUEZON upon that subject and his reply thereto. It is as follows:

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. After all, Mr. QUEZON, is it not a fact, in your judgment and the opinions you have been able to get from others, that the greatest objection to the investment of American capital over there is that it will postpone the independence of the islands?

Mr. QUEZON. Without any question. In that connection I should state that the material development of the Philippine Islands would be better promoted if Congress were to declare the intention of the United States toward the Philippines. The trouble is that the Filipinos think they are going to get independence to-day or to-morrow or in a few years, while some people believe they will never get it, and the Filipinos are, in fact, in some way or another trying to prevent any more investments in the islands until Congress has declared the policy of this Government with regard to the Philippines.

Is there any better opinion which has been given to the committee than that of the representative here of the Filipino people, Mr. QUEZON?

Mr. JONES. I think not, and therefore I have said as clearly and as frankly as I could that there were two reasons, as I understand it, why the Filipinos are opposed to the sale of these lands in unlimited quantities. One is that they fear if American capital shall be largely invested in Philippine lands that capital will oppose granting them their independence. They believe, and not without reason, that the exploitation of their country by American capitalists will postpone indefinitely, if not forever, the granting of their independence. That is one reason why the Filipinos are opposed to the sale of the friar lands of the Havemeyers and Senffs of the United States in large bodies. Another reason is that they believe that the ownership of the lands by native farmers in small bodies, rather than by a few foreign capitalists in immense tracts, will be promotive of the very best interests of the islands. They do not believe that the financial conditions of the islands are such as to make it necessary, or even desirable, to sell the remainder of the friar lands in large bodies to alien capitalists. Of the $7,000,000 bonds, $5,000,000 are provided for by a sinking fund. The remainder can easily be taken care of out of the general revenues of the islands. Both of the Resident Philippine Commissioners to this country, representing the two political parties of the islands, and voicing the universal sentiment of the Filipino people, oppose the selling of these lands in large bodies, and Congress should respect their wishes. The only people in the United States who have any interest in this question are a few men who desire to purchase these lands in order to produce the 300,000 tons of sugar which are admitted to our markets free of duty.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania first and then to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. OLMSTED. I merely wanted to ask the gentleman this question. The gentleman from Virginia has referred to the other Resident Commissioner, Mr. LEGARDA. I would like to ask when and where he ever declared in favor of restricting the sale of these friar lands to 40-acre tracts?

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman that I have had a great many conversations with Mr. LEGARDA on this subject. I know, therefore, that he feels the deepest and keenest interest in the passage of this measure, and that he holds that the exploitation of these lands will be most detrimental to the best interests of the Filipino people. I will state further, and I am not betraying any confidence, that within the last few weeks Mr. LEGARDA has said to me that rumors have reached him to the effect that notwithstanding the statement of the Secretary of War that no further lands would be sold in large quantities until Congress had acted, the commission is actually disposing of them in large bodies. He is much exercised over the matter.

Mr. OLMSTED. If that is true, the gentleman has kept his anxiety very private.

Mr. JONES. He has not from me.

Mr. OLMSTED. He has not appeared before the committee.

Mr. JONES. No; he did not. He was not asked to appear before the committee.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman tell the committee how much of these lands can be disposed of by the commission; how much of the 125,000 acres can the commission dispose of as a commission? That is, how much of this land is in non-Christian territory so that it may be within the disposition of the commission alone?

Mr. JONES. I can not; the bulk of it is in the Christian provinces. I understand from Mr. QUEZON that there is a considerable body in Nueva Viscaya, one of the non-Christian provinces and that the remainder is in Christian provinces.

Mr. TOWNER. The large bulk of the 125,000 acres that are to be affected by this bill are within the Christian provinces, is it not?

Mr. JONES. The largest body is in the non-Christian province of Nueva Viscaya, amounting to something less than 50,000 acres.

Mr. TOWNER. And the commission have no power to dispose of any lands that are within Christian provinces? Is not that true?

Mr. JONES. When I speak of the commission, I mean the secretary of the interior, under whose department the land laws are administered. He is a member of the commission and I presume acts with the approval of the commission. The interior department disposes of the lands wherever situated.

Mr. TOWNER. Of the Filipino people themselves——

Mr. JONES. Let me explain.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. The legislature has enacted two or three acts relating to the disposition of the friar lands, and the secretary of the interior and the director of public lands have been disposing of them under what I conceive to be an erroneous interpretation of the organic law. The bureau of public lands is a bureau of the interior department, and it disposes of the public lands wherever those lands are located, whether they be in Christian or non-Christian provinces. The Philippine Commission legislates exclusively for the non-Christian provinces. The Philippine Government is such a complicated and anomalous affair that we are very apt to become confused in discussing these matters. I think the act of the Philippine Legislature passed in 1908, is in conflict with the provisions of the act of Congress of 1902, and I have the best of reasons for believing that it was passed by the assembly under a misapprehension. As soon as the assembly learned that the secretary of the interior was proceeding to sell the friar lands to individuals in tracts in excess of 40 acres, it passed an act repealing the act of 1908 and asked the concurrence of the commission in its action. The commission flatly refused to repeal the act, and the secretary of the interior, who happens to be a member of the commisson, proceeded with great haste to sell to three men—Havemeyer, Senff, and Welch—56,200 acres of this land. It was this transaction which brought about the congressional investigation and which caused me to introduce this bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I understood the gentleman to say, on the authority of th Resident Commissioner [Mr. QUEZON], that some of this unoccupied friar land is within non-Christian territory.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I said in Nueva Viscaya.

Mr. OLMSTED. There is none in that province.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is correct. I recall that it is in the adjoining Province of Isabela. If the gentleman will examine the minority report written by himself, he will find that in Isabela Province there are 48,622 acres of the undisposed of 125,000 acres, and Isabela is a non-Christian Province. It makes no difference, however, where the friar lands or any other public lands are located, since they are all under the management of the director of lands, subject, of course, to the supervision of the secretary of the interior.

Mr. OLMSTED. How long does the gentleman think it will take to sell those lands in 40-acre tracts?

Mr. JONES. I do not know that they can be sold between this and doomsday. I do know, however, that the Filipino people are a unit in their opposition to their sale in large bodies to the American Sugar Trust. I know that they prefer paying out of the general revenues of the islands the sum now due upon their purchase, and I think it would be a crime for the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself to sell their lands to any set of men over their earnest protest. I believe that the law of Congress has been flagrantly violated, and unless Congress acts, and acts quickly, every acre of the friar lands undisposed of will pass forever out of the hands of the Filipino people. In my judgment it is the duty of Congress to prevent this.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] does not agree with me as to my interpretation of the law, and therefore nothing is to be gained by discussing the legal proposition. The practical question now before the House is, Shall we permit the interior department of the Philippine Islands to dispose of 125,000 acres of friar lands to foreign capitalists for purposes of exploitation when they are appealing to us not to do so? Shall we assume that one man, the secretary of the interior, knows better what is for the interest of the Filipino people than they do themselves? Surely, if it is good public policy not to permit the exploitation of 60,000,000 acres of public lands of every description, it ought to be good policy to prevent the exploitation of the rich friar lands.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] a few moments ago——

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question on which I desire information?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Does the gentleman know where these bonds are held?

Mr. JONES. I do not.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is it not a matter of some importance, inasmuch as the gentleman must realize that these bonds can not be paid off unless these lands are sold?

Mr. JONES. Why does the gentleman say they can not be paid off unless these few acres of friar lands are sold? Nobody ever supposed at the time of their purchase that they could be sold for enough to retire the bonds issued for their purchase.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I will say this: I believe it is very well known that the internal as well as the import taxes there will not be able——

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about that. I will say to the gentleman that the Philippine Government has expended in the last few years out of the general revenues $11,000,000 for improving harbors and in the prosecution of other public works. All this, of course, in addition to the ordinary expenses of government.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That has got to go on.

Mr. JONES. But you must concede that they are fully able to retire these bonds if they wish to do so.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Are they retiring these bonds? Are they building up a fund for that purpose from their natural resources? Are they not depending for the paying of these bonds upon the sale of the lands? That is the question.

Mr. JONES. Not at all. A sinking fund, which now amounts to $3,000,000, has been already provided. The remaining $2,000,000 will be paid out of the proceeds of such of the 125,000 acres of friar lands as can be sold in 40-acre lots to individuals or 2,500-acre parcels to corporations. The funds thus derived must under the law be devoted to the payment of the friar bonds. If a sufficient quantity of these lands can not be sold in this way in time to meet the bonds when they mature, then any residue can be met out of the general revenues, which are and will continue to be ample for that purpose. The law provides that the proceeds of the 60,000,000 acres of public lands shall be paid into the insular treasury and then can be used to pay off the friar bonds. But if not a single acre of the friar lands or the public lands are ever disposed of under the present restrictions as to acreage and occupancy and not a dollar is realized from those sources toward paying off the friar land bonds, the Filipinos are entirely willing to tax themselves to raise the necessary funds. The object sought to be attained in purchasing these lands was to take them out of the hands of three great landlords and to place them in those of many independent native farmers. It was never dreamed that they were to be sold to representatives of the American Sugar Trust.

Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman wants to ask me a question as to some feature of the bill, I shall yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia, before taking the floor, if he has any intention of cutting off debate?

Mr. JONES. I have no such intention. I do not know how long they want this thing to run. I want it to run for a reasonable time.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I will not take the floor at this time. I would like to have the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I confess to a feeling of something akin to reluctance to discuss this question, and I am reluctant to discuss it because it is a question about which one ought to have a greater amount of information than, unfortunately, I have yet been able to acquire. I am unable, however, to join in the ideas that have been suggested by the gentleman in his remarks in favor of this bill however much I might agree with the principle for which he assumes to contend. I think there is no man on the floor of this House that would desire the exploitation of the Philippine Islands. I judge that proposition can be considered as settled. But it is, after all, a very great assumption to say that this bill will prevent the exploitation of the Philippine Islands. In the first place, it can apply only to about 125,000 acres of land. There are in the Philippine Islands subject to disposition over 60,000,000 acres of land. This bill would affect less than one-fourth of 1 per cent of all the lands of the Philippines, and to speak of it as a measure to prevent the exploitation of the lands in the Philippines seems to me to be hardly justified by the facts. These lands are a remnant of the purchase that was made by the United States Government, or, rather, by the Filipinos themselves, of the friar lands. It will not be necessary, nor will it be of any particular advantage, in this discussion to explain the grounds on which that purchase was made. There is no difference, however, of opinion that it was a wise policy. Everyone admits now that they ought to have been purchased, that it was an act of wisdom on the part of the General Government to take the initiative, and that it was acquiesced in by the Filipinos themselves in their own interest.

These lands were purchased by the issuance of bonds by the Philippine government. These bonds are to be paid by the sale of the lands; and, as has been stated by the chairman of the committee, already five millions of the $7,000,000 has been paid from the proceeds of the lands already sold, so that but $2,000,000 of the debt yet remains to be paid.

It is believed, and I think with justification, that the sale, if it can be made advantageously, of the remaining lands in the Philippines will wipe out the remainder of the debt.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly. Does the gentleman desire to ask a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I do, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. TOWNER. I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman does not want to leave the impression that the payment of the bonds is dependent upon the sale of the lands?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I did not intend to leave such an impression as that.

Mr. GARRETT. Perhaps the language is susceptible of that construction.

Mr. TOWNER. I did not desire to create any such impression. It was the expectation, I will say, that the sale would wipe out this indebtedness. I think it was, perhaps, even more than that, although I am not certain in regard to that.

However that may be, Mr. Chairman, these lands, by the very terms of the act itself, were to be disposed of by the Philippine Government. It was claimed that although they were thus to be disposed of by the Philippine government under the terms of the act they must then be considered as a part of the public domain and subject to the organic law which disposed of the public domain which was held by the United States. However, as the law is interpreted by the attorney general of the Philippine Islands and by the Attorney General of the United States, a different view was taken by them. They held that these lands never were in fact the property of the United States; that they did not become a part of the property of the United States; and that therefore they were not subject to the limitations upon the disposition of the lands of the United States that had been imposed by the organic law.

However that may be, whether that was a correct interpretation or not, I do not care to discuss, and it would be useless for us now to take the time of the committee to discuss it. We now have the proposition before us as to whether at this time this Congress will pass a limitation by this proposed law upon the Philippine Government itself regarding the disposition of these lands.

Under the law as it now stands the Philippine government has the right to dispose of these lands in its own interest and as it may deem best. The proposition we are now considering is to take away from the Philippine government the right to dispose of these lands as it may consider best for its own interest.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit me there?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood that the power to sell these lands was vested entirely in the commission and not in the Philippine Government.

Mr. TOWNER. I can only answer that by saying that the terms of the law directly prescribe that these lands shall be disposed of by the Philippine government itself, and that is the only power now in existence that can dispose of them. The Treasury Department can not dispose of them. The Government of the United States can not dispose of them. The President himself can not dispose of them, because he has not the power to make nugatory this law, which says who shall have the power to dispose of these lands.

I want to quote the language of the law in regard to that. The language of the law is—

> That the lands thus purchased shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the government of the Philippine Islands, and may be held, sold, and conveyed or leased temporarily for a period not exceeding three years after that acquisition by said government on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act.

Now, it has already been determined by the Government of the United States that there were no limitations that applied to the sale of these lands, so that the law as it now stands and as it has been interpreted so far is that the Philippine government as at present constituted has the absolute and sole power of disposing of this little portion that is remaining from the lands secured from the friars.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit right there?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. All that portion of the land that lies in the non-Christian Provinces is, of course, disposed of exclusively by the commission, because for those Provinces the commission is the Philippine government, is it not?

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman is probably correct upon that proposition, and I have just conferred with the Delegate from the islands——

Mr. JONES. I should like to say that the gentleman is in error as to that. They are not disposed of under any law enacted by the commission. They are being sold by the director of public lands. The law under which these lands are being disposed of was enacted in 1908, I think, and after the first legislature had convened in 1907. These lands are being administered by the bureau of lands, which is a bureau of the interior department.

Mr. GARRETT. Since the gentleman refreshes my memory as to that, I think his statement is correct. I think the legislature has control of those lands in the non-Christian Provinces.

Mr. JONES. The legislature has enacted all the recent laws on the subject.

Mr. TOWNER. I am under obligation to the chairman of the committee for calling attention to that fact, which of course only strengthens my position. I was going to say that all the lands remaining unsold now, however, are in the Christian Provinces, as I am informed by the Delegate [Mr. QUEZON].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman appears to seek to emphasize the insignificance in quantity—I believe "insignificance" is the term he used once or twice—of these so-called friar lands. That being true, does not the gentleman think it is rather singular that this Government enforced the sale of those lands from their owners, the orders of friars, to the Philippine government at a cost of $7,200,000?

Mr. TOWNER. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the gentleman is perhaps better aware than I am that it was not altogether a question of the lands and the importance of their acquisition, but other questions entered into the problem—questions that were of vastly greater importance than the mere acquisition of the lands themselves.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not want to trench upon the gentleman's time, if it is very limited, but I want to say to him that one fact with reference to the acquisition of these lands appears to have been established as clearly as any other, and that is that after their taking over from the original owners they were to be broken up into small holdings among the natives of the islands.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman is perhaps correct about that; I do not know; but I would say that already the great bulk of these lands have been so disposed of.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit one further suggestion, I shall not interrupt him any more. That suggestion is this: An additional and, in my judgment, very substantial objection is that the sale of these lands in such large tracts—56,000 acres, for instance, in one body—would unquestionably establish a precedent which would lead to the sale not only of those lands but of the public lands in large quantities, and therefore it was desirable, from that consideration, to stop such a policy at its very inception.

Mr. TOWNER. I sympathize with the idea suggested by the gentleman. I can hardly believe, however, that there can be legitimate arguments used upon that proposition with regard to the disposition of these friar lands. They constitute a separate and entirely independent question.

Certainly, it is important that these lands be sold, if they can be sold, to the best possible advantage, for the purpose of paying off the debt of $2,000,000 which was incurred for their purchase. These people themselves, the Philippine government, ought to be allowed to dispose of this small fragment left of 125,000 acres of land, if they possibly can, so that they can pay the $2,000,000 that they now owe for these lands.

Mr. COOPER. The burden of that interest, and of providing a sinking fund, to do away with that $7,000,000, is of little importance in comparison with the selling of 125,000 acres to Mr. Poole, who was the agent of the Havemeyer and the possible selling of one hundred thousand and odd acres to somebody else. It is vastly important that sales in such large amounts to one purchaser should not be made and that the islands should not be exploited in that way. The $7,000,000 and the payment of the interest is nothing at all compared with the evil of selling 100,000 acres of land in those islands in one tract to a single owner.

Mr. TOWNER. I sympathize with the gentleman's point of view. The only place where I would part company with him would be in this: The gentleman believes that if we allow these people themselves to dispose of these lands, if they want to, that will lead to an exploitation of the Philippine Islands. I decline to think that is in any way necessary or in any way inevitable.

I decline to think it would be even an encouragement to that. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me a most singular proposition that these gentlemen now make. They are unwilling to allow the Philippine government to dispose of its own lands in its own way, and yet these gentlemen bring in a bill here for Philippine independence and want them to be allowed to do everything that an independent nation may do. They are unwilling to allow them to have the privilege of disposing of 125,000 acres of their own lands as they see fit, and yet they want to give them the power of disposing of 60,000,000 acres of land as they see fit. It seems to me such a position is hardly consistent.

Mr. Speaker, it should be remembered that already the law is in existence, which the Filipinos themselves can not change, forbidding any corporation from owning or acquiring more than 2,500 acres of land. The gentleman speaks of the acquisition of land by the Havemeyers, or the Sugar Trust. It may be that is an evil. It may be that there ought not to be any sugar plantations, or any sugar raising on American soil. I understand that is the position of gentlemen on the other side who believe that sugar ought not to be raised, either on plantations in the South or on farms in the West.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman that a great deal of sugar is being raised in the Philippine Islands, particularly in the island of Negros. The Philippine Commission is even aiding in the establishment of sugar mills in non-Christian Provinces.

Mr. TOWNER. While the gentleman is on his feet I want to ask him a question.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not true that while the individuals, Mr. Havemeyer and others, have acquired this land, it has been only slightly improved—that is, that they have gone only to a slight extent in using the lands?

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether they have as yet manufactured any sugar, but they have expended a great deal of money preparing to do so. I may say that last year and year before last, since the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill went into effect, we have been admitting sugar from the Philippine Islands into this country free of duty. They have sent to this country many thousands of tons of sugar, not one ton of which was raised by the Sugar Trust or anybody connected with the Sugar Trust, but by the Filipinos.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to make a statement in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman. Horace Havemeyer, who is one of the purchasers of the San Jose estate, testified before the special committee appointed to investigate the American Sugar Refining Co. last autumn that they had at that time 500 acres under cultivation and were moving rapidly, taking in more and more, as fast as possible.

Mr. TOWNER. That is about 1 per cent of the purchase.

Mr. GARRETT. That would not be quite 1 per cent, but they are moving rapidly.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman will permit, reference has been made to these lands as having been purchased by the Sugar Trust. These men were at one time connected with the Sugar Trust, but they are now the bitterest opponents of the Sugar Trust, and have no stock or interest in it.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not sure whether that is true or not of Mr. Senff, but it is true of Mr. Havemeyer.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Senff is dead.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, all these questions are somewhat remote except as they may bear on the exploitation of the Philippine Islands by great corporations. It seems to me that we are justified in saying that is prevented by the present law, which, in so far as any affirmative action on the part of the General Government is concerned, limits the holdings of corporations to 2,500 acres of land, and that limitation applies as well to the friar lands as to the public lands.

It is suggested by the chairman of the committee that this law may be evaded, but, Mr. Speaker, may we not leave these things to the Government of the Philippine Islands itself? The United States is represented there by an upper chamber acting in their interest.

The Filipinos themselves are represented by the Philippine Assembly, which is composed exclusively of their own representatives, with knowledge presumably of their interests, acting presumably patriotically. It may certainly be safely assumed that no action will be taken by the present Philippine Government that shall be opposed to the interest of the Philippine people, and yet this limitation is sought to be placed upon their action regarding their own land in their own interest.

I suppose gentlemen could imagine that the upper branch of the legislature might be induced, through some sinister influence, to act in opposition to the real interests of the Filipino people, but certainly such an accusation could not be brought against the lower house of representatives, which is composed exclusively of their own people who have certainly their own interest at heart. Can it not be left to them to say what shall be done with their own property in their own interest? It has been suggested by the chairman of the committee that this is, after all, only a question of the interpretation of the law. I do not quite follow him upon that proposition. As I understand it, the object now is to fundamentally change the existing law. As the law now stands, these lands may be disposed of by the Philippine government, and it is proposed by this affirmative act to take away from them that power with regard to these especial lands.

Gentlemen themselves advocate the doctrine of local self-government. They support the contention that the Filipinos are now able to take care of themselves. They favor such action as will give to them now the status they say they are entitled to by their intelligence and understanding of their needs. They have attained, gentlemen assert, the place where they ought to occupy an independent position among the nations of the world. It is proposed immediately to give them almost an autonomous government, to give them almost independent power, to promise them after a brief period absolute independence. By such act they are to be given the power to do everything that a government can do, subject to a very few exceptions, and yet now here, preliminary to that broad act and in contravention of its spirit, it is suggested that we can not leave to them the right to dispose of even 125,000 acres of their own land as they may deem for their own best interests. So, Mr. Chairman, this bill does not appeal to my judgment as being wise or necessary or one really in the interest of the Filipino people. [Applause.]

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give the two classes of lands in the Philippine Islands the same status. For the purpose of illustrating the object of this bill we will assume that this House represents one of the Philippine Islands. Here on this side of the House is a body of land that is known as the public lands, and on that side is a body of land that is known as the friar lands. There is a line dividing the two boundaries or tracts of land. The quality of the two tracts or boundaries is exactly alike; they are adapted alike for all agricultural products and purposes. Different administration is now applied to these two tracts of land. On that side of the line the sales are limited to 40 acres to individuals and 2,500 acres to corporations, while on this side of the line the land is sold without limitation as to acreage. Then either one of two things should be done—the limitation of 40 acres and 2,500 acres should be taken off that body or tract of land on that side, or the limitation of 40 acres and 2,500 acres should be placed upon the tract of land on this side. Both of these methods of disposing of these lands can not be right. I think the limitations of 40 and 2,500 acres, respectively, is the right thing.

The argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] that it is the intention of this act not to permit the Filipinos to regulate their own affairs is, in my opinion, entirely erroneous and misleading, because neither of the present methods of administration give the Filipinos control. We are the ones controlling it now and we should exercise this control to the best interest of the Filipinos. The United States Government is the guardian of the Filipinos, and we are undertaking to administer this trust or charge. A great deal has been said upon this floor on former occasions about what has occurred in Alaska, what has been attempted with reference to the vast resources in the Territory of Alaska. We have undertaken to place limitations upon what may be held and owned there by persons and corporations. If it is right to conserve the resources of a country that we own and control and expect to continue to own and control, it is wrong for us as the guardian of an alien people to do unto them what we are unwilling to do with our own.

There is a feature connected with this proposition that strikes me very forcefully. We are at present witnessing an insurrection in Mexico and our troops are standing guard on the border line to protect American property, if it becomes necessary. The acquisition of these hundreds of thousands of acres in the Philippine Islands by American capital sooner or later is going to bring about the same situation in the Philippine Islands that we are confronted with to-day in Mexico. It may be all right and well enough for American capital to have the right to go where it wants to go, but I regret in the very first instance that the United States Government has remained in the Philippine Islands as long as it has, and the longer we assume control of the islands the more difficult it is going to be to get away. The more American capital that goes in there, the harder it is going to be to divorce the United States Government from its control of those islands. I do not believe that the American people will be very enthusiastic over trouble that is superinduced by the Sugar Trust and the Tobacco Trust. I am in favor of the Filipinos governing their own property. It is their birthright. The resources of the Philippine Islands are almost exclusively confined to agriculture. There are some minerals, there is some timber, some coal, and some other resources than those named, but I reassert that the main resource and dependence is that of agriculture. Necessarily this land is of the very best quality, because it is adapted to the cultivation and raising of sugar. In the exercise of our guardianship we should not strip them of the resources that they eventually must depend upon in order to maintain a government of their own. If we take away from them everything that they have of value and then permit them to establish a government, there will be very little of value left to be governed.

There will be very little of value that the Government must have in order to support and maintain that government, so that, as I stated in the beginning, this bill is intended to place these two classes of land in the same status, and, by limiting the amount that can be sold to corporations, it will conserve their principal resource. If there was a failure to use the exact language and apt expressions in the enactment of the law to control the friar lands, the purpose of this bill is simply to correct that error, if there was an error. It is my opinion that the statement made by the chairman of the committee is correct, namely, that the decision of the Attorney General construing the act relating to the friar lands was not warranted by the language contained in the act. Endeavoring to exercise that prudence that ought to control us in legislation affecting the Philippines, I believe that the enactment of this law will be a material advantage to and is in the interest of the Filipino people. [Applause.]

I yield such time as the gentleman, Mr. QUEZON, may desire.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this bill—H. R. 17756. The people of the Philippine Islands are unanimously in favor of it.

As the chairman of the Insular Committee has already explained to the House the purpose of the bill, I shall confine myself mainly to meeting the arguments propounded against it.

If I understand it correctly, the contention of our opponents may be summarized as follows:

That inasmuch as under the law, as it now stands, the right and power to dispose of the friar lands is vested in the Philippine Government, to pass this law is to encroach upon a right already granted by Congress to the Philippine Government; that such encroachment is unwarranted, inasmuch as the United States is represented in that Government by the Philippine Commission and the Filipino people by the Philippine Assembly, and therefore it may certainly be safely assumed that no action will be taken by said Government that shall be opposed to the interests of the Filipino people.

That to curtail the powers already intrusted to the Philippine Government, wherein the Filipino people are represented through the Philippine Assembly, is to jeopardize the theory of the ability of the Filipino people to govern themselves, which theory is that maintained by the supporters of the bill.

That the disposition of the friar lands is purely a matter of business and no great question of public policy is therein involved; that it should be borne in mind that these lands were purchased with the proceeds of bonds issued by the Philippine Government, which bonds are to be paid with the sale of said lands, and therefore the Philippine Government ought to be allowed to do what in its judgment will facilitate the sale of these lands.

That to restrict the sale of the friar lands as stipulated by this bill is to make these lands unsalable, which means the imposing upon the Filipino people of the burden of paying from general taxation the money spent in their acquisition, which Congress has no right to do.

Much as I respect the opinion of our learned opponents, I am constrained to disagree with them.

THE BILL MERELY REENACTS SECTION 65 OF THE ORGANIC ACT.

The contention that this bill is taking away from the Philippine Government a right or power already granted to it by Congress can not, I believe, bear the light of a proper discussion. The paragraph of section 65 of the act of July 1, 1902, referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], reads:

That all lands acquired by virtue of the preceding section shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the Government of the Philippine Islands, and may be held, sold, and conveyed, or leased temporarily for a period not exceeding three years after their acquisition by said Government on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act.

This section is by no means controverted by the bill now before the House. There is no provision in the bill which deprives the Philippine Government of the ownership of the friar lands, nor is there any proposition that the sale, conveying, or leasing of these lands be made by any government or entity other than the Philippine Government. The bill simply states that the Philippine Government in selling said lands must not sell them in excess of 40 acres, or 16 hectares, to individuals, and 2,500 acres, or 1,024 hectares, to corporations, which we contend is one of the limitations and conditions referred to in the section quoted.

As the chairman of the Insular Committee [Mr. JONES] already stated, those who took a leading part in the framing of the act of July 1, 1902, so-called organic act for the Philippines, always understood that the language "subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act," in the section quoted, meant that the unoccupied friar lands could not be sold in excess of 40 acres to individuals nor more than 2,500 acres to corporations.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], who at the time of the passage of this act was chairman of the Insular Committee, has confirmed Mr. JONES's statement. The gentleman from Wisconsin said, in effect, that it was the understanding when the organic act was passed by Congress that the sale of friar lands was restricted by the same limitations imposed upon the sale of public lands, and that nobody ever dreamed, until the officials of the Philippine Government and the Attorney General of the United States construed the law otherwise, that the Philippine Government was ever granted by Congress the right of selling these lands in any quantity whatever as it may see fit.

The bill is not, therefore, writing a new law in the statute books of the Philippine Islands, but merely reenacting a law already passed by Congress whose provisions were not properly construed and enforced by the Philippine Government. In other words, it is my opinion that we add nothing to nor take anything from the organic act of the Philippines, and I hope it will be so understood, when this bill becomes a law, that Congress is not amending the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," but that it is merely construing and expressing the original purpose and meaning of that act.

I believe, however, with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], that it is useless to discuss now the merits of this contention, for whatever may be the opinion of Congress about it, the contention can only be properly decided by the courts. I shall not, therefore, take up any more time of the House in discussing whether or not the Philippine Government trespassed its constitutional limitations when it sold 55,000 acres of the Mindoro estate to some stockholders of the Sugar Trust.

Let us admit, for the sake of argument, that the bill now before the House is taking away from the Philippine Government a right already given to it by Congress—the right of selling the friar lands as it deemed wise, without restrictions of any kind whatever. Even then, though I am an advocate, on general principles, of as much autonomy for the Philippine Government as we could secure—even then, I repeat, I would rather see that right taken from the Philippine Government than allow it to sell the friar lands in such tracts as it did in the case of the Mindoro estate.

The statement that "it may certainly be safely assumed that no action will be taken by the present Philippine Government that shall be opposed to the interests of the Filipino people, because they are represented in that Government by the lower house of the legislature, which is composed exclusively of their own people, and who certainly have their own interests at heart," is misleading; and the assertion that this bill is inconsistent with our theory that the Filipino people are capable of taking care of themselves is a conclusion reached without proper analysis of the actual facts.

Gentlemen know that the Philippine Government is not entirely, or even mainly, in the hands of the Filipino people, but, on the contrary, the legislative power is almost wholly vested in the Philippine Commission, a body appointed by the President of the United States without the consent or the advice of the Filipino people. Even after the inauguration of the Philippine Assembly, for all practical purposes, this commission has continued to be the Government of the Philippine Islands. Not only does it share with the assembly the legislative power of that Government, but in some instances it exercises that power without the concurrence of the assembly, and the fact that it is also the executive gives it a decided preponderance of control in the administration of the affairs of the islands.

Actual experience shows that the Philippine Assembly, in so far as the general policy of the Philippine Government is concerned, as well as in all important matters, has exercised but a negative power. That is, when the Philippine Commission has purported to enact a law which, in the opinion of the assembly, was not beneficial to the interests of the Filipino people, the lower house has been able to prevent the enactment of that law; but it has not been able to change in the least the general policy adopted by the commission before the inauguration of the assembly, though in its efforts to change it the assembly was faithfully complying with the will of the people. The general government of the islands, for instance, is now as expensive as it was before the inauguration of the assembly and the officials as extravagantly paid as they were, all attempts on the part of the assembly to reduce the cost of the Government to a reasonable figure having been of no avail, because of the opposition of the commission.

We have another good illustration of this fact in the very question of the sale and disposition of the friar lands. The assembly wishes to sell the occupied lands to their tenants on easy terms and reasonable price; the commission insists upon not reducing the high prices exacted for them. The assembly does not want to sell the unoccupied lands in bulk; the commission is determined to so dispose of them; and in both cases the pleasure of the commission controls.

When the assembly received complaints from the tenants of the friar-land estates that the sale price of their holdings demanded by the Government was too high, the assembly went into a careful and detailed investigation of the matter, and it found that the complaints were warranted by the facts.

It passed a bill lowering those prices, and the commission rejected the bill, with the result that the tenants have to pay a high price for their lands if they do not want to be dispossessed of them. When the assembly learned that the Government sold the Mindoro estate of 55,000 acres to Mr. Poole, a representative of some stockholders of the Sugar Trust, the assembly proceeded immediately to pass a bill limiting the sale of friar lands to individuals to 40 acres and to corporations to 2,500 acres. This bill was approved unanimously by the assembly, both political parties concurring therein, and despite the fact that all the native press approved of it and the people from all parts of the archipelago adopted resolutions indorsing it, and that the matter was purely the concern of the Filipino people themselves, because it was their own land, purchased with their own money, the commission defeated the bill.

In view of these facts it can hardly be asserted that because the Filipino people are represented in the Philippine Government by the lower house of the legislature, the Philippine Government will take no action that shall be opposed to the interests of the Filipino people. If the assembly had more power in the Philippine Government than it has now, or if both houses of the Philippine Legislature were elected by the people, then it could "certainly be safely assumed that no action will be taken by the Philippine Government that shall be opposed to the interests of the Filipino people."

THE ASSEMBLY IS FOR THE BILL.

The unjustifiable obstinacy of the Philippine Commission regarding the disposition of the friar lands gave the assembly no other alternative than to appeal to Congress, requesting this body to make a declaration to the effect that the limitations imposed by the organic act on the disposition of public lands are also applicable to the friar lands, specifically those contained in section 15 of said organic act; and, moreover, that the sales heretofore made of the friar lands in violation of the limitations contained in section 15 and other provisions of the organic act be declared null and void, unless they be subsequently authorized by an act of the Philippine Legislature. The request was made by means of two resolutions, the first adopted on December 6, 1910, and the other on the 18th of January, 1912. The first resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Philippine Assembly do, and hereby does, declare, without entering upon a discussion of the legality or illegality of the matter, that the sale in large and unlimited tracts of the so-called friar estates to great corporations for their exploitation is contrary to the will, the sentiments, and the interests of the Philippine people; and, further, that the assembly do, and hereby does, state its desire that the sale of said estates to persons other than those who were tenants of the same prior to June 3, 1908, and of all other property acquired by the Government subsequent to the treaty of Paris be made subject to the limitations contained in section 15 of the organic act of the Philippine Islands relative to the public lands acquired by the United States in the Philippine Islands under the treaty of peace with Spain; and

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Congress of the United States, the Philippine Commission, and the honorable Secretary of War.

Adopted December 6, 1910.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by the house on December 6, 1910.

RAMÓN DIOKNO,
Secretary Philippine Assembly.

The second resolution was cabled to me by the secretary of the assembly in an extract form, and which translated into English is as follows:

MANILA, January 18, 1912.

QUEZON, Washington:

Assembly approved to-day a resolution an extract of which is the following:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the assembly that public interest requires that a declaration be made by Congress to the effect that the present limitations on the sale of public lands is applicable to the sale of friar lands, and more concretely all the limitations specified in section 15 of the organic act. The rights acquired by the tenants of friar lands at the time of the passage of act 1120 of the Philippine Legislature should be respected.

"Resolved further, That it is the wish of the assembly that all transactions made up to date in regard to friar lands in excess or in contravention of the limitations imposed on the sale of public lands be declared null and void unless they are subsequently approved of by the Philippine Legislature.

"DIOKNO."

So that, Mr. Speaker, if the bill we are discussing takes away from the Philippine Government certain rights and powers already conferred upon it by Congress, as the gentleman from Iowa believes, it is taking those rights not from the Filipino people, not from their representatives, the Philippine Assembly, but from the Philippine Commission; because the bill would merely write into law what the Philippine Assembly itself would have enacted if it had its own way in the Philippine Legislature.

By this bill Congress would merely concur with the assembly in passing an act that the commission refused to concur in. This leads to the conclusion that the advocates of this bill, instead of being inconsistent with their theory that the Filipino people are capable of governing themselves, as our opponents assert, are logical when they lend their support to this bill, because they are merely sustaining the views of the assembly on the grounds that the Filipinos know what is best for them and ought to be allowed to do what they think is best for them.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUEZON. I will.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Philippine Assembly passed an act, in which the commission refused to concur, to affix the limitations of the public-land act to the friar lands?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Was that done since the investigation in the Sixty-first Congress and the agitation over the sale of the Mindoro estate?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wish to ask the gentleman whether that fact harmonizes very well with the pretense that was made by the heads of the insular government in the friar-land investigation that the limitations in the friar-land act were removed by the Philippine Assembly with the full knowledge and understanding that it would permit the sale of these estates in bulk, and that it was done for that very purpose?

Mr. QUEZON. Certainly not.

A QUESTION OF PUBLIC POLICY INVOLVED.

But it is said, Mr. Speaker—and this is the contention of the Philippine Commission—that the disposition of the friar lands is merely a business proposition, and no great question of public policy is therein involved; that the only thing to be considered is this: That, in round numbers, $7,000,000 worth of bonds have been issued to purchase these lands, and the Philippine Government ought to be allowed to sell said lands in such manner, without restriction, as in its judgment will reimburse it the price of the bonds.

While those who support this view on this floor may honestly believe so, they are nevertheless wrong. If to recoup the money spent for the purchase of these lands is of such paramount importance, if the Philippine Government can not afford to lose one cent on this transaction, the Government ought not to have attempted to buy these lands. But it was not until lately that we heard such a contention made. Everybody knows that when the Philippine Commission pressed upon Congress the law for the purchase of these lands, it said that in the friar lands "a great question of public policy was involved, the most vital and important in the Philippines." The agrarian question was involved—the system of absentee landlordism to be eradicated. Let us see how much the "business proposition" was concerning President Taft, then Governor General of the Philippines, when testifying before the committees of the House and Senate. He said "that the injury rendered to the welfare and tranquillity of the Filipino people by the ownership of vast estates was demanding the purchase of the friar lands, if every cent paid for them by the Government was to be lost." These lands were not, therefore, bought as a business enterprise; they were not acquired with the object of making money out of the transaction, nor even with the hope of recovering it; but they were acquired, notwithstanding the fear that the Government might lose, if not all, at least a large part, of the amount spent in their purchase.

They were bought simply because the Philippine Government and the Filipino people had informed Congress that the concentration of vast areas of lands in the hands of a few concerns was detrimental and injurious to the community, and Congress, at their request, sought to remedy this serious evil.

To use the very language of the act authorizing the Philippine Government to purchase these lands—

> The Government of the Philippine Islands is authorized to acquire, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain "any lands, easements, appurtenances, and hereditaments, which on the 13th day of August, 1898, were owned or held by associations, corporations, communities, religious orders, or private individuals, in such large tracts or parcels and in such manner as, in the opinion of the commission, injuriously to affect the peace and welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands."

The words quoted of section 64 of the organic act give a very plain idea of the cause for which the Philippine Government was authorized by Congress to purchase or acquire by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the friar lands, to wit, that said lands were owned and held in such large tracts or parcels that it was injurious to the peace and welfare of the Filipino people. Now, to permit the sale of these same lands in the same large tracts as they were owned by the friars lays Congress open to the charge that it did not dispossess the friars of their lands because the ownership of vast estates was injurious to the people, but because it intended to turn these lands over to other concerns in unlimited quantities. (See report of Madison.)

THE FILIPINOS PREFER TO PAY THE BONDS THAN TO SELL THE FRIAR LANDS IN BULK.

We are told, Mr. Speaker, that to place the limitations provided for in the bill upon the sale of friar lands is to make these lands unsalable, thus imposing upon the Filipino people the burden of paying from the general taxation of the islands the bonds issued for the purchase of said lands, which Congress has no right to do. This argument should appeal to every Member of this House, and it would certainly have appealed to me if this view was taken by the Filipino people themselves. In other words, if the Filipino people were unwilling to pay from general taxation the proceeds of the bonds issued for the purchase of the friar lands, and the limitations that we are trying to place upon the sale of friar lands were to result in making these lands unsalable, it would be unjust thus to indirectly force the Filipinos to take from their pocket the money to pay the bonds. But such is not the case. I am authorized to say, Mr. Speaker, and standing here now I do say, that the Filipino people would rather pay from general taxation, and if necessary from voluntary contributions, every cent that has been spent by the Philippine Government for the purchase of these lands than to see them sold to individuals or corporations for exploitation. [Applause.] And the reason for this, Mr. Speaker, if I am to express it in a few words, is to be found in the following paragraph, which I quote from one of the minority reports accompanying this bill:

> We do not want vast landed estates created there. We do want a thrifty, hardy, land-owning body of citizens. Patriotism, thrift, and love of country does not exist in the breast of the peon who resides on a great sugar plantation, but rather thrives in the heart of the man whose feet are firmly planted in his own land.

[Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Who signed that report?

Mr. QUEZON. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE].

No Filipino could have expressed in more beautiful, as well as emphatic and concise, language the consensus of the people of the islands as to the policy with regard to the disposition of their lands. The few million dollars that the Filipinos have to pay to take up the bonds issued for the purchase of the friar lands are of no consequence whatever as compared with the social evils resulting from the ownership of large tracts of lands in the Philippines. We would be merely spending a few million dollars to insure the existence in the Philippines of a thrifty, hardy, land-owning, patriotic body of citizens.

It is to be regretted that the Philippine Government, and by this I mean the Philippine Commission, in administering the friar lands, judging from what they have done and what they apparently pretend to do, have entirely lost sight of the real nature of the problem that they have at hand. If they only had in mind the purpose aimed at originally by themselves, and always by Congress and the Filipino people, in buying these friar lands, there would have been no congressional investigation of the interior department of the Philippines, and a great deal of the dissatisfaction and discontent among the people of the Philippines would have been avoided.

It is, I admit, a worthy ambition to save the Filipino people from having to pay the bonds issued for the purchase of the friar lands with the general funds of the islands by trying to sell these lands as speedily and on as profitable terms as possible, but the Philippine Commission, and particularly the secretary of the interior, have gone beyond their province in their desire to accomplish that end, and, what is worse, they have taken a course that, in my opinion, will be more harmful, if pursued, to the Filipino people than the evil they sought to avoid.

It is hard to conceive, Mr. Speaker, how there could be any doubt as to the wisdom of the bill before the House. Even supposing that the organic act failed to put upon the sale of friar lands the limitations imposed upon the sale of public lands, this bill ought to pass. As repeatedly said, this bill simply puts the friar lands, which are the property of the Philippine Government, on the same footing and treats these lands under the same conditions as the public lands, which are also Government lands. This bill merely frames a consistent policy to be applied alike to all kinds of Government lands, for there is no reason whatever for pursuing a certain course in one instance and different course in others. If the policy of preventing the ownership of immense tracts of land in the Philippines is a sound one, it should be enforced by the Government whenever it is within its power to do so to all lands of a like character. Congress has already decided that such a policy, in the case of public lands, is a wise and sane one; therefore it should be also applied to the friar lands. If, on the other hand, the ownership of friar lands in large tracts is not considered inimical to the public welfare, why should it be in the case of public lands?

CONGRESS MUST ACT.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] said that there is not a man on the floor of this House that would desire the exploitation of the Philippine Islands, and that this proposition can be considered as settled. If that is the case, and I hope it is, then there ought not to be exploitation of the friar lands any more than of the public lands.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman's colleague take the position on this question that the gentleman does?

Mr. QUEZON. I would rather have him answer the question. I think he does.

But gentlemen say that to allow the sale in bulk of friar lands will not bring about the exploitation of the islands. This explains how gentlemen who are just as earnest as we are in preventing the exploitation of the islands are, however, against this bill and in favor of allowing the Philippine Government to sell the friar lands as it sees fit.

The real truth is, Mr. Speaker, that, while on the surface in discussing this bill the House seems to be considering only the advisability of allowing the Philippine Government to sell the friar lands in any quantity whatever, at the bottom, when you analyze the facts which have given birth to this bill, you will find that the House is now being called upon to either confirm its policy, so far pursued, of preventing the exploitation of the Philippine Islands or reversing it. I do not mean to say that if you reject this bill, thus permitting the Philippine Government to proceed with the sale of the friar lands as heretofore made, that said government would consequently proceed to sell the public lands in the same way or manner; but I do mean that the rejection of this bill will have the effect of encouraging the Philippine Commission in its effort to extend to at least 15,000 acres the limitation upon the sale of public land. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] said a few moments ago that while he was chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, Gen. Edwards, tried his best to get the organic act amended so as to allow corporations as well as individuals to purchase larger tracts of land, not only of the so-called friar lands, but also of the public lands, than they can legally do now.

I may add to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin that I am aware of the fact that the same efforts have been made during the chairmanship of the Insular Committee of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], and I betray no secret in making this statement, for the Bureau of Insular Affairs in so doing has only been endeavoring to accomplish what was recommended by the Philippine Commission in its official reports. It is a recorded fact that beginning not very long after the organic act was passed by Congress, the Philippine Commission has been persistently urging the amendment of the provisions of that act which imposed limitations upon the sale of public lands, and when they did not succeed they have—on the ground that it was within their province to amend the law with regard to the disposition of friar lands—repealed the limitations imposed on the sale of these lands. It is therefore a reasonable assumption that such action was merely the entering wedge to the intended general policy of selling all kinds of land in bulk. The significance of the bill now before the House is that, by its passage, Congress will reaffirm in an unmistakable manner its policy regarding the ownership of public lands in the Philippine Islands. It is absolutely necessary for Congress, through the passage of this bill, to inform the Bureau of Insular Affairs as well as the Philippine Commission, once and forever, that it is useless for them to try to amend the organic act so far as it concerns the sale of Government lands. [Applause.]

Thus you will reassert that Congress is fully alive to the responsibilities which have been thrust upon it as a guardian and trustee of the natural resources of the islands, and that it will allow nobody to exploit those resources under any pretext, for they are, under God, the natural inheritance of the Filipino people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be understood as impugning the motives of the Philippine Commission or of the Bureau of Insular Affairs in trying to repeal the provisions limiting the sale of Government lands in the Philippine Islands. Far from me the idea that they purposely intend to allow the exploitation of the Philippines and to deprive the Filipino people of lands which will surely be needed by their posterity for homes and for farms. I do not believe that there is any member of the Philippine Commission, and less would I believe that my friend, Gen. Edwards—although he said that in case of war he would leave the Philippine Islands absolutely unprotected—I do not believe that they, or any of the officials connected with the Philippine administration, have the slightest desire of deliberately doing harm to my people; but I do believe that their policy is wrong and that if pursued, if not immediately, in the long run and perhaps at a not distant future, it will prove injurious to the welfare and prosperity of my country.

DANGERS OF THE SO-CALLED DEVELOPMENT.

Their views are that the sooner the natural resources of the Philippines are developed, the better for the Filipinos themselves; that the great need of the islands is capital, and that all possible means must be employed to bring into the islands large amounts of capital; and that one of these means is to permit the purchase, ownership, and holding of great land estates. Perhaps it is true that the land laws of the Philippines as enacted by Congress are preventing, or at least retarding, the development of the islands, but it is so hard to draw a line between development and exploitation that we can never tell, except from results, and then it would be too late, where development ends and exploitation begins. Everyone familiar with the operations of great corporations knows what they will do if they have a chance, especially when said corporations are engaged in developing sugar plantations or mines in a new country.

In the long run they monopolize the wealth of that country and deprive the large majority of the inhabitants of their just share of such wealth. This being so, the Filipinos would rather keep on the statute books of the Philippines their present land laws than to permit, under the pretense of development, the concentration in a few hands of the resources of their country. The Filipinos are too far behind modernism in political economy to believe that a kind of development that will enrich the few at the expense of the many means the prosperity of the people at large. They are too backward in civilization to approve of the monopoly of their soil by powerful corporations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the American people through this Congress, and what I am about to say comes from the bottom of my heart, that the Filipinos are not opposed to American capital. In fact, we are not opposed to any capital coming into and properly developing the islands. We are not living in the fifteenth century, and therefore we do not want to isolate ourselves from the rest of mankind. We are living in the world of to-day, and we want to see our country prosper and develop. [Applause.] We welcome and invite the help of everybody. But we also want to guard ourselves from any danger of improper operation of capital. The peril is not a mere fancy, but experience in this and other countries shows that while capital is necessary for the prosperity of the people, it is also frequently productive of great evils if not properly controlled. The echo of the struggle in this country between the American people and the trusts has gone beyond the seas and reached the ear of the Filipino people. We have learned that, in spite of the fact that the American people are self-governing and that they elect the legislative, judicial, and executive branches of their Government, they have not as yet succeeded in throwing off the heavy yoke of great corporate capital. What, then, can the Filipinos hope for in the undoubtedly forthcoming struggle between them and these powerful corporations in the Philippines if these are given a free hand in their operations in the islands, considering the fact that the Filipinos have no control of their government, which is in the hands of an alien people?

In point of fact, Mr. Speaker, we do not have to exert our minds in guessing what would be the outcome of such a situation, for we have already some instances of it in the Philippines, and this even though our corporations are merely caricatures of trusts. The companies in Manila which own and operate the electric cars and electric light and telephone, which companies, by the way, are practically monopolies, because under the circumstances no other companies for years to come will be engaged in the same business, are giving service to the public as they please, and no attention whatever has ever been paid by the Government to the complaints of the people. It has been investigated by an expert and demonstrated beyond question that the electric-light company, for instance, is charging an outrageous price for the use of its current, and the authority of the Philippine Government to regulate the price has never been exercised against this company.

THE POLITICAL STATUS OF THE PHILIPPINES UNDETERMINED.

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to discuss a question which, by itself, would fully explain why the Filipino people are slow and why they want the Government to be slow in the attempt to bring into the Philippines American and other foreign capital.

The future of the Philippine Islands is still hanging in the balance; the morrow is as yet shadowed by the clouds of uncertainty. Twelve years of American occupation have not as yet answered the question constantly asked by the Filipinos with anxiety akin to prayer. What is there beyond the horizon? The policy of Congress with regard to the Philippines has been so far indefinite, noncommittal. From the very title of the act of July 1, 1902, which created the present Philippine Government we are informed that the government therein created is merely a temporary government, the title of the act being "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

Though leaders of the Republican Party, ex-President Roosevelt as well as President Taft and many others, have invariably stated that the ultimate purpose of the United States is to give the Philippines independence, and though the Democratic Party by its last three national platforms has committed itself to the policy of granting the Philippines independence as soon as a stable government has been established there, the fact is that every attempt to induce this Nation to express its policy authoritatively—that is to say, through Congress—has been of no avail so far. In spite of this seeming discrepancy between words and deeds, the Filipinos have, however, taken at their face value all these utterances. We have put our faith unqualifiedly in these declarations, and the support that this Government has been and is receiving from the Filipinos is due wholly to their conviction that the government they now have in the islands is provisional, that it is merely temporary, and that the more enthusiastic support it receives from the people the sooner it will be substituted by a Philippine independent government.

While this mental process is going on in the minds of the Filipino people and no effort is being made from any authorized source in this country to correct that impression if it is wrong, there are many American officials in the Philippine Government and in the United States who, in their dealings with the islands and their people, are proceeding upon the theory that there is no real desire on the part of this Government ever to relinquish its control over the Philippines. Working under this, I hope, misapprehension, or perhaps deliberately trying to bring about a condition of affairs that will force this Government to retain the islands, these officials are endeavoring to do everything in their power which, in their opinion, will facilitate and insure the accomplishment of that end.

This, Mr. Speaker, explains satisfactorily the unyielding attitude of the Philippine Commission and of those who support its policy of inducing to come into the islands as much American capital as possible. They know that those in this country who invest their money in the Philippines in lands, in factories, in mines, or in any other enterprise will struggle and do their best to defeat any legislation purporting to recognize Philippine independence, not precisely because of their lack of confidence in the ability of the Filipino people to govern themselves and to protect the rights and properties established in the islands, but because their investments will be safer under the joint guaranty and protection of both the Philippine Government and the Government of the United States. Let me illustrate, Mr. Speaker: Suppose some one has a note indorsed by two multimillionaires, although either one of them, on his own responsibility, could at any time make good that note, do you believe that the creditor would release either of the indorsers on the ground that one is solvent? Certainly not. This would exactly be the position of the investors in the Philippines. Their investments, under the present arrangements, would be under the protection and guaranty of both the Philippine Government and the Government of the United States, which Governments are alike accountable for any injury or loss that they might suffer in their enterprise. Backing the Philippine Government there is at present the immensely wealthy Government of the United States. Do you believe, Mr. Speaker, that any one investor would ever, if he could prevent it, permit the United States to escape from its responsibility?

For this reason if we had now, or should we have, before any definite policy regarding the future connection between the Philippines and the United States is officially announced, many American capitalists interested in the Philippines, the inevitable result would be the permanent retention of the islands. In asserting this I do not for a moment, Mr. Speaker, question the honesty of the utterances made in this country by representative men, by men occupying very high positions in the Government, that the intention of the people of the United States, that the desire of Congress is to give the Filipinos their national freedom, but I do appreciate to its full extent the outcome of a situation, should it take place, when the 8,000,000 of the Filipino people on one side, without a single vote in Congress, without voice in the National Government of the United States, asking and urging their independence, are met on the other by the strenuous opposition of men in this country, powerful on account of their social position, powerful on account of their money, and having representation in all branches of the National Government. And those who are trying to induce American capital to come to the islands know better than I do what will be the result of such a struggle—the sure defeat of the holy aspiration of the Filipino people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid such a condition of affairs and Congress being thereby forced to do what it would otherwise not do, we want, before allowing anybody to become interested in any shape or manner in the development of the Philippines, to be informed as to whether or not the Philippines are forever going to be a colony of the United States, a State of the Union, or an independent and free nation. [Applause.]

It is not only due to the Filipino people, but it is also fair to the investor. It is due to the Filipino people because they are entitled to know their future; they are entitled to be informed what the ultimate fate of their country will be. It is fair to the investor, because he should know beforehand all the circumstances and conditions under which he is to invest his capital. Perhaps it is true, as some people have affirmed, that should the United States Congress declare that the Philippines will be free in a not distant future, such a declaration would postpone the development of the islands, because capital would not care to go where a new government is about to be established. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe myself that such would be the case, but, if so, I am perfectly frank to say that, eager as the Filipinos are to see their country develop commercially and otherwise, they would rather wait, they would rather not have capital in the islands than, because of having it, see their freedom postponed. [Applause.]

Let it be understood, Mr. Speaker, so as to disabuse the mind of any candid person that we struggle for our liberty not precisely because we dislike, much less hate, American domination, no; but because we love Philippine independence. [Applause.]

STATEHOOD IMPOSSIBLE.

It is true that if the Philippines were to become one of the States of this wonderful Nation, as at one time was proposed by a political party in the Philippines, the Federal Party, this would confer upon the islands just as much freedom as is enjoyed by any other State of the Union, which is the climax of freedom; it is also true that American citizenship is a citizenship of which any man under heaven can be proud. But, Mr. Speaker, everybody on the floor of this House knows that such a thing as Philippine statehood is but a dream. Let alone that, because the Filipinos, considering themselves a people distinct from any other, constituting a nationality of their own, the idea appeal to them, the American people for its own sake will never of linking their destiny with that of any other country does not consider for one moment the proposition of admitting the Philippines as a State of this Union. Differences in race, customs, interests, and thousands of miles of water which separate both countries are insurmountable obstacles to Philippine statehood. The idea of making Americans out of the Filipinos should appear to any sane person as utterly impossible. This, perhaps, could only be accomplished, if at all, by the emigration to the islands of at least triple the number of Americans as there are Filipinos to-day, so that in the course of several generations the Filipino race and people would be absorbed by the Americans. But nature stands firmly against this course. While our country is so charming and so beautiful that to live and die therein is a blessing, and while there is room for at least forty million more inhabitants, our tropical sun is so inconsiderate of the white people that it will never permit the Americanization of the islands. The Tropics, Mr. Speaker, can not be and never will be the country of the white man.

This being the case, to make the Philippines a part of the Union as a State would mean to bring into the Union, forming an integral part of it, with the same rights and privileges as the other States, a country inhabited by a people who constitute by themselves a separate and distinct entity, entirely foreign to the people of the United States and having with them no community of interests. What would be the result of this unnatural adjustment?

To begin with, you would have on the floor of this House representatives of a country distinct and apart from your motherland; having interests, customs, and habits different from yours, who, by their number, would hold the balance of power as between the two political parties herein represented. Now, what would happen, Mr. Speaker? Look at the House of Commons in England to-day and you will find the answer there. The Filipino representatives would be more than the Irish in the House of Commons are now—the controlling factor in the United States Congress. They would have in their hands the power to defeat or to pass any legislation that you may consider vital to the Americans on the continent, and it is more than likely that they would pass or defeat such legislation, consulting primarily the interests of their own people at home. I do not think that these obvious facts are overlooked by American statesmanship, and therefore the American people will never permit the Philippines to become a State of the Union, and I do not blame them. While knowing the sense of justice of this Nation, and that you are a liberty-loving people, we believe that you recognize our right to govern ourselves, and that you will permit us to govern ourselves we are not so sanguine as to believe that you will ever acknowledge that we have a right to govern you, much less that you will ever permit us to govern you. [Laughter.]

FREEDOM BEFORE WEALTH.

The future of the Philippines, therefore, when you face the problem as it is, dismantled of all the oratorical words of "benevolent assimilation," "altruism," and the like, stands between these two alternatives:

Either it is to be permanently a "possession" of the United States, governed from without by a Government whose powers are not constrained by constitutional limitations, for the Supreme Court has already declared that your Government in the Philippines is above the Constitution; or to be divorced entirely and completely from the United States.

As between these two alternatives, Mr. Speaker, every patriotic Filipino will certainly decide for the independence of his country. If to be free we must keep the Philippines undeveloped, if to be free we must refuse to admit foreign capital into the islands, if to be free we must be poor and remain poor, we will unanimously and unhesitatingly prefer to be poor but free than to be rich, but subjects! [Applause.] I would be ashamed of my country, I would be ashamed of myself, if such was not the definite attitude of all the Filipinos in every walk of life. And every gentleman on the floor of this House who has in his veins American blood, who has inherited from his forefathers the love of freedom, who has learned in his boyhood from the lips of his mother that liberty is the most sacred right of human beings, has to admit that such attitude is the only right, dignified, and manly one. [Applause.] Therefore, even admitting that the land laws of the Philippines are retarding the development of the islands, even admitting that the sale of friar or public lands in bulk is a wise and beneficial policy for the Filipinos—which I most emphatically deny—we would still insist that such a policy should not be adopted by Congress until a bill granting immediate independence or promising a speedy and early independence to the Philippines is passed.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, I say the Filipinos do not want to sell the friar lands in tracts larger than 40 acres to an individual and 2,500 acres to corporations, because they oppose the exploitation of the islands as injurious to the welfare, happiness, and prosperity of the people at large, and because they do not want to sell for any amount of money the freedom and independence of their country, which to them means everything and for which they are so ardently striving. [Loud applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Before the gentleman takes his seat will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLMSTED. If I remember correctly, the gentleman made an argument before the Committee on Insular Affairs last year to the effect that under the organic law, the act of Congress of 1902, none of the public lands in the Philippine Islands can be sold to anyone except citizens of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the gentleman's view?

Mr. QUEZON. I think that it is the letter and the spirit of the law.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would the gentleman be willing to have this bill amended so that the citizens of the United States could purchase the public lands?

Mr. QUEZON. Personally I would have no objection to it, provided the citizens of the United States shall be affected by the limitations of the organic act as to area. Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. QUEZON. Under the leave granted to me by the House to print I insert as a part of my remarks an ably written article on "neutralization" by a very well-informed gentleman, Mr. Erving Winslow, of Boston, secretary of the Anti-Imperialist League, who has made a special study on the subject.

The timeliness of this article lies in the fact that there is pending before the House a resolution, favorably reported by the Insular Committee, requesting the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with the powers for the neutralization of the Philippines, as a means of protecting the islands after they shall have been granted national independence.

NEUTRALIZATION AMERICA'S OPPORTUNITY.

"Neutralization as 'the true road to a perpetual peace' (Whewell) deserves a far more general and serious consideration than it has received. It is not known that any report has been made upon the subject by the Berne Bureau International Permanent de la Paix, to which it was referred by the Peace Congress of 1904, and the doctrine has found comparatively few advocates, in spite of the fact that it contains an appeal not only to the common sense but to the imagination of mankind, while it has actually been most successfully applied for a long period of time in some notable instances. Had public opinion caused the powers within recent years to accept the doctrine it might have been beneficently applied to Egypt, Korea, the Balkan States, Persia, and various weaker peoples, whose nationality has been destroyed by arrangements made in trades and acquiesced in by the greater nations to satisfy greed and ambition or to preserve the balance of power.

"Neutralization of nations by their own act and by treaty between the great powers means the establishment, not of methods to bring about peace, but of peace itself, the beginning of a genuine crystallizing process, self-expanding and progressive. Arbitration assumes difficulties which may lead to war. It may be sought or, in many specific cases, avoided at will. Neutralization implies the noble abandonment of that sovereign right which permits of war. Its authority is the pledge of the nations, guaranteed by enlightened public sentiment.

"Neutrality is the creation of the world of Christianity. For the word neutrality the Latin and the Greek have no equivalent. The heathen nations knew nothing but the inveterate exercise of an all-embracing warfare. The idea of limiting the horrors of war to the contending forces by the abstention of neutrals was the product of the new life that was developed by the Renaissance. The statesmen and the lawyers of that time invented for the characterization of the new principle 'neutralis' and 'neutralitas,' linguistic barbarisms, interesting because they prove its novelty. Even in Machiavelli's day the precept of the Florentine seems to have been generally accepted, that a State should never be neutral, because, as he argued, in case the combatants were strong the neutral would become a prey of the conqueror, and in case they were weak the neutral would forego the opportunity to dominate its victorious ally.

"Neutrality was hardly touched upon by the earlier writers on international law. Wheaton recognizes two types of neutrality—the first, 'perfect neutrality,' which arises from the spontaneous attitude of the neutral state itself. This attitude is supposed to be controlled by international law, of which it may be noted that it is yet in such a formative state that the question has been propounded seriously whether it can properly be called law at all, having no authority to enforce its edicts and no appropriate punishments to inflict. Some writers on the subject have rested the claim for its inclusion in jurisprudence not upon the expositions of the science, but upon the definition of the author of the Ecclesiastical Polity, the 'judicious' Hooker, that law is 'any rule or canon whereby actions are framed.' It is obviously proper enough to introduce moral and philosophical considerations, therefore, into its discussions, and they are certainly pertinent to 'imperfect, qualified, or conventional neutrality,' which is the result of treaty agreement between the powers—constituting the act of neutralization—wholly beyond the operation of international judicature, if such there were. This kind of neutrality has as yet received but little expert attention. One critic asserts, indeed, that Wheaton's classification—in which Halleck follows him—can not be maintained, because the condition described in the second division might imply an agreement of the neutralized state, made before the outbreak of war, to do something inimical to one of the belligerents. Of course, Wheaton's 'conventionally neutralized' state could never be supposed to contract obligations in time of peace inconsistent with its peculiar duties in time of war, to refrain from such obligations being an essential quality of neutralization.

"Permanent neutrality is an idea of our own times, recognized first at the Congress of Vienna, in 1815. There are, indeed, a few instances of earlier and unsuccessful attempts at its application. The first was a secret article in the treaty of July 25, 1791, between Leopold II and the King of Prussia, by which Russia was invited to join in an agreement to maintain the boundaries and free constitution of Poland. This treaty, amounting merely to a recognition of the independence of the Polish State and providing in no way for its neutrality, disappeared in a subsequent agreement for the second partition. The general recess of the German Empire, following the peace of Luneville, accorded 'perpetual neutrality' to six free and independent cities—Augsburg, Lubeck, Nuremberg, Frankfurt, Bremen, and Hamburg—'so long as they shall remain members of the Empire and refrain from such hostilities as the Holy Empire might undertake in the future.' Neither of these attempts can be considered examples of true neutralization.

"The first use of the term in a treaty between several States occurs in the treaty of Amiens, in 1802, between France and her allies and England, with regard to the neutralization of Malta, which never received the ratification of the powers and is therefore only important as an expression on the part of European nations of the value and true nature of perpetual neutrality in removing territories forever from the realm of war through the means of international agreement.

"The terminology of the subject has been uncertain even in state papers and treaties, so that in the popular mind there is much confusion, the doctrine of neutrality having been even extended to cover the immunity conferred upon military hospitals, ambulances, and Red Cross representatives, now more popularly characterized as 'inviolability.'

"The name of neutralization has been loosely applied to the agreement made between the United States and Great Britain in 1817, to maintain a merely nominal force on the Great Lakes, and it seems inaccurate to apply the term to arrangements for the abstention from fortifying highways of commerce. The assent of the great powers of Europe, and of the United States perhaps, since the Geneva conference, without protest from the smaller States, is essential to the neutralization of territory. It is this neutralization which seems the only measure that offers itself with an absolute and reasonable hope of a really solid and permanent peace.

"The development of individual liberty within the State follows the settlement of public order. With a similar progression the individual nation now seeks for the first time the opportunity for itself which may be obtained through the established comity of nations. Hitherto the neutralization of a State has been established not primarily for its own advantage, but for the safety and for the benefit of its more powerful neighbors.

"Such was the motive for Swiss neutralization. By the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814, the limits of France were reestablished virtually as they had existed in 1792. By a separate and secret article of this treaty the disposal of the territories renounced by France in the open treaty and the conditions tending to produce a system of real and durable equilibrium in Europe were to be decided upon by the allied powers among themselves. Thus, while the treaty of Paris was made between France, Great Britain, Russia, Prussia, and Austria, the pacificatory and restorative measures were confided to the allied four great powers; France was to have no vote in the congress, which was convened by these powers in conformity with the secret article of the Paris treaty. But when it assembled at Vienna, November 1, 1814, the adroit audacity of Talleyrand and the disagreement of the allies secured for France a prominent position of influence. Eight powers actually composed the congress—Great Britain, Russia, Austria, Prussia, France, Spain, Portugal, and Sweden. Russia's claims upon Poland created a disagreement among the powers, as did the claims of Prussia upon a part of the same territory and upon the Rhine Provinces. But the final act, which Spain alone refused to sign, was agreed upon June 9, 1815. The relations of Switzerland were determined by a declaration of the powers forming the congress, dated March 20, 1815, by the act of accession of the cantons of the same date, and by the final act. Switzerland by these acts and declarations was to take the relation of perpetual neutrality, and (in order to secure this end the better) a treaty with the King of Sardinia, of May 15, 1815, provided that the Provinces of Chablais and Faucigny south of Lake Leman and all of Savoy north of the Ugines were to hold the same neutral attitude. Thus Switzerland, Chablais, and Faucigny, and all Savoy north of the Ugines were made neutral. This position of Switzerland, so constituted in 1815 for the sake of the peace of Europe, has never been changed, and the other powers have always respected its neutrality.

"Holland and Belgium were united by the congress. They were disrupted in 1830, and by the treaty of London, April 19, 1839, between Holland and the five great powers—Great Britain, Russia, France, Austria, and Prussia—the Kingdom of Belgium was formed and the condition of perpetual neutrality imposed upon it. This condition was established in order that the Kingdom might be a barrier between the rivals, France and Germany. Its integrity has been preserved. It was threatened, indeed, during the Franco-Prussian War in 1870, when Great Britain immediately concluded two conventions—one between herself, Belgium, and Prussia, and another between herself, Belgium, and France—the conditions of which were that if France violated the integrity or neutrality of Belgium, Great Britain would join her forces to those of Prussia and, mutatis mutandis, that if Prussia were the aggressor Great Britain would ally herself to France.

"The Dutch United Provinces, with the larger part of the Austrian Netherlands, were constituted into a Kingdom of the Netherlands, under the Prince of Orange Nassau, including the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and a part of the Duchy of Bouillon. The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg was added to Holland as an independent state, becoming a member of the German Confederation, and its boundaries, established at Vienna, were changed by the act annexed to the treaty of April 19, 1839. A part of the old territory of Luxembourg was taken from the Kingdom of the Netherlands and annexed to the Duchy of Limburg. After the disruption of the German Confederation in 1866, Luxembourg was garrisoned by Prussian troops. But owing to the remonstrances of France the matter was brought before a conference of the powers in London, and by treaty of May 11, 1867, between Great Britain, Austria, Belgium, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Prussia, and Russia, the status quo ante of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg was restored and it was made an open city (ville ouverte), while all the parties to the treaty agreed to respect its neutrality. Luxembourg, on her part, agreed to disarm and dismantle the frontier forts and all others within her boundaries—the provision of neutrality rendering them unnecessary. The city of Luxembourg was to cease being a fortified city, the Grand Duke of Luxembourg, however, being permitted to keep a stated body of troops for the police protection of his own subjects. Prussia agreed to withdraw all troops that had previously been maintained within the boundaries of Luxembourg. The Grand Duke of Luxembourg was to take all necessary steps, by virtue of his position as grand duke, to carry into effect the provisions of the treaty, and to convert the city of Luxembourg from an armed to an open city. In 1870, during the Franco-Prussian war, Prussia complained that France had violated the neutrality of Luxembourg. This caused much discussion and correspondence; the treaty of neutralization was not, however, disavowed by Prussia. Since that time the neutrality of Luxembourg has been respected by all the powers.

"It is doubtful whether the two Ionian islands, Corfu and Paxo, which were neutralized by the great powers when the group was transferred to Greece, in 1864, are otherwise safeguarded than by the obligations assumed by the King of Greece.

"The city of Cracow and its territory were made a neutral State by the Congress of Vienna, in 1815, under the joint protection of Russia, Prussia, and Austria; but it was claimed that the failure of Cracow to fulfill the obligations assumed by her—not to afford an asylum to fugitives from justice, or military deserters—vitiated the conditions of the agreement, and the city lost her liberty in 1846.

"Neutralization is not demanded to-day for the protection of the great powers from belligerent operations. The smaller and weaker States are demanding for themselves the privileges of neutralization, with the consequent relief from the dangers of aggression, intimidation, or annexation, and from the heavy burdens of militarism. In our time these privileges and their guaranty are coming to be recognized as an individual and personal right of the State. Norway has secured for herself a partial, and would desire a general, neutralization. The subject is being agitated in Holland. Many publicists in Denmark promote the effort for the neutralization of that Kingdom, which has been so ably advocated in particular by F. de Martens; and a movement was made in Santo Domingo to instruct its delegates to urge its neutralization upon The Hague. The neutralization of the Suez Canal was effected by the international convention of 1888; but the Panama Canal, though declared neutral in perpetuity by the treaty between Panama and the United States, of November 18, 1903, in conformity with the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, November 18, 1901, is to be fortified, according to a right reserved in the United States-Panama treaty for "the protection of neutrality." This fact, together with the semi-official assertion now made that the construction of the canal was a military measure, removes this undertaking, it is sad to state, from the category of peace measures through the promotion of international commerce, in which it was at first hopefully classed. It is a striking fact that the crises which have threatened the neutrality of Switzerland and Belgium have been averted in a manner which would inevitably suggest the intervention of a special Providence to one class of minds and to another furnish convincing evidence that neutralization is not a weakness but emphasizes the strength and permanency of peace.

"The greater the number of neutralized States the more remote in a geometrical ratio become the possibilities of war. The neutralized State itself renounces all idea of international contests. It exists essentially for the moral and commercial progress of its inhabitants. Such a State will be a strong advocate of disarmament and of arbitration. Of course, the people of such States must put behind them those doctrines which it was supposed that the world, and the United States in particular, had well outgrown—that war and the preparations for war are essential to manly vigor, and that when the sword is turned into the plowshare mankind will necessarily become a race of effeminate weaklings.

"The neutralized State is excluded from such sovereign functions only as concern war making and its attributes, or which may in any way compromise the position established by international law as essential to neutrality. The surrender of these functions has no meaning to the weaker States, whose reception of the great gift involves only a technical sacrifice of national dignity.

"It is exceedingly important to make a careful discrimination between protectorates and neutralization, or between limited neutralization of provinces and that of an entire country, in view of many vague discussions of this subject which have exhibited a limited grasp of its true character. It is very common to quote the failure of the protectorate over Samoa as a warning against the association of powers to neutralize territory, and the lapsing of a joint Egyptian protectorate is likewise sometimes quoted to the same effect. But as no State can be neutralized by its own ipse dixit, neither can the condition be created by action of two or three nations. As a matter of fact, such a joint protectorate is less stable, and therefore further removed from the equilibrium established by general consent, than the protectorate of a single nation by tacit consent of the other powers. The opportunity for jealousies and misunderstandings is so obvious that practical experience was hardly needed to demonstrate it, and, of course, the 'protected' nation is unlikely to have any proper opportunity to develop its own powers as an independent State. It is universal consent which is the essential element of true neutralization.

"The limited or provincial neutralization of a part of the territory of a State is likewise anomalous, and its non-success furnishes no argument against the fulfillment of the true ideal. The acquisition of Savoy by France in 1860, ratified by a plebiscité, broke that Province away from the neutralized territories of Switzerland, of which it formed a part by the Vienna and Paris treaties of 1815; and although the French Government recognized that some limitations upon the rights of sovereignty still restrained Savoy by assenting to Switzerland's remonstrance against fortifications of the frontier, the guaranty of neutralization has not been maintained by the treaty powers.

"An important consideration, of course, is that a weak neutralized State may be unable to fulfill the responsibilities which are ordinarily attached to the position, notably to prevent a belligerent from using its lands or harbors or from making them a basis of hostile operations. In the method suggested, of converting the weaker nations into neutralized States, we must revert to the basis of what Whewell calls 'international jus' rather than to any existing code of laws. It must be assumed that the State, being divested of all means of forcible resistance, as is implied by her amicable attitude, is unable to resist such violations of her territory. It would not ordinarily be desirable that one great nation, by individual action, should intervene to control both belligerents, as Great Britain did in the case of Belgium, previously mentioned, for the association of the neutralizing powers implies that though two or more might be engaged in war they are all enlisted to preserve the sancity of the contract, irrevocable except by general consent, to maintain inviolate, as against any one or any group of them, the neutralized territory. The establishment of this attitude implies a permanent comity of nations to maintain the peace, at least in neutralized territories.

"As in the limit as to time afforded by the truce of God, or like that which was vainly attempted by the Vatican to give pause to the impending war between the United States and Spain, so the limit placed by territorial lines must exercise an important influence upon the forces which make for war. If the whole movement toward the establishment of international law is based upon the progress of humane and moral ideas, it is no mere chimerical aspiration to regard as hopefully possible the largest increase of its sanctions in this direction. Every year in which the great powers stand associated, even though prompted at first by mutual jealousies, as sponsors for the peace of portions of the world's territory, the more firmly established is the precedent, crystallizing into a rule of international law, that a State once neutralized must so remain. That the great powers, whatever temporary disturbances may arise between some of them, would all stand together for the guaranty established by them all in perpetuity thus becomes more and more probable. It is easy to see what an important influence may be exerted upon war-like motives by this underlying and common pledge of a protected peace, growing deeper and stronger as the spheres in which it prevails become larger and more numerous. That objections by neighboring States, and perhaps in other quarters, may be raised to the neutralization of territory is conceded, but it is perfectly obvious that these objections have proceeded from selfish and narrow motives and may disappear with a larger political consciousness which looks to the reign of peace and of law.

"The most interesting aspect of neutralization, however, is its application to the undeveloped nations, the people of the East and of the tropical countries. National consciousness is awakening through the general progress of enlightenment, and especially under the impulse which has followed the entrance of Japan among the world powers. In the Philippine Islands we are daily fostering it by an extensive educational system. The movements and the demands of commerce and industry in the present conditions are inflicting heavy and still heavier burdens upon the dependent peoples, whose interests are often ruthlessly sacrified to the requirements of exploitation. It is difficult to believe that this growing national consciousness and the desires and ambitions which accompany it will long be content with control by any sort of foreign rule.

"Is it not the part of those who make a study of international law to anticipate and to provide for that extension of it which may furnish some orderly and methodical system for the transition of possessions, dependencies, and some of the colonies to the self-governing attitude which, before long, will be claimed by those now living under more or less enforced tutelage? One eminent authority, Sir Thomas Barclay, in his recent valuable monograph, 'Problems of international practice and diplomacy,' observes:

> "Might it not become a principle in the public law of Europe, following more or less on the lines of Articles X, XI, and XII of the general act of Berlin of February 28, 1885, that any nation or self-governing colony shall be enabled, on fulfilling certain conditions, to claim neutralization?

"Sir Thomas Barclay even provides a scheme for 'a form of agreement as to the proclamation of neutralization.'

"A famous divine, whose interpretations of Christian principles seem to be based on the assumption that the Scripture text that their fruit 'is not peace but a sword' was a statement of justifiable action instead of a prophetic warning, has summed up the matter as follows: He asserts that the 'civilized' peoples, who are alone fitted to develop and expand the resources of nature, are the 'ox' which is entitled to the manger and to its contents, and from these the heathen 'dog,' if he is in the way, should be forced to retire. Unfortunately, these 'civilized' people of the Temperate Zones, although able to plan methods of administration and development, are unable themselves to perform the manual labor demanded, which, even if it were not climatically impossible for them, would be altogether too expensive. Thus, in the pressure for rapid development, the native inhabitant must either perform the necessary labor at the price which permits a profit to his 'benefactor,' as it is customary to call his owner, or he must go to the wall. The alternative is, of course, that the peon or the coolie is imported to perform the work demanded.

"Much has been said of the excellent administration of Siam and the Straits Settlements. Yet it is the fact that by imported labor the natives are almost completely shut out from industrial opportunity. In South Africa this menace has aroused remonstrances which have moved the British Government to efforts to restrain the introduction of foreign labor at the expiration of engagements already entered into. Jealous as the great nations and their colonies are of the entrance into their territories of such labor as the Chinese and other alien races supply, even rigidly excluding, as is done by the United States, the entrance of any form of it under contract, the weaker peoples have been subjected to the competition of imported labor almost without restraint. We should prepare for the day when the ægis of international law may be so extended as to protect, as their protest makes itself heard, the nations who are suffering in a manner that must otherwise lead to their final extinction.

"It is true that some generous and voluntary guidance might be beneficial and might even be sought by the weaker peoples in their national evolution. But this should be given beyond the sphere of international law, whose function is to protect them from and prevent that kind of interference which tends to crush the national life. Before the establishment of those maxims and rules which have developed with the growing comity of nations, the stronger was free to conquer the weaker, to destroy its property and to slaughter its people. While recognizing the advance toward a better day, is there such an advance in the actual state of the relations between the more powerful and the weaker, under the guise of a benevolent trusteeship, as might have been anticipated? We are fully aware, to be sure, that the scientific process of evolution which demands the survival of the fittest might seem to be retarded by an effort to strengthen and support the feeble among the nations. Who shall decide that any race of men has no capacity to use, no value in the scheme of the universe? While progressive philanthropy and all the beneficent influences which are commonly denominated Christian, and the institutions of jurisprudence themselves, do not hesitate to defy the scientific theory in the case of the feeble individual, its dictum is not likely to hinder the growing demand for a similarly benevolent treatment of the affairs of feeble nations.

"Neutralization would recognize the individual right of the nationality to its own existence and to its own progress, though that progress might be less rapid than expected by the civilized world, and certainly much slower than would be desired by the greed of the exploiter. It is for the law of nations, like the ordinary laws of society, to recognize, to respect, and to secure individual liberty. Slavery only knows no law. The whole theory which has prevailed under the name of trusteeship implies the assumption that the beneficent influences of civilization could be extended only through the form of ownership, without which no moral, social, and commercial influences would exert any considerable effect. With such an object lesson as Japan before its eyes, the world can hardly deny that the growth and development of self-government is possible without ownership, guardianship, or protectorate. Had Admiral Dewey sailed away from the Philippine Islands as Commodore Perry sailed away from Japan another national life in the East, with a proper security, might have grown well toward an acknowledged maturity.

"Of course it is not to be expected that the land hunger of the more densely populated countries will soon be removed by an outflow of emigration to independent countries or that the great nations will very willingly part with their colonies and possessions. But may not a time come when there will be recognized the freedom of individuals to go to places where their labor is needed and where they can be assimilated, subject only to the control of their hosts, the natural owners of the soil? National barriers are not a hindrance to the free movements of persons, as they are to the exchange of articles of commerce, and the recognition of the rights of humanity beyond the limits of nationality will really tend to strengthen rather than to weaken the nations. The experience of the world has proved that, though colonial enterprise may have been profitable to a few individuals and a limited number of interests, it has often been prejudicial rather than advantageous to the parent country. Friendly alliance and free commercial intercourse are of mutual benefit, and the phlebotomy of emigration has relieved the nation which is suffering from the plethora of a congested population, while it has assisted and stimulated the development of sparsely settled states.

"It is obvious that the unrest which manifests itself in the subject State, however diplomatically it may be met, is unlikely to be allayed. The demands of Egypt, of India, and of South Africa are sure to become more and more insistent. In fact, the ruling State, even if not forced to relinquish its control through sheer financial and physical inability, will probably be obliged, sooner or later, to conform to the growing sense of justice among its own people and to take measures to set adrift its ambitious dependency. The new school of thought in England is recognizing the possibility of ultimately freeing its subject peoples and the duty of giving them now larger and larger measures of local self-government. When the time comes for their graduation into the ranks of self-governing nations, since they can not have sufficient strength for defense, obviously the parent nation could hardly fail to see that they were given proper protection. How could this be so adequately effected as by a request to the other powers that they should join with it in the establishment of a permanent neutralization for the new States? Of course this does not imply a severance from the world at large in those ways in which the interests of commerce, missionary zeal, the spirit of humanity, and international brotherhood exert themselves, without regard to definitions of sovereignty. It may be conceded that it is as true of philanthropy and Christianity as it is of trade—that they do not 'follow the flag.'

"Individual service would not be wanting where it was needed, like that which Gordon gave in China and which has been rendered to many another nation by less well-known lovers of their kind, neither for greed, ambition, nor love of power. The brotherly love, such as Stevenson manifested for his Samoans, would never be found wanting though the clamors of selfishness were silent when the need for help made itself heard. Are we to suppose that all the beneficent influences that are now being exerted in the Philippines, for instance, are being done for pay or from national pride—that Bishop Brent and all his fellow workers would cease their efforts if the Philippine Islands were to be made a neutralized State? From the evidence given by the inhabitants during the period of the government at Malolos it is obvious that eagerness for such help was latent there and that it was eagerly welcomed and supported. It can not be forgotten that officers captured from our Army during the war of defense conducted against the United States by the Filipinos were paroled and hired to teach in the native schools.

"The basis of the idea of neutralization as applied to the weaker peoples, of course, rests upon a confidence in self-development and is a direct outcome of true democratic principles. It is to be believed that in spite of temporary curves downward, these principles are, on the whole, making a continued upward progress. It is undoubtedly true, as has been said, that, waiving its effect upon the native inhabitants of the soil, material progress is more rapidly stimulated by the sovereignty of the more developed nations. An indefinite rapidity of development is, however, not altogether desirable, as is evidenced by the recurrence of the financial and commercial crises which we call panics. Fostered by artificial trade regulations and the ingenuity of great financiers and captains of industry, feverish periods of speculative activity are followed by the cold fit in which the patient shudders in despair, and a great recession takes place from the overhasty advance. The lesson which the world is gradually learning from the results of intense and hasty greed, far overpassing the benefits which its enterprises are supposed to bestow, would be reenforced by the example of independent States pursuing their course under methods which lack the intemperate fervor of western exploitation. It is undoubtedly true that the people of the tropical countries, unaffected by the influence and example of the energetic residents of the Temperate Zone, might have rested content with their easy opportunities for procuring the simple necessaries of life.

"If peoples thus conditioned were to have been allowed at a remote period to enter the family of nations by such a process as neutralization, they might have remained satisfied with the exchange of such natural products as their lands afforded for the few articles required to supply their needs, manufactured by people of a higher development. But as the matter presents itself to-day, contact with the world has planted the seeds of ambition among these peoples. Their needs and their desires are increasing with the growth of national consciousness and their movement toward independence. Such countries of their own initiation could never supply the field or offer an opportunity for large manufacturing enterprises, and there would therefore be no inducement for them to erect tariff walls. The effect upon the equilibrium of trade would be indisputably excellent, a natural export consisting of local products and an import to a moderately increasing degree of the products of manufacture required by the growing wants of an advancing civilization.

"We have in the United States some continuing faith in what is called the Monroe doctrine, which, from whatever motive it was established, is supposed to secure for the States of the South American Continent conditions which may in a sense be called those of neutralization. But besides the fact that the intrusion of the United States into the Eastern Hemisphere has undermined the foundations of the doctrine in the view of many authorities on international law, no assertion of such guaranty as the Monroe doctrine is supposed to furnish should be made by any single State. This guaranty by a single State can not be viewed as a world-peace measure. In fact, it may easily be provocative of war. The great rival powers, each maintaining that it alone is the true arbiter of peace and that its sovereign will should be the supreme arbiter in cases of territorial differences and dispute, are competing to lead in military and especially in naval strength. The United States it is now claimed has not only to maintain a navy sufficient to defend its possessions in the other hemisphere, but to guard against aggressions upon its own home territory and upon the whole South American Continent. But with neutralized territory no longer cause of difference or dispute, the naval forces would be released or could be converted to police duty. In the ideal conditions of international law and practice a small "union navy" of this sort would be the substitute for the futile and wasteful expenditures of our menacing naval armaments.

"It is possible, of course, that a neutralized nation might fail to develop any kind of orderly government for a long time, that there might be violence and bloodshed, and that the government established more or less permanently might be an oligarchy or a despotism. The free will of nations is as respectable as the free will of individuals. We do not attempt to restrain the liberty of the individual, even though we think he might be governed much better by others than he is able to govern himself, unless he interferes with others' rights and liberties. Neutralization recognizes the free individuality of the State and that its affairs should not be directly controlled by foreign nations or indirectly controlled by them, as is the case when the burden of militarism is laid upon it by its liability to attack. The present situation may be not inaptly compared to that which would exist if the protection of the law exerted by common consent were removed and the weaker individual, who could not protect himself by his fists, were forced to go about armed to the teeth to defend himself from possible assaults upon his person.

"No discussion in the United States of the subject of neutralization can be made without recalling the fact that at the first participation of this country in the councils for the great powers Mr. John A. Kasson, in her behalf, at the Berlin West African Congress, urged the neutralization of the territories comprising the conventional basin of the Kongo. The congress, although deeply impressed by Mr. Kasson's arguments, refused to enter into a compact which might, in case of war, deprive the belligerent of the means of attack, although a recommendation was adopted that the parties which might be concerned in a future act of war should establish and respect the neutrality of these territories.

"Many publicists have suggested the plan of neutralization to be applied to the Philippine Islands when the independence which is contemplated for them shall come to pass. When this independence is granted, it will be necessary in some sort to provide for the undisturbed preservation of the national life. The idea of neutralization was propounded by James G. Blaine more than a quarter of a century ago, when in 1881 he made this statement in behalf of the Government of the United States:

"It firmly believes that the position of the Hawaiian Islands as the key to the domain of the American Pacific demands their benevolent neutrality, to which end it will earnestly cooperate with the native Government.

"And it was only as an alternative that the astute statesman added that—

"if through any cause the maintenance of such a position of benevolent neutrality should be found by Hawaii to be impracticable, this Government would then unhesitatingly meet the altered situation by seeking an avowedly American solution for the grave issues presented.

"Had the perpetual neutralization of the Sandwich Islands been established by the consent of all the great powers, the first step might not have been taken in a direction which is still regarded very much as it was regarded when Mr. Fish wrote, in 1873:

"The acquisition of territory beyond the sea, outside the present confines of the United States, meets the opposition of many discreet men who have more or less influence in our councils.

"Mr. Edwin Burritt Smith, many years ago, in the early days of their struggle for independence, urged the neutralization of the Philippine Islands. At a later date, Mr. John Foreman, who has made many valuable contributions to the discussions of Philippine affairs, declared that if, when she—

"destroyed the protecting power of Spain in the Philippine Islands, the United States had practically said to the Filipinos: 'You are henceforth a free people; work out your own destiny; for no nation which has become great was ever made; it made itself. We will from this moment endeavor to persuade all the great powers to join us in declaring your independence and neutrality'—if that had been America's attitude, then the world would have hailed such unprecedented mutual self-abnegation, and the powers might probably have agreed to America's proposal.

"In an able argument before the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, April 6, 1906, in support of a joint resolution introduced by the Hon. Samuel W. McCall in the House, January 4, 1906, Mr. Moorfield Storey said:

"That it is feasible to obtain such an agreement for neutralization is, I think, hardly doubtful. In the first place, if we ask the powers of the world to make this agreement with us, we are not asking them to give us anything. The Philippine Islands in their eyes now belong to us. They are not subjects for foreign aggression. To interfere with them means war with us, and that is what no foreign power is at present seeking. Therefore, when we ask them to agree, that we decide that it is proper to give the Filipinos their independence, they will keep their hands off. We are asking them to give nothing. The request, if made now, is made at a peculiarly favorable time. There never was in the history of the world a time when the friendship of the United States was so much desired by everybody as it is at this moment. There are many of us who come down from a former generation who remember the time during the Civil War when the relations between this country and England, this country and France, this country and Germany were strained; when we felt that we were constantly living under the shadow of their interference in our affairs; when the greatest service that could be rendered was to persuade them to keep their hands off; and the feeling in this country against those nations was extremely bitter. But to-day Japan certainly wishes to coöperate with us, and she recognizes the friendship that we have shown her in the recent war with Russia. Russia would be anxious to be our friend if possible, and a reformed Russia will find us warmly her friend. Germany has shown her desire to be friendly with us by her recent action about the tariff. France and England are certainly each anxious to preserve their present relations with us; and if this country were to ask them simply to make this agreement, I am perfectly certain that there would be no objection. If we said that we wanted this thing we should get it.

"A citation may well be made from an able address delivered by the Hon. Albert E. Pillsbury, formerly attorney general of Massachusetts, at a meeting held in Faneuil Hall, Boston, a few years ago to discuss the subject of the neutralization of the Philippine Islands:

"The proposed neutralization means that the United States shall invite the principal powers to join with it in a treaty agreement, setting the islands apart from conquest and binding the inhabitants to abstain from offensive warfare, with a recognition and, if the usual practice is followed, a guaranty by the contracting powers of their independence whenever conceded by the United States. In short, neutralization means that the islands shall not molest nor be molested by any other power, and that the nations will recognize and protect their independence whenever they are made independent.

"* * * The great merit of neutralization appealing alike to people of all views upon the Philippine policy, is that it clears the path of the most formidable difficulties in the way of working out, to whatever result, the problem that confronts us there. Some advantages at once to be gained by it are apparent at a glance. It permanently removes the islands from the theater of war—a sufficient end in itself, if there were no other. It thus relieves the United States from maintaining a great naval and military establishment in order to be prepared at all times for their defense. It avoids the first and chief objection always urged against independence—that, if given their freedom, the islands will at once fall a prey to some foreign power or powers.

"Public opinion as expressed to-day in Congress is supporting the declaration long ago made by executive officials of the United States of our purpose to prepare the Filipinos for self-government and entire independence. When that preparation is accomplished, neutralization of the territory of the people to be enfranchised would seem to be only a proper complement to the grant of self-government and independence, and would be necessary, indeed, to make it effective.

"Here is a reasonable and practicable method of availing ourselves of existing conditions, unlike many peace movements, which design plans for a beautiful machinery whose working presupposes a converted world and a sublimely elevated public opinion. Reformers may be in the best sense opportunists. The peace movement need not scruple to avail itself of the jealousy of the nations concerning territory which each anxiously covets, yet perhaps still more anxiously desires to keep from others by persistently urging that they should agree to leave it to itself under the ægis of a joint guaranty. How impressive would be the example of the prosperity and progress of the Philippines and their people, benefiting by the advantages which the civilization of the more advanced nations would offer in exchange for the opportunities freely furnished for the development of their resources by foreign capital and commercial exchanges—opportunities sought in generous competition by the world.

"Freed from the burdens of a military establishment and favored by the security of a guaranteed and lasting peace, the islands would be irresistible object lessons and effect in a generation more than the eloquence of the idealist is likely to effect in centuries of pleading for the general and voluntary abrogation of this element of sovereignty among the great powers. Why should not the United States, in setting the Filipino people upon their feet, free and independent, use its good offices to negotiate a treaty with the other great powers, adding the islands to the list of those fortunate countries that are forever freed from the peril of foreign war and foreign conquest?

"Whether the next step toward neutralization comes from the initiation of a great power like the United States or eventuates from the counsels of some general congress called for the adjustment of the territorial problems which arise at the conclusion of great wars, the event would be hailed with enthusiasm by all sincere lovers of peace everywhere."

History of the law of nations.
Sessional papers of the House of Commons.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, of course the question of the ultimate disposition of the Philippine Islands is not before the House at this time. The Delegate from the Philippine Islands has characterized the suggestion of statehood as an idle dream. I want to say that, in my opinion, after listening to the eloquent words of the Delegate from the Philippine Islands, this House would be pretty nearly ready to admit these islands to statehood. I do not believe the statement he makes that the possibility of their being admitted to statehood is a dream is true. I propose, when this question comes before the House, to offer an amendment, and in the place of permitting an independent government there promise them ultimate statehood. I believe that when the membership of this House considers that question they will not vote in favor of the proposition which is suggested in the resolution which we will be asked to consider hereafter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the bill under consideration. I am going to support it, but I hope the House will amend it.

The 60,000,000 acres of land which came to this country by cession of the islands to the United States, of course, constitute a part of our public domain. Now, we permitted the Philippine Islands to sell that land—dispose of it in homesteads—and put the money into the Philippine treasury. We have not, however, given the title of these public lands to the Philippine Islands by any means. It is still in the United States of America.

A little while after the cession of these islands it was discovered that there was a large corporation in the Philippine Islands—two or three of them; religious orders—that held, in round numbers, 400,000 acres of land. There was a feeling of distrust; there was considerable trouble; the friars had been driven off the land; they owned it and they wanted to go back to it. The Philippine people objected, and the question came up as to the proper disposition of the land.

It was finally determined, and wisely so, that the Philippine Government should purchase the land from these three orders of friars. The land was purchased at an expense of about $7,000,000. The question then arose as to the disposition of the land. They became public lands of the Philippine Islands, and I believe the most, if not all, the members of the committee and people prominent in the affairs of the Philippine Islands supposed that these lands would be disposed of just the same as other public lands were disposed of, namely, only 40 acres to any one individual and 2,500 acres to any one corporation. I speak of acres although the law says hectares.

The Attorney General construed the law otherwise, and held that these lands could be disposed of in large amounts if it was so desired. The larger part of it was so disposed of in large amounts. What was the result? The result was that we permitted these people to purchase these lands from the friars in order to get rid of absentee landlordism, in order to cut the land up into smaller tracts, in order that the Philippine people might live on the lands, might carry them on. What happened? The Government commenced selling these lands in very large tracts, and they went to people who were at that time officers of a corporation now known as the Sugar Trust. I want to quote a few sentences from one of President Taft's statements before the committee when this matter was under consideration:

> Nor would I regard it as a beneficial result for the Philippine Islands to have the fields of those islands turned exclusively to the growth of sugar. The social conditions that this would bring about would not promise well for the political and industrial development of the people, because the cane-sugar industry makes a society in which there are wealthy landowners holding very large estates with most valuable and expensive plants and a large population of unskilled labor, with no small farming or middle-class tending to build up a conservative, self-respecting community from bottom to top.

Now, what have we done and what have we been doing? We have been taking these lands away from this great corporation, these three big organizations of friars, and turning them back and permitting them to go into the hands of another big corporation—the Sugar Trust.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says "Oh, no," but I say "Oh, yes," and my authority is just as good as his. The lands do not go to the Sugar Trust directly, but to the officers of the Sugar Trust. They were officers at that time.

Mr. OLMSTED. They are neither officers nor stockholders in the Sugar Trust, but, on the contrary, they are the bitter opponents of that trust.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Not at the time the testimony was taken, but at the time the sale was made. They were then officers of the Sugar Trust.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Not at this time. I want to state this proposition. It is proposed by this bill to prevent the sale of this land in larger amounts to any person than 40 acres and to any corporation than 2,500 acres. That land is adapted to the raising of sugar cane, and if we permit the sales to go on in large amounts, as has been done, the result will be that, instead of an absentee landlordism in which the landlords were the religious monks, we will have an absentee landlordism in which the landlords are the sugar people. That is the condition. This bill, so far as it goes, will tend to correct that condition, because it will put the Philippine public lands known as the friar lands in the same class as the other public lands, and it will for a few moments only, as reckoned in the life of a nation, prevent that condition.

I want to call attention to what I believe is the crux of the whole situation. The organic act provided that no agricultural corporation should be permitted to secure or acquire more than 2,500 acres. It could not acquire more than 2,500 acres from the Government or from private people, but the act did not provide that no person could acquire more than 2,500 acres. What is the result? The corporation can not buy up all the lands in the Philippine Islands, but the people who compose the corporation may. The stockholders, directors, and officers of the corporation, under the law as it exists to-day, can evade that law by buying up the lands in the Philippine Islands, and create there large landed estates on which sugar is produced.

The proposition that I tried to have the committee adopt when this bill was up for consideration before the committee was that we put a limitation upon the amount of land that a private individual could acquire. Under heaven, what is the sense of preventing a corporation from acquiring more than 2,500 acres and permitting officers of the corporation to acquire 10,000,000 acres? I tried in committee to get that put on this bill, and I am going to offer the amendment from the floor of the House this afternoon. I do not see how any man can object to it. If it is bad, if it is evil, if it tends toward the development of these great plantations with their attendant serfdom, which always follows the development of a great sugar corporation, to do that, why is it not equally bad for the officers of the corporation to do it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. With pleasure.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman say how much of the total output of sugar in the Philippine Islands is produced outside of the island of Negros?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I can not say.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it a large portion?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I do not know.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin With pleasure.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman put into the RECORD the names of the people who have acquired these large tracts of land?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. They are already in the RECORD, I believe. If not, I shall be glad to put them in.

Mr. KENDALL. And how much each has acquired?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. That is in the report, but I will be glad to put it into the RECORD.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the reason I asked the question is because my impression was—certainly it was so when I was in the Philippine Islands myself—that practically the entire output of sugar came from the island of Negros, and I did not know whether since then, by virtue of the operation the gentleman has described of people acquiring large tracts of the friar lands, large amounts of sugar were produced outside of that island.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I am not sure about that, but I do know that this land was purchased with the object of establishing large sugar plantations, and the hearing before the committee brought out the fact they were developing, in at least three instances, sugar plantations on this land which was purchased in violation of what everybody supposed the law was.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. With pleasure.

Mr. TOWNER. The tract that was acquired by these gentlemen who represented the Sugar Trust, as it is assumed, was what is known as the San Jose estate, was it not?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. That was one of them.

Mr. TOWNER. Was it not the only one?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Acquired by the officers of the Sugar Trust?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Yes; I think that is the only one acquired by the officers of the Sugar Trust.

Mr. TOWNER. And that contained about 56,000 acres of land.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Something over 50,000 acres.

Mr. TOWNER. So it should be understood by the House that no large portion of this tract of 400,000 acres has been disposed of to the people of the Sugar Trust.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. The gentleman has admitted that nearly 56,000 acres in one tract has been disposed of to these people who were at that time officers of the Sugar Trust.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman, it is 56,210 acres.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. And now that it not the only large sale of land to one person or to one corporation. If the Members of this House will turn to the views of the minority and look on page 3 they will find an account of a large number of sales.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion there?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES. I would like to say to the gentleman that the commission also sold a very large tract to another individual, but for some reason that sale was not consummated. The contract of sale was duly executed, but the proposed sale was not consummated.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Now, I wish the chairman of this committee would consent to an amendment to this act at this time which will prevent the sale of any public lands in these islands to individuals or prevent the acquiring by indivduals of a tract of land—oh, put it high enough—in excess, say, of 2,500 acres. I believe if he will do that he will do a thousand times as much for the people of the Philippine Islands as he will when he passes this bill in this House.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield for just a suggestion?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES. As I understand the law now, it prohibits any individual from holding more than 16 hectares, or 40 acres, of land——

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. From holding?

Mr. JONES. I mean from buying more than 40 acres of any public lands.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. JONES. More than 40 acres of land, and it is my contention that the same restrictions apply to the friar lands that apply to the public lands. It is the purpose of this bill to remove any doubt which may exist upon this subject. No public lands have been sold to individuals in excess of 40 acres. The sales made in excess of 40 acres have been of friar lands.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. We do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. JONES. And they bought friar lands because the commission held that the limitation did not apply to them. It is the purpose of the bill to make it clear that the limitations apply to all lands owned by the Philippine people.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Then go one step further and prevent an individual from acquiring from the Government or from anybody more than 2,500 acres of land.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman believe that it is within the power of Congress to prevent an individual from buying 10 acres from another individual?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I do.

Mr. JONES. I seriously doubt that.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I will put in the RECORD some cases, particularly one in the State of Minnesota, which I have not here with me on the floor this afternoon, not knowing that this bill would come up, some decisions which to my mind hold clearly that in the public interest the sovereign government can prevent the acquiring for any purpose of lands larger than a certain amount.

Mr. JONES. By a corporation or an individual?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. By an individual as well as a corporation.

Mr. MADDEN. I was wondering whether the gentleman believes that if I own 40 acres of land in the Philippine Islands I did not have the right to sell that land to some individual who wished to buy it.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. If the individual did not own so much land that the ownership was dangerous to the public welfare.

Mr. MADDEN. If the idea of the gentleman were carried out to its logical conclusion nobody would be able to sell any property they happen to own in the shape of land.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Not at all.

Mr. MADDEN. Unless they sold it to some person who had no land prior to the purchase.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Who did not have less than the amount prescribed by law.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will permit. If a man owned 1 acre of land and another man owned 40 acres, and the man owning 1 acre bought the 40 acres, that would give him 1 acre more than the amount prescribed by law.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I would not put the limitation as small as this.

Mr. JONES. Suppose it were 80 acres, would it not be the same thing?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Say 2,500, and it would be the same thing. I do not ask anything unreasonable. The object of this whole legislation is to prevent absentee landlordism and the acquiring of large tracts of land to be used for sugar plantations, because that sort of thing tends to the creation of two classes, a landlord class and a peon class, if you choose to call it such.

Mr. TOWNER and Mr. FOWLER rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask if there is any limitation under the law governing the sale of real estate in the Philippine Islands, to prevent corporations from owning an unlimited number of acres.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Yes; a corporation is prevented from acquiring from any source more than 2,500 acres; that is, an agricultural corporation.

Mr. FOWLER. What is there to prevent an individual from selling his land to a corporation?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Why, the law itself. If the corporation has 2,500 acres it can not acquire a larger amount than that.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that the limitation which is placed upon the acquirement of the corporation in the islands?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. It is.

Mr. FOWLER. And it can not hold any more land than that 2,500 acres?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. That is the limitation. But the individual can do so, and that is what I am trying to point out to this House.

Mr. FOWLER. One other question. I understand that the limitation placed on these lands—125,000 acres—is 40 acres to the individual. Is that true?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. That is the amount that an individual can purchase directly from the Government; yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Why make a distinction between the amount that a corporation can acquire and the amount that an individual is permitted to acquire?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. It came about in this way: The House placed it at one figure and the Senate at another, and the 2,500 acres is a compromise, the idea being that it took a large number of acres of land in one ownership for the establishment of a paying sugar plantation. Now, in places where tobacco is raised that is not true, but in the places where sugar is the principal crop it was decided by the conference committee and finally passed by both branches of this Congress and fixed at 2,500 acres.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you not think it is unwise to allow a corporation to own real estate and get into the agricultural business?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I think the gentleman raises a very close question. I think probably it would not be possible, either in the Hawaiian Islands or in the Philippine Islands at this time to produce sugar at all unless a large amount of land was permitted to be held in one ownership.

Mr. FOWLER. One other question. Is it not a fact that the great industrial business of this country is done now by corporations?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I think so.

Mr. FOWLER. If you permit corporations, then, to own real estate and engage in the agricultural business, would it not inevitably lead to the same condition in the ownership of land and in the cultivation thereof for agricultural products?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I think it is quite possibly true.

Mr. FOWLER. Is not that a dangerous thing to the poor people of this country in acquiring homes for themselves and their families?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. I think the gentleman is quite likely correct. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take any more of the time of the House.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. With pleasure.

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks the practice with regard to the restriction of the individual ownership of land ought to apply to other Territories that are under the control of the United States Government?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. It ought to especially apply to the Philippine Islands. Most of the other Territories, like Alaska, are not sugar-producing Territories, and it is on account of this fact and on account of the social conditions, that President Taft points out, which arise from the sugar business, that I would insist, in these islands particularly, that that limitation should apply. I do not believe there is a bit of difference between the lands acquired by purchase from the friars and lands acquired in any other way, and I do not believe, so far as the policy is concerned, that we should make the slightest bit of difference in the handling of those lands. They are all public lands. They are all to be disposed of by the Philippine government, and the mere fact that the Government owes something on them cuts no figure in this case whatever.

I believe this bill should be passed, but it should be amended as I have suggested. It will do some little good if it is passed in its present form. It will put off for a few years the fatal day, but now is the time to take the step. We have the bill here, we can amend it at this time, we can put it through the House to-day, and we can settle this question forever. And I sincerely hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States has given to the people of the Philippine Islands more generous treatment and a more liberal, more wise, and more beneficent government than any other country on the face of the earth ever gave, under similar conditions, to any dependent colony, province, or territory. We have restored peace and good order, which they had not enjoyed for many years, and have afforded and given to life and property a protection and safety unknown during all the previous history of the islands; we have given them a government in which they have had a greater participation than they ever had in government before; we are endeavoring to conquer the illiteracy which prevails in the islands, and under our rule more than 9,000 teachers are now teaching nearly half a million scholars; we have improved their roads and helped them to many public improvements; we have increased and improved sanitation and hospital facilities, and have very materially reduced their death rate; and while doing all these things we have restored their finances to first-class conditions.

Now, as often happens under such circumstances, benefits have to be bestowed and wise measures enacted over the protest of some or all of the people to be benefited. The passage of this bill would prove greatly to the detriment of the Filipinos. Its defeat will be greatly to their advantage, and yet if we do them the favor of defeating it we must do so, it appears, over what seems to me the very unwise protest of one of their representatives upon this floor—the eloquent gentleman who has just addressed you and whose ability I concede. If the people of the islands were all of his class there might be better reason for the passage of another bill which will come up here in a few days.

But he is only one of the few, the very few, the mere handful of highly educated gentlemen in the islands, and who hope to govern and control the millions of others if they can obtain Philippine independence. Naturally, they prefer that their people shall be "poor and independent rather than rich and dependent" upon the United States.

It can not be true that the Filipinos as a unit are in favor of this bill. Not 10 per cent of them ever heard of it, not 10 per cent of them could read it if they saw it, not 10 per cent of them could read it even if it were printed in the Spanish language. They would not understand it if they would read it. Nobody can understand it without first studying the act of 1902 to ascertain the effect of this proposed amendment. The effect does not appear upon the face of the bill itself.

Mr. QUEZON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. With pleasure.

Mr. QUEZON. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that there has been in every town in the Philippine Islands meetings to urge the support of the bill that is now before the House?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am not aware of it.

Mr. QUEZON. I assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that is a fact.

Mr. OLMSTED. It would be interesting to know just how the bill was explained to them. The people of the Philippines have been led largely to believe that there was some project on foot in the United States whereby great corporations and trusts were to gobble up the lands of their islands. Nothing is further from the truth. Under the law as it stands now no corporation can hold more than 2,500 acres. This question is not involved. This bill does not change the law at all as to corporations, but its effect, if enacted into law, will be to limit individuals to 40 acres of friar lands and prevent their sale or encumbrance of even that small acreage for five years after their purchase. It must have been seen by those who heard my eloquent friend from the Philippines, not only between the lines, but on the lines, that his objection to the sale of these lands in larger tracts is based upon the fear that they will be purchased by citizens of the United States in such quantities as will render it more difficult to disengage the islands from the Government of the United States, because, as he frankly said, those people who bought the lands would come here and insist that this Government should keep control, as otherwise their possessions would not be secure.

Why, Mr. Speaker, this bill does not involve any great economic principle, any great principle of government. It applies to about 125,000 acres of land in a country having a land area of more than 115,000 square miles—an area about equal to that of the six New England States, New York, New Jersey, and Delaware combined. It applies only to the unoccupied, vacant, remaining unsold friar lands.

The public lands, so called, were acquired by the United States from the Spanish Crown under the treaty of Paris. The organic act of 1902 very generously provided that they might be disposed of for the benefit of the Filipinos. They had belonged to the Crown of Spain. They had not been, as has been asserted, the inheritance of the Filipinos. They had never belonged to the Filipinos until, in the act of Congress of 1902, we gave them to the Filipinos to be disposed of for their benefit, subject to certain conditions.

One of those conditions was that not more than 16 hectares, or about 40 acres, should be sold to a single individual. Another condition was that no purchaser, even though he paid cash down, could have the lands except upon the condition of personal and continued occupancy for five years, during which period—mark you, for five years—he could neither sell nor encumber those lands. He could not even borrow money on them to improve them.

We had a perfect right to impose that condition, whether it was wise or not, and it can not be considered as illiberal or unjust to have imposed those conditions so long as we ourselves were giving the land to the Filipinos. Whether those conditions were wise or unwise was not a subject of just complaint at that time.

But these friar lands were not public lands. They were in private ownership and had been in private ownership for many years before we acquired the islands. We almost compelled the Philippine Government to purchase them. There were about 400,000 acres of them, in round numbers. About one-half, or 200,000 acres, were vacant, unoccupied, untenanted, wild lands. About half of them, or, say, about 200,000 acres, were in the neighborhood of cities. They were thickly peopled. There were about 160,000 people living on these 200,000 acres.

Under the provisions of the act of 1902, which put no limit upon the amount of friar lands which could be sold to an individual, those lands—the tenanted lands—have been sold or leased—most of them—and some of the unoccupied lands. There remain at this time only about 125,000 acres of unsold friar lands that could possibly be sold in any considerable tracts.

Now, where are those lands? Let me show you. The Binan estate in Laguna Province contains 725 acres unsold. That is all in that Province. Now, would the Government be overturned, would those islands be exploited, if that land were sold—those 725 acres—to one purchaser?

I will put this table in my remarks in concise order, but I will comment upon it as I go along:

Statement showing the area of unoccupied lands on the various friar estates Jan. 1, 1911, showing the approximate size of the vacant tracts.

	Acres.
Binan estate, Laguna Province. The bulk of this area is in one tract in the southwestern part of the estate.	725
Muntinlupa, Laguna Province. The vacant land lies in the southeastern portion of the estate and the great bulk of the area is in one tract.	2,450
Santa Rosa, Laguna Province. Probably not over 400 acres of this is in one tract.	1,300
Calamba, Laguna Province. This, with the exception of a few small tracts, consists of practically three large tracts of 5,000 acres or over.	18,450
Naic, Cavite Province. This consists of practically two tracts—one in the northeastern portion of the estate of about 6,000 acres and the other on the southern end of the estate of about 2,500 acres; the balance is in small parcels.	9,075
San Francisco de Malabon, Cavite Province. Practically all in one tract.	13,900

	Acres.
Santa Cruz de Malabon, Cavite Province. Practically all in one tract, adjoining the vacant land on the San Francisco de Malabon and the Naic estates.	14,700
Imus, Cavite. Practically all in one tract and adjoins the San Francisco de Malabon estate.	22,500
Santa Maria de Pandi, Bulacan Province. This is in scattered parcels not exceeding 100 acres in any one parcel.	4,125
Orion, Bataan Province. One parcel of about 100 acres; balance in small parcels.	175
Talisay, Cebu Province. This is practically one entire tract on which occupants have leased small areas here and there.	10,000
Isabela, Isabela Province	48,622
Total	146,023

The above statement shows that there is vacant and available for sale or lease the following large tracts of friar lands:

Estates.	Number of tracts.	Area.
		Acres.
Isabela	1	48,622
Cavite	1	40,000
Do	1	6,000
Laguna	3	5,000
Do	1	2,400
Do	1	700
Do	1	400
Talisay	1	10,000

The Multinlupa estate in Laguna Province has 2,450 acres. The bulk of it is in one tract. On the Santa Rosa estate there are 1,300 acres, but not over 400 acres in any one tract.

Now, would the Philippine Islands be exploited or the form of government be affected if the Philippine Government should sell that tract of 400 acres in one piece to one purchaser? In the Calamba estate there are 18,450 acres, divided into a number of small tracts and three separate tracts of about 5,000 acres each. The largest tract unsold is in the Isabela Province, 48,622 acres. That cost the Government $159,851, a little over $3 an acre. It is in a sparsely settled Province, 100 miles from any seaport, and that seaport itself 200 miles from Manila. You could not sell that land in 40-acre tracts subject to the conditions of this bill in a thousand years. Nobody would buy a 40-acre tract there under the condition that he could not sell it or borrow money on it for five years even though he had paid cash for it. There is no State in the Union, Mr. Speaker, that, so far as I know, has any limit upon the amount of land that may be purchased by an individual. Certainly I know of my own knowledge that Pennsylvania, Louisiana, Mississippi, and other States sold out their lands at fixed prices to anyone who wanted to buy them without limitation as to quantity. I think the same is true of the State of Virginia and all the other States of the Union. Why should we put upon the Filipino people a limitation upon the sale of their own lands of 40 acres? They could not sell them in 40-acre tracts at any such prices as they can obtain in larger tracts.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs that reported the organic act. Why did he put a limitation of 40 acres on the public lands?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am not responsible for the limitation in regard to public lands. But, as I have said, that was a different proposition, because we were giving away the lands, and it was entirely proper and just that we should attach to the gift any conditions we chose.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has just suggested that no State in this Union places a limitation on the amount of land that an individual or corporation may own.

Mr. OLMSTED. So far as I know, none upon ownership by individuals.

Mr. COOPER. Then would the gentleman say that there ought not to be in the Philippine Islands any restriction upon the amount of land which a corporation could own there?

Mr. OLMSTED. I would not say that. There are restrictions upon the amount that corporations may own.

Mr. COOPER. Would the gentleman say there ought to be no restriction on the amount of land an individual might own or acquire of the public lands in the Philippines?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will not say that. The public lands were lands we gave them, and I think it was proper to put a limitation on a gift.

Mr. COOPER. Why is it any more proper to put a limitation upon that than it would be upon these four hundred thousand and odd acres of the best lands in the islands, owned by the friars?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is just what I was about to try to explain. The 60,000,000 acres of public lands we were giving away. We had a perfect moral and legal right to impose conditions upon the gift; but these friar lands were purchased by the Filipino people with their own money, with the contemplation clearly expressed in the organic act of 1902 that they were to be sold as rapidly as possible, the proceeds to be put in a trust fund for the purpose of paying off the $7,000,000 of bonds on which they had raised the money to make the purchases. Now, the reason why we ought not by legislation to put these restrictions upon the sale of these friar lands is that they could not get out of them in small tracts the money to pay the bonds. Let me show you how it works. Much has been said about the sale of 56,000 acres to one purchaser in the island of Mindoro. The purchase was made by one E. L. Poole. It subsequently developed that he had made the purchase in the interest of three men whose names have been mentioned. They did not buy it for the Sugar Trust; they bought it for themselves; and it developed in the hearings that the Sugar Trust people were angry with them for doing it. So far as I have ever learned or been able to discover, the Sugar Trust itself does not engage in the raising of sugar cane. It refines sugar, but it does not raise any sugar cane.

Mr. NORRIS. It raises Cain, but not sugar cane.

Mr. OLMSTED. As the gentleman says, it may raise Cain, but not sugar cane. That purchase by Mr. Poole of 56,000 acres was the San Jose estate, on the island of Mindoro, a distant island, unsettled, uninhabited. Nobody would have bought a 40-acre tract there. There were public lands adjoining this estate—just as good land—offered at $2 an acre in 40-acre tracts, but nobody would buy 40 acres. This 56,000 acres was sold for $6 an acre, thus permitting the Philippine Government to get out, with interest, the $298,000 which it had paid for the land, the entire selling price amounting to $367,000.

I do not know that I would be in favor, in general, of allowing sales in such large quantities as that; but that was an isolated tract, and it was a good business transaction. The only other very large tract is the Isabela estate, on which I believe one party was given an option, but threw it up and would not take it. The Philippine Government can probably get its money back out of this estate if permitted to sell in tracts to suit purchasers, but never in 40-acre lots with the nonalienation and nonencumbrance conditions attached.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will it embarrass my friend if I ask him some questions?

Mr. OLMSTED. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Is this the only sugar land in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no; there are plenty of sugar lands in the Philippine Islands. I am glad my friend has asked that question. The sugar lands in the Philippine Islands are mostly on the island of Negros, as the gentleman from Ohio suggested a few minutes ago. Those lands are worked in a very primitive style. They get about 60 per cent of the juice out of the cane, whereas by modern methods they ought to get 90 per cent. Now, nobody would ever buy an acre of these lands for sugar purposes if they could only buy 40 acres, because the testimony before the Insular Affairs Committee, by witnesses from the Philippines and more particularly from Porto Rico, shows that there ought to be at least 3,000 to 5,000 acres in one ownership to justify the erection of a modern centrale, which costs a great deal of money.

Mr. BUTLER. Is this the only use to which this land can be put—the raising of sugar cane?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no. The principal products of the islands are hemp, copra, sugar, and tobacco, in the order named. Copra, which is the form in which the product of the coconut is exported for external use, is one of the most profitable. The exports of copra from the Philippine Islands in 1910 amounted to more than $9,000,000. The coconut is next to hemp in importance.

Since the gentleman has asked that question, I am reminded to refer to the report of the Philippine Commission for 1910. Upon page 116 I read as follows:

Although the Philippine Islands are to-day, owing to the favorable climate and soil conditions, the greatest coconut-producing country in the world, it has been made practically impossible for a man to own a coconut plantation here unless he can buy private land, for he can not purchase more than 40 acres of Government (public) land, which, at 54 trees to the acre, would give him a total of 2,160 trees, making no allowance for land needed for building sites or otherwise unavailable. As these islands have thousands of square miles of the best coconut land lying idle, the wisdom of the provision is not apparent.

Similarly, the islands have very extensive unoccupied and uncultivated areas perfectly adapted to the growing of rice. They ought not only to feed their own people liberally but to export rice in large quantities to China and other neighboring countries where there is a strong demand for it. Instead of doing this they imported during the year rice to the value of ₱6,643,924. The obvious remedy for this situation is cultivation upon a large scale with modern methods and machinery, but there would be ground for doubt as to the sanity of a person who would import modern machinery to work a 40-acre tract of rice land.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to be conceded all around that it would be a good thing financially for the Filipino, but it is said that he is opposed to selling the land in such large tracts. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania tell me what was discovered in the hearings touching the feeling of the Filipinos as to the disposition of his land in large tracts?

Mr. OLMSTED. It was clear that the only objection to the sale of large tracts was the fear that it might be gathered up by corporations and trusts of the United States, and that if purchased here by individuals the purchasers, fearing that their possessions would not be safe under native rule, would exert their influence to prevent Philippine independence.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question or two?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I am asking the questions for the purpose of gathering information, for I know the gentleman has studied the question and understands it better than I do. Does the gentleman think there ought to be no limitation on the amount of land that can be acquired by an individual?

Mr. OLMSTED. Of public land I think there ought.

Mr. NORRIS. Why should there be a limitation on the amount of public land and not on other lands? Is not this land that would be subject to the same objection in one case as in the other as to being held in large quantities?

Mr. OLMSTED. If there were 60,000,000 acres of this land, the question of public policy might come in. As to the public lands, we were giving them those lands, and we preferred to give them so that they could only be sold in small tracts.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is proper; but why should we limit the public lands as to the amount an individual can purchase unless it is desirable to have the limitation on the amount of friar lands that a man can purchase? Why, if it is not desirable to limit other lands that a man can purchase, should we limit the lands that one individual can purchase?

Mr. OLMSTED. The difference is this: If I am giving the gentleman a farm it is proper and just for me to put conditions on its sale by him, but it would not be proper and just for me to limit and put conditions upon the sale of the gentleman's own farm which he had purchased with his own money.

Mr. NORRIS. The object of the Government in limiting the sale of public lands is to prevent the ownership of large tracts of lands?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; to prevent the 60,000,000 acres of public lands donated by the United States from being gathered into a few hands.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to be conceded by all that it is desirable to see that no one individual owns such large tracts of land, and if that be true——

Mr. OLMSTED. That has not any reference to one individual, but the whole situation of the islands. It is not desirable that the whole land of the islands shall be gathered into a few hands.

Mr. NORRIS. It is desirable to have the lands in the hands of a great many rather than in the ownership of a few.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is it.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, why should not we put the limitation on the individual purchasing these lands? It may be that we have not the legal right to do it, but why should it not be desirable to limit it in one case as well as in the other?

Mr. OLMSTED. The reason is that we were giving the lands in the one case, and they can not complain of the conditions; but in the other case it is their own land, bought with their own money, and we ought not arbitrarily to impose such limitations and conditions as will prevent the Philippine Government from recouping itself for the moneys expended in the purchase of these friar lands.

Mr. NORRIS. But we are not pretending to take away any land from any individual; we are only seeking to limit and prevent them from acquiring large tracts of land.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is proposed by this bill to prevent the Philippine Government from selling the 125,000 acres of remaining unoccupied and untenanted friar lands in anything above 40-acre tracts, and that I think unwise and unjust. It amounts to a practical denial of the right to sell.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman's judgment, if he has given the subject any thought, as to the right, as a matter of law, of Congress to so legislate as to limit the purchase of land by individuals. I notice that question has been raised in the discussion here.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think Congress had a perfect right in disposing of the 60,000,000 acres of public land to provide that it should not be sold out by the Philippine Government in any larger tracts than 40 acres.

Mr. NORRIS. That does not quite answer my question. I am referring particularly to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE], who said that he proposed to offer later an amendment of that kind. The question was raised by the gentleman from Iowa that we had no constitutional right to put on a limitation of that kind.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think it is a very serious question. I do not care to give an opinion offhand. I have not considered that question, as it is not involved in this bill. If you should enact a law that no man should buy more than 10 acres of land you would deprive the owners of land of the power of sales and thus deprive them of much of the value of their property.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, but I suppose that would be controlled in the different States by the constitutional limitations. In the Philippine Islands, however, we are not limited by any constitutional inhibition, as I understand it. Still I do not pretend to understand the legal phase of it, for I never heard the question raised until now. I thought the gentleman had studied the question and perhaps had an opinion about it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have not. It has not even been suggested until to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to go into the constitutional feature of this, but I am going to leave that part for bigger lawyers. I want to get at the justice of the thing. Do the Filipinos object to the sale of this land for any reason except for that of sentiment alone?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not think the Filipinos would object to the sale of this land in tracts of any size if they did not fear that it would in some way affect the question of independence.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. BUTLER. Just one moment. Has the Filipino in any way assented to the sale of this land? He has a government there. Has the government been consulted?

Mr. OLMSTED. These friar lands have been sold, so far as they have been sold at all, in pursuance of an act of the assembly passed by the Philippine Legislature.

Mr. BUTLER. Who elected that legislature?

Mr. OLMSTED. The Filipinos elected one branch of the legislature, and it required the agreement of the two branches.

Mr. BUTLER. Did the branch of the legislature elected by the Filipinos agree to the sale; did it approve the sale?

Mr. OLMSTED. The legislature authorized the sale of the lands by general legislation. I do not know that these particular transactions were ever brought to their attention.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know enough about the organized government, but I would thank the gentlemen to answer this further question. The land was sold by a commission.

Mr. OLMSTED. The land was sold by the land department of the Philipipne Islands.

Mr. BUTLER. The land department of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. OLMSTED. Through the regular agencies of the Philippine Government.

Mr. BUTLER. And the Philippine Legislature by general legislation authorized the sale of these lands?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Then what are they complaining about? If the people of the Philippine Islands are unanimously opposed to the sale of these lands, why did the legislature, elected by them, authorize the sale?

Mr. JONES. The legislature was not elected by the Filipinos.

Mr. OLMSTED. Some of them changed their views. When they found a large purchase had been made by citizens of the United States, their fears were worked upon to such an extent that they were led to believe their best lands would all be gobbled up by American corporations and trusts.

Mr. BUTLER. I must not ask the gentleman too many questions, and it is because of my high opinion of his good judgment that I venture to constantly interrupt him. I have always gotten valuable information from him. Was this legislature elected?

Mr. OLMSTED. The lower branch was elected by the Filipino people.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] to say that it was not.

Mr. JONES. I said that the legislature was not elected. The legislature is composed of two branches.

Mr. BUTLER. The legislature is composed of an upper and lower house, I suppose.

Mr. OLMSTED. The lower branch was elected wholly by the Filipino people.

Mr. BUTLER. And that branch consented to this bill?

Mr. OLMSTED. There could not have been any legislation except by both branches.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I can not let that statement go unchallenged. I am not willing to assent to the statement that the legislature consented to this sale.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have stated that this particular transaction was never brought before the legislature, so far as I know, but the act itself was passed by the legislature, and in pursuance of that act the sale was made.

Mr. BUTLER. There was no restriction upon the amount to be sold in any one case in the authority given by the legislature?

Mr. OLMSTED. There was not.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. With pleasure.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, I just want to repeat to the gentleman what I said before when I was addressing the House, that the Philippine Assembly did pass a bill providing that the friar lands should not be sold in excess of 40 acres to individuals and in excess of 2,500 acres to corporations; but this bill failed to become a law because the Philippine Commission refused to pass it.

Mr. BUTLER. When was the law passed to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. QUEZON. As soon as they found out that the Philippine Government had sold to representatives of certain gentlemen in New York 56,000 acres of land in Mindoro.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, let me ask——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman if this was unanimous?

Mr. QUEZON. Absolutely unanimous, there being not one dissenting vote.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us learn something in this connection. You do elect a legislature in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. QUEZON. No, sir; we elect the assembly.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, an assembly; you elect the lower house?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. You have voters' qualifications there?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. And this legislature that authorized the sale of this land was elected by the people?

Mr. QUEZON. Yes. I say this assembly, as soon as they found out the sale of the Mindoro state, they tried to pass a bill to prevent further sales of this kind, but it failed to become a law because the commission did not agree to it.

Mr. BUTLER. As soon as they comprehended the extent of their act, as soon as they discovered there was authority in the commission to sell this land in large quantities, then they regretted their act?

Mr. QUEZON. There is something to be said about that, and I do not wish to take up the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit me to say to his colleague——

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. I think the situation in regard to that matter is this: The assembly—that is, the legislature—of the Philippines passed this act, and they were of the opinion that the organic law restricted the sale. They did not provide the amount which could be sold by the act which applied, as they thought it would be taken care of by the organic law.

Mr. JONES. They put the same construction Mr. GARRETT, Mr. COOPER, and many others did upon the language of section 65 of the organic act.

Mr. BUTLER. I am willing to accept any statement the gentleman may make, but I would like to know how the gentleman assumes that was in the mind of the Philippine Legislature when they passed the law. That is what bothers me.

Mr. OLMSTED. The fact is that the Philippine Legislature passed one law touching friar lands in which they made the lands salable, subject to the same conditions that the organic act imposed upon the sale of public lands, but, finding that the lands would not sell with that limit of 40 acres, they enacted a later law, authorizing the sale of friar lands, without limit as to quantity, and in pursuance of that law this sale of the San Jose estate of 56,000 acres on the island of Mindoro was made.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will.

Mr. STERLING. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania thinks it important, from a financial standpoint, that the Government be allowed to sell these lands—that is, the friar lands—in larger amounts.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think it is of the utmost importance.

Mr. STERLING. And that the Philippine Government thinks so.

Mr. OLMSTED. It did think so when it passed that act.

Mr. STERLING. In order to provide the money to meet these bonds.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; they were practically compelled by our legislation to purchase these lands at a price it was almost feared they would never be able to get for them again and to incur an indebtedness of $7,000,000 and a charge for annual bond interest of $280,000. Now, it is highly important that they shall get out of this land sufficient money to pay off these bonds, and the prospects are that they will be able to do it if they are permitted to sell the land in reasonable tracts. And let me show you how the sale under the provisions of this law operates. Let me call attention again to the fact that under this bill as proposed you could only sell 40 acres to one person, and he would have to live on it continually for five years, during which period he could neither sell it nor borrow money upon it, and nobody is going to buy much land under those conditions. Let me show you how it works. Down to December 31, 1910, out of 60,000,000 acres of public land subject to these conditions there had been only 52 sales to individuals, aggregating less than 2,000 acres. Now, how long will it take to sell these friar lands—these desolate, wild, unoccupied friar lands—under such conditions as that?

Mr. STERLING. The gentleman spoke awhile ago about the Spanish Government ceding this territory to the United States——

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; the 60,000,000 acres.

Mr. STERLING. At that time did no individual in the Philippine Islands own title to land? Was their title entirely in the Spanish Government?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; thousands and thousands of acres of land; but these particular 60,000,000 acres were in the Spanish Crown.

Mr. STERLING. That land was outside of land owned by individuals?

Mr. OLMSTED. None of it was or ever had been in private ownership.

Mr. STERLING. Was it under cultivation?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; it was not. There may have been some occupants on it, some of what we would call "squatters," and some tenants perhaps, but the provision was made in the act of 1902 that they might acquire the lands which they were occupying.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit me one thing further in answer to the suggestion made by his colleague [Mr. BUTLER] a few moments ago as to the reason of the apprehension of the Filipinos?

As I understand, they are twofold. One is, as stated by the gentleman, the fear that it will interrupt the coming of independence, and the other is, as I understand it, the fear that it will lead back to the very same condition that brought about the necessity for the purchase of these lands a few years ago; that is, the ownership in large bodies.

Mr. OLMSTED. There is not the slightest danger of that. The trouble at that time was that these lands were owned by three orders of friars, to whose membership, I believe, no native priest was admitted. They had great influence in their respective municipalities, and they exerted it altogether in favor of Spain and against the people of the islands when they were in insurrection against Spain. That aroused opposition. They threw some of these priests into prison, some of them were killed, and others they drove into Manila, where the Americans found them when they came to occupy the islands. There is not the slightest danger of the lands going back into their hands again.

Mr. GARRETT. Let me say, I do not think the Filipinos fear they will go back into the hands of the friars again, or into the hands of the religious orders, but one of the troubles was the ownership of these lands in large quantities by these orders, and the Filipino people are apprehensive that the ownership by any other agency, industrial as well as religious, may bring about again the same trouble.

Mr. OLMSTED. Such trouble can never come again. It is gone forever. There were 160,000 people living on friar lands. They would not pay rent. They would not acknowledge the ownership of the friars. They disputed title. That has all been done away with. The Philippine Government borrowed $7,000,000 and bought the lands from the friars. Its title is not in dispute. The question now is how to dispose of the lands so that the Government may get its money back. I think it is best for the islands to dispose of them so that they will be developed and be productive and furnish good living or good wages to the people of the islands.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I would like to inquire whether or not the same limitations are placed upon the other public lands as are sought to be imposed upon these friar lands by this bill?

Mr. OLMSTED. On the public lands which the United States gave to the Philippines—some 60,000,000 acres—we did impose the condition, when we gave them to them, that they could sell only 40 acres to an individual.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman know whether the action of the commission in vetoing this act passed by the general assembly was unanimous?

Mr. OLMSTED. I never heard of the bill, except as stated by the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON].

Mr. QUEZON. I am aware of the fact that the commission opposed the bill, because the commission believes in selling these lands in large tracts. Moreover, for several years they have been recommending to Congress that the limitation imposed by the organic act on the sale of public lands be removed.

Mr. BUTLER. They want to sell in larger tracts?

Mr. JONES. The commission wants to be given a free hand in the matter of the sale of both the public lands and the friar lands.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Without limit?

Mr. JONES. Without limit.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think that statement is without authority.

Mr. JONES. They wish the present limitations removed on both public and friar lands.

Mr. OLMSTED. They have proposed limitations.

Mr. QUEZON. Ten thousand acres.

Mr. OLMSTED. Six thousand hectares to corporations, 500 hectares (1,250 acres) to an individual. Let us get somewhere near accuracy. Here is the report in my hand.

Mr. JONES. There have been several reports. Every year they make some recommendation, and when Mr. Worcester, the secretary of the interior, under whose department these lands are sold, was here he urged the taking off of these limitations. The commission, I will say in reply to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], will never consent to such a measure as that which passed the assembly. I do not know just what the vote was, because four of the nine of the commission are Filipinos, but the majority of them are Americans; and they were all opposed to it, every one of them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is the reason I asked whether or not the position taken was unanimous, considering the make-up of the assembly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Let me answer the question. This answers partly the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], and the gentleman from the Philippine Islands [Mr. QUEZON]. I hold in my hand the report of the Philippine Commission, and they do recommend the raising but not the entire removal of the limit on the sale of public lands. This is their language; their recommendation:

> Fifth. That the amount of land which may be acquired, owned, and used for agricultural purposes in the Philippine Islands by any corporation be extended to 6,000 hectares.
> Sixth. That the amount of land allowed to be taken up by any one person under the homestead law be increased from 16 to 50 hectares; that the amount that individuals may purchase from the Government be increased to 500 hectares; and that the amount allowed to be sold or conveyed to corporations or associations of persons be increased from 1,024 hectares to 6,000 hectares.

Mr. JONES. That is 15,000 acres.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; for corporations. One thousand two hundred and fifty acres for an individual. Now, I was asked whether they were unanimous. This report is signed by W. Cameron Forbes (president), Newton W. Gilbert, Dean C. Worcester, Gregorio Areneta, Rafael Palma, Juan Sumulong, Charles A. Branagan, and Charles B. Elliott; all the Filipino members joined in that unanimous report.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the date of that report?

Mr. OLMSTED. November 22, 1910.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from the Philippines?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that those four Filipino members of the commission are appointed and therefore they feel that they have to support the policy of the administration.

Mr. BUTLER. Who appoints them?

Mr. QUEZON. The President of the United States.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman does not deny that they are very intelligent gentlemen, does he?

Mr. QUEZON. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. OLMSTED. And the gentleman does not impugn their character?

Mr. QUEZON. Not at all. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania will realize that men are liable to consider their private interests in every question, no matter whether they are Filipinos or Spaniards or Americans or Germans, and these gentlemen, being appointed by the administration, are more or less under the impression that to remain in their position they have to support the policy of the Government. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the gentleman's assumption, but I do not think that any one of them was ever removed or threatened with removal for failing to agree or vote with the American members of the commission, and it is a fact that they do not always agree.

Mr. JONES. It may be an assumption, but it is a pretty reasonable one. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. As to that, let me call your attention to the case of the United States internal-revenue collector who, although openly opposing President Taft for reelection, was not only not removed from that position, but, his term expiring, he was actually reappointed a few days ago; and I ask the gentleman from the Philippines if he has ever known of a Filipino official in that country being discriminated against or intimidated in any way by the administration?

Mr. QUEZON. I do not say that. I simply say that it is natural and human to be influenced by those to whom we owe our position.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Lest Members get the idea that the commission has the right to dispose of these lands alone, is it not true that these lands can not now be disposed of without the act of the lower assembly of the Philippine Islands, which is composed of Filipinos elected by their people?

Mr. OLMSTED. The organic act provides that these lands shall be disposed of only in accordance with laws passed by the Philippine Legislature.

Mr. TOWNER. And the effect of this law is to limit the right of the Filipinos themselves to dispose of their own property?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is what the pending bill would do.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from the Philippines?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. QUEZON. The effect of this bill will be for Congress to do what the Filipinos want to do, and what they are not allowed to do. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] resumes, the Chair wants to admonish Members that when they desire to interrupt a gentleman who has the floor they should rise and address the Chair. There is not anything so calculated to produce confusion as for a Member to sit in his seat and interrupt a Member on the floor, because the Member who is making the speech can not hear half the time and know what the other gentleman says. I take occasion at this moment, when nobody is sitting in his seat and interrupting, to make that announcement.

Mr. OLMSTED. Now, Mr. Speaker, to show the operation of this bill should it become a law, I have already stated, and I state again, that during the 10 years ending December 30, 1910, the Philippine Government was able to make only 52 sales of public land to individuals under the conditions which the organic act imposed upon them. They have sold 82 tracts of friar lands in excess of 16 hectares.

Here is a complete table showing all of them:

Of the 82 persons who have thus purchased more than 16 hectares each of friar lands, 78 are Filipinos and 4 are Americans. Four hundred and ninety-two persons have outstanding leases of more than 16 hectares each of friar lands. Four hundred and seventy-five of such lessees are Filipinos, 15 are Americans, and 2 Englishmen. The most of these leases are for one year. A few of them are for shorter (p. 208) and a few for longer periods. Some of them contain specific options to purchase, as in the case of Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, who acquired possession of 1,050 hectares under a lease with an option to purchase, and as construed by the officials of the Philippine Government every lease of friar lands involves an option to purchase. If any of these sales or leases in excess of 16 hectares to one person were illegal they were all illegal, whether the purchasers were Filipinos or Americans.

The first on the list is a sale of 19 hectares. There was a little tract of 19 hectares. Would any principle of government have been subserved by requiring that those 3 in excess of 16 hectares should be lopped off?

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to a matter?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I have noticed what you say in your minority report on that subject. The gentleman will recall what section 65, which provides for the disposition of these friar lands, has to say on that subject. It says:

> Such settlers and occupants at the time said lands are acquired by the Government shall have the preference over all others to lease, purchase, or acquire their holdings within such reasonable time as may be determined by said Government.

Now, that 19 hectares of land to which the gentleman refers was the "holding" of a Filipino. It was in his possession, and the law expressly provides that settlers and occupants shall be permitted to purchase their holdings. The purchases of small tracts in excess of 16 hectares, to which the gentleman directs attention, were made by settlers and occupants, and such purchases were authorized by section 65.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the statement of the gentleman, and undoubtedly his belief; but the gentleman does not know that to be a fact. I might just as well say it is not a fact as for him to say it is.

Mr. JONES. I know it is a fact as well as I can know anything that has been told me by others.

Mr. TOWNER. That is as to that individual instance, but not as to all those other sales. Would the gentleman say that?

Mr. JONES. I mean to say that so far as I know to the contrary every one of those small sales to natives was a sale to a man in possession of the land at the time.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman says so far as he knows to the contrary, but has he information which will enable him to say?

Mr. JONES. I do not think there is a single exception.

Mr. OLMSTED. Can the gentleman, without looking at the report, name to me a single native who purchased the land which he was occupying?

Mr. JONES. I can not give names of these natives any more than the gentleman can. He can not even pronounce the names of the natives he has in the report before him.

Mr. OLMSTED. I can pronounce some of them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This bill would prevent any Filipino who owned 41 acres of land selling that 41 acres hereafter to another Filipino, would it not?

Mr. OLMSTED. No. It would prevent the Government selling more than 40 acres. If the Government had a tract of 41 acres, it could not sell more than 40 acres. I do not know what it could do with the other acre.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Anyone who owned 41 acres of the friar lands could not sell that.

Mr. OLMSTED. He could not sell it for five years after purchasing, that is sure. Now, I want to make a further suggestion to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] that if his construction of section 65 is right, then even lands held by the occupant would be subject to the limitations of the act, or, as he says, the 40-acre limitation applied to the public lands.

Mr. JONES. What limitations does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. OLMSTED. If sales of the friar lands, under section 65, are limited at all to the conditions applicable to public lands, they are all applicable to holdings of more than 40 acres.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman has the act before him, and he knows that although this section provides that the land shall be disposed of according to the provisions of this act, the last sentence makes it clear that settlers and occupants of friar lands shall be permitted to purchase their holdings. An exception is expressly made in favor of settlers and occupants.

Mr. OLMSTED. If it is inimical to the interests of the people that anybody shall buy more than 40 acres, why was it not just as objectionable for a man who had squatted on the land to buy more than 40 acres?

Mr. JONES. There is no law that prevents a man from owning over 40 acres. There is a law which prevents his buying from the Government over 40 acres.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is what I am talking about—buying from the Government.

Mr. JONES. This exception is not the only one in the law. I call the gentleman's attention to section 14, which provides that wherever, prior to December, 1908, a native was in the occupancy of land he was not limited to the 16 hectares.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman will read that, he will find he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. JONES. I wish to correct myself.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have already corrected the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. Section 14 provides that patents may be issued to any native for lands occupied by him prior to the 13th of August, 1898, but limits the quantity to 16 hectares. It also provides that those persons who held equitable interests in public lands prior to the transfer of sovereignty might perfect their titles to those lands. As to those lands, there is no limitation as to quantity. This, I think, is a correct statement of the law as set forth in section 14.

Mr. OLMSTED. There is no reference in section 14 to anything except the public lands, when it provides that title shall not be granted to any land for more than 16 hectares in extent.

But it is not worth while for the gentleman and myself to discuss the proper construction of section 65. The attorney general of the Philippines delivered a written opinion upon it. The Attorney General of the United States delivered an opinion upon it. Mr. Moorfield Story, a distinguished lawyer of Boston, delivered an opinion upon it; and in the report upon the friar-land investigation I had the honor to prepare an opinion which was signed by eight other members of the committee, which I will, if given permission, insert in my remarks here, showing my views and theirs upon the proper construction of section 65, and that it does not limit and was not intended to limit the sale of friar lands or to impose upon them the same conditions of nonalienation and nonencumbrance for five years, which apply to the sales of public lands. I have already pointed out that in 10 years the Government could sell less than 2,000 acres of the public land in 40-acre tracts, under these conditions of nonalienation and nonencumbrance for five years, while it had no difficulty in making a great many sales of the friar lands at greatly higher prices than the public lands were offered at. Friar lands in larger tracts sold at $6 alongside of public lands which could not be sold at $2 in $40-acre tracts.

I was about to illustrate how the 40-acre tract limitation would operate on the friar lands. Here has been a sale—the third on the list—of 18 hectares of very valuable land at a price equal to $722 an acre. Does anybody suppose they could have sold that at such a figure if they had to chop off 2 hectares? And what sort of a price could they have obtained from a separate and distinct purchaser for the 2 hectares? Here is a sale of 59 hectares and another of 127 hectares, and so on. It would have been impossible to have sold those lands if you had to cut them down to 16 hectares. They would not divide into 40-acre lots. It would have been impossible to sell them at any such price, and they could not have sold them at any reasonable price if the purchaser had to keep them five years before he could sell them or borrow money on them.

When this question of friar-land sales arose in the last Congress a committee was appointed to investigate it. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] himself in his majority report upon this pending bill quotes from President Taft's message of December 21, 1911. The President said:

> Pending an investigation by Congress at its last session, through one of its committees, into the disposition of the friars' lands, Secretary Dickinson directed that the friars' lands should not be sold in excess of the limits fixed for the public lands until Congress should pass upon the subject or should have concluded its investigation. This order has been an obstruction to the disposition of the lands, and I expect to direct the Secretary of War to return to the practice under the opinion of the Attorney General which will enable us to dispose of the lands much more promptly and to prepare a sinking fund with which to meet the $7,000,000 of bonds issued for the purchase of the lands.

I call attention to this language: "This order has been an obstruction to the disposition of the lands." And now gentlemen propose by the passage of this bill to make the obstruction permanent. That will be the effect of this bill.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made a thorough investigation of the subject matter, and I would like to inquire whether the people in the Philippine Islands are in favor of enlarging the number of acres that may be purchased or keeping the law just as it is.

Mr. OLMSTED. The people of the Philippine Islands, as I am convinced—some of them—the few of them who have really considered this matter, are very much afraid, and impose upon others the belief, that if they are sold in large tracts the big trusts and corporations in the United States will gobble them up; that the people of the United States becoming interested there would fear that an independent Filipino Government would render their position less secure and would have sufficient influence with Congress to prevent the granting of Filipino independence.

But I do not think that the disposition of 125,000 acres (for that is all that is left of the unoccupied friar lands, and much of it could not be sold in very large tracts) will have any effect at all upon the question of Filipino independence. I think their fears are groundless. I do not think that any corporation or trust is going down there in any such way. In fact, corporations are, by the present law, limited to the ownership of 2,500 acres, and this bill does not touch that.

I think it would be a good thing for the islands if some one would establish one or more modern sugar centrales and be permitted to buy land enough to warrant them in doing it. I believe it would be a good thing for the Filipinos to have an object lesson and learn the modern methods of making sugar. They could learn to make it a great deal cheaper than they do now. Now they do not save over 60 per cent of the cane juice, whereas by the modern methods they could save 90 per cent.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the establishment of a sugar centrale depend on the purchase of a large body of land?

Mr. OLMSTED. No sane man would put up a centrale unless he had land enough to raise the cane so as to be assured of cane enough to run his plant.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have sufficient time to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended so that he may finish his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of my colleague and of the House.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Another question. My impression of a sugar centrale is that it is a mill prepared to grind or crush the cane and make sugar. It may raise that cane or it may be cane raised by the small farmers in the vicinity. That is done in some instances in the United States, and perhaps it is done in Cuba, but about that I am not informed. Can not that be done just as well in the Philippine Islands; can not the people living around the centrale raise the cane and sell it to the centrale?

Mr. OLMSTED. They could, but would they? That is the question that the party would want to be sure about before they put in the money to establish the centrale. We took a great deal of testimony before the Committee on Insular Affairs in regard to that when we had the Porto Rico question before us, and the unanimous testimony was that nobody would be justified in putting the requisite money into the construction of a centrale, which is very expensive, requiring elaborate machinery and in some cases a railroad running to the field so as to bring in the cane promptly, unless he had land enough to assure him of a sufficient quantity of cane.

They could not depend upon the natives to raise a sufficient supply, and therefore it was deemed wise in the case of Porto Rico to allow a limit of 3,000 acres. Secretary of War Dickinson thought that the limit ought to be 5,000, but we concluded to allow them 3,000, which would assure them of a reasonable amount of cane, and then it was our belief that it would be better to let them depend more or less upon the farmers for the rest. Porto Rico is a small island, and the sugar territory there is quite limited.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman would not advocate as a policy elsewhere than in the Philippines, perhaps, the acquisition of farming lands by corporations in such quantities that it would to some extent at least interfere with individual ownership of lands?

Mr. OLMSTED. It would not to such an extent that it would interfere with individual operations. Neither under this law nor under the present law can a corporation own more than 2,500 acres of land in the Philippines.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am sure the gentleman will agree with the suggestion that it is better for any country to have the people interested in the ownership of the soil than to have the corporations own it and the people working for them as hired hands.

Mr. OLMSTED. As a general proposition that is true; but the owners of the soil, so far as sugar is concerned—and I am not saying whether sugar is to be raised in the Philippines or not——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am assuming that it is.

Mr. OLMSTED. If it is, there must be sufficient capital to put up one of these centrales.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is the manufacture of the farming product into sugar.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. Is it not true that the Mindoro Development Co., which owns only 2,500 acres of land, has gone to work and put up a magnificent sugar centrale and spent a great deal of money on wharves, harbors, and so forth?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am not advised as to that. I think they did have it in contemplation. Whether they have done it or not I do not know.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; they have erected it.

Mr. OLMSTED. If they did, they did it because they had made sure that they could get the cane from the owners of large tracts of land.

Mr. JONES. Because they made sure they could get the cane from Horace Havemeyer and his associates, who bought 56,210 acres of land adjoining them.

Mr. OLMSTED. If they have erected a centrale, I have no doubt they did it on some assurance of that kind. Otherwise they would not have been sane business men. My information is that it has not been constructed. I may be mistaken.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman is mistaken about that. It has been constructed.

Mr. JONES. Then they have the object lesson that the gentleman desired.

Mr. OLMSTED. I am glad that they have. It will be a good thing. I do not think that there is any sugar mill in Louisiana dependent entirely upon cane raised by other people. Such mills are invariably owned by those who also own a large acreage of cane-producing land. In Hawaii very large bodies of cane lands are owned by those who grind the cane, and it is so in Cuba and in Porto Rico, for the 3,000-acre limit did not pass the Senate.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not quite understand the gentleman as to whether the law is so specific as to confine the alienation of lands to citizens of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have never put that construction upon it. The gentleman from the Philippine Islands, the Resident Commissioner [Mr. QUEZON], does put that construction upon it, and if I correctly understand the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], he puts that construction upon it. I do not.

Mr. FOWLER. Can that same construction be placed upon the alienation of the individual to the land that he may own?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; I think not.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman thinks the individual then may sell his land to a foreigner the same as to a resident?

Mr. OLMSTED. If he bought public land he could not sell it to anybody for five years after that, and then he could sell it to anybody he pleased, so far as the law now stands.

Mr. FOWLER. A resident or a foreigner?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not limit both the individual and the Philippine Government to the sale of land to the resident Filipino, or to the resident of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. OLMSTED. If that is a desirable thing to do, the gentlemen may suggest it in the form of an amendment. I do not agree to support it, however.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman not think it advisable that the citizen own the land instead of the foreigner?

Mr. OLMSTED. I believe since the gentleman asks me that it would be a good thing for the Filipinos, if they could induce industrious American citizens to go there and invest a reasonable amount of capital in development of the islands, and in showing them modern processes of agriculture in which they are very backward and deficient. I do not know that I would want to be one of the Americans to go, but I think it would be a splendid thing for them to encourage residents of this country or England or any other country to go there and help them to make the islands as prosperous as the fertility of the soil entitles them to be.

Mr. FOWLER. Ought not such people to become citizens of the Philippine Islands if they want to own the real estate there?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, I do not know that they would want to stay there a long time before they could acquire even 40 acres.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not better that the land should lie unimproved and without value to the citizen than to sell it to a foreigner, although he might improve it?

Mr. OLMSTED. That question does not necessarily arise in the consideration of this bill, but I think it would do more good to the Filipinos to get some intelligent, sturdy, honest foreigner in there to show them how to farm.

Mr. FOWLER. But does the gentleman think they ought to give up their lands and homes for that purpose?

Mr. OLMSTED. There is no danger of that. There is ten times as much land there as the Filipinos will cultivate—land enough to support 50,000,000 people.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will.

Mr. JONES. The question I wish to ask my friend from Pennsylvania is this: He said in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that Mr. QUEZON, the Commissioner from the Philippines, held that these lands could only be sold to natives. He did not mean to say by that that Mr. QUEZON was the only one who held that opinion?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; I distinctly said that, if I correctly understood the gentleman from Virginia, he had expressed that opinion.

Mr. JONES. And all the minority members of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the Sixty-first Congress who signed the minority report, and the three majority members who signed the report written by Judge Madison, took that view. Judge Madison was very strong and emphatic in his declaration that under the law nobody but natives could hold the land.

Mr. OLMSTED. If that is the law, it ought to be changed. I do not think that the people of the United States, who gave 60,000,000 acres to the people of the Philippines, ought to be deprived of the small privilege of purchasing 40 acres, if they want it.

Mr. JONES. I am not discussing the wisdom of the law.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to occupy more time of the House. I am not in favor of having the lands of the Philippine Islands exploited in the offensive sense of that term, in the objectionable sense in which we generally use and understand it, but I do not believe there is the slightest danger of that. There are 60,000,000 acres of public lands tied up with these restrictions.

Mr. SLAYDEN. May I ask the gentleman how much of that is arable land, if I may be permitted to do so?

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman means by that land which could be cultivated, I suppose almost all of it could.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, how much land is there in the Philippines altogether in acreage?

Mr. OLMSTED. There are more than 115,000 square miles. I should say seventy to eighty million acres.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And 60,000,000 acres of it nearly all arable. Is not an enormous percentage of that area rocky and untillable?

Mr. OLMSTED. On the mountain tops there is a considerable part that probably could not be cultivated.

Mr. SLAYDEN. My information has been that a large part of the islands of the archipelago are small islands that are rocky, that have no soil on them at all of any consequence.

Mr. OLMSTED. A Government officer who has just visited the Philippines has reported upon the wonderful fertility of those lands. Of this 60,000,000 acres of public land much of it is very fertile.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The percentage of that which may be cultivated is a question in my mind.

Mr. OLMSTED. There are certainly a great many more millions of acres which could be readily cultivated than have ever been cultivated in the past 400 years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. My friend says his information is that 20,000,000 acres of the 60,000,000 acres are tillable agricultural lands.

Mr. DICKINSON. In the majority report, out of 60,000,000 acres 20,000,000 acres are classed as agricultural land.

Mr. OLMSTED. What report is that?

Mr. DICKINSON. The majority report.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not accept that as correct. There is much of this land which to the casual observer might not seem arable but on which coconut trees can be raised, and they are the most profitable crop on the islands. The rubber plant grows wild and can be cultivated so as to be a profitable crop.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am simply calling the attention of the gentleman to the majority report with respect to the number of acres of agricultural land.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I must not trespass further upon the time and courtesy of the House. I have already pointed out how difficult, how impossible of sale, the passage of this bill would make these 125,000 acres of vacant friar lands—how impossible it would be for the Philippine Government to reimburse itself to meet its obligations incurred in their purchase. The islands are sufficiently protected from exploitation by the existing limitations upon the 60,000,000 acres of public lands. These 125,000 acres of unsold friar lands are in different islands and scattered through six different Provinces, and they are in irregular tracts, not readily divisible into 40-acre lots, and not salable in such lots.

Why should we impose upon the Philippine Government a restriction upon the sale of its own lands, which it purchased with its own money, the proceeds of its own bonds, for the payment of which it must provide?

These were private lands for many decades before the Spanish War, and it is only fair that the Philippine Government, which bought and paid for them, shall be permitted to realize upon them as soon as possible upon such terms and conditions as its own legislature may prescribe.

If Congress is to fix any limitation at all upon the sale of these friar lands, it ought to be along some reasonable lines, so as not to split up either small tracts or large ones into unsalable fractions; and there is certainly no reason in the world which anybody can give why a person, having purchased and paid for 40 acres of land, shall not be permitted to sell them if he so desires, or mortgage them so as to raise money to cultivate and improve them.

To place upon the sale of these friar lands the same limitations and restrictions now imposed upon the sale of the public lands is substantially to deny to the Philippine Government the right to sell its own property and to deprive it of the means of discharging its own obligations.

The protection of the Philippine Islands from exploitation is already accomplished in the restriction of 60,000,000 acres of public lands to sales in tracts of 40 acres each. The disposition of the friar lands is purely a matter of business. No great question of public policy is involved except the policy of converting them into cash as speedily as possible.

The sale of 125,000 acres in tracts considerably larger than 40 acres would not have a tendency to disturb any settled policy or to overthrow any great principle of government; but to put upon the sale of these friar lands the restrictions and onerous conditions sought to be imposed by this bill would practically prevent their sale and work a wholly unnecessary and inexcusable injustice upon the Filipino people.

I submit that the Philippine Government ought to be permitted to dispose of its own lands as it shall see fit. [Applause.] The existing law does not limit the sale of friar lands, but leaves that matter entirely to the Philippine Legislature. Under permission of the House I here insert as part of my remarks the following section of the report which, on behalf of the Committee on Insular Affairs, I had the honor to present to the House March 3, 1911:

CERTAIN SECTIONS OF THE ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JULY 1, 1902, DEAL SPECIFICALLY WITH LANDS ACQUIRED BY THE UNITED STATES UNDER THE TREATY OF PEACE WITH SPAIN, AND CONSTITUTING THE PUBLIC DOMAIN OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS. DO THE PROVISIONS OF THOSE SECTIONS APPLY ALSO TO THE FRIAR LANDS, WHICH DO NOT NOW, AND NEVER DID, BELONG TO THE UNITED STATES, BUT AT THE TIME OF THE PASSAGE OF SAID ACT WERE IN PRIVATE OWNERSHIP, AND BY SUBSEQUENT PURCHASE BECAME THE PROPERTY OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS?

The act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902, and commonly called "The organic act," is a very long act, divided into 88 sections, covering a great variety of subjects.

Certain of these sections relate specifically to lands in the Philippine Islands belonging to the United States, having been acquired by our Government from the Spanish Crown under the treaty of Paris. Those which need be considered here are sections 12 to 17, both inclusive, which read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That all the property and rights which may have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain, signed December 10, 1898, except such land or other property as shall be designated by the President of the United States for military and other reservations of the Government of the United States, are hereby placed under the control of the Government of said islands to be administered for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, except as provided in this act.

"SEC. 13. That the government of the Philippine Islands, subject to the provisions of this act and except as herein provided, shall classify according to its agricultural character and productiveness, and shall immediately make rules and regulations for the lease, sale, or other disposition of the public lands other than timber or mineral lands, but such rules and regulations shall not go into effect or have the force of law until they have received the approval of the President, and when approved by the President they shall be submitted by him to Congress at the beginning of the next ensuing session thereof, and unless disapproved or amended by Congress at said session they shall at the close of such period have the force and effect of law in the Philippine Islands: Provided, That a single homestead entry shall not exceed 16 hectares in extent.

"SEC. 14. That the Government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized and empowered to enact rules and regulations and to prescribe terms and conditions to enable persons to perfect their title to public lands in said islands, who, prior to the transfer of sovereignty from Spain to the United States, had fulfilled all or some of the conditions required by the Spanish laws and royal decrees of the Kingdom of Spain for the acquisition of legal title thereto, yet fail to secure conveyance of title; and the Philippine Commission is authorized to issue patents, without compensation, to any native of said islands, conveying title to any tract of land not more than 16 hectares in extent, which were public lands and had been actually occupied by such native or his ancestors prior to and on the 13th of August, 1898.

"SEC. 15. That the Government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized and empowered, on such terms as it may prescribe, by general legislation, to provide for the granting or sale and conveyance to actual occupants and settlers and other citizens of said islands such parts and portions of the public domain, other than timber and mineral lands of the United States in said islands, as it may deem wise, not exceeding 16 hectares to any one person, and for the sale and conveyance of not more than 1,024 hectares to any corporation or association of persons: Provided, That the grant or sale of such lands, whether the purchase price be paid at once or in partial payments, shall be conditioned upon actual and continued occupancy, improvement, and cultivation of the premises sold for a period of not less than five years, during which time the purchaser or grantee can not alienate or encumber said land or the title thereto, but such restriction shall not apply to transfers of rights and title of inheritance under the laws for the distribution of the estates of decedents.

"SEC. 16. That in granting or selling any part of the public domain under the provisions of the last preceding section, preference in all cases shall be given to actual occupants and settlers; and such public lands of the United States in the actual possession or occupancy of any native of the Philippine Islands shall not be sold by said Government to any other person without the consent thereto of said prior occupant or settler first had and obtained: Provided, That the prior right hereby secured to an occupant of land, who can show no other proof of title than possession, shall not apply to more than 16 hectares in one tract.

"SEC. 17. That timber, trees, forests, and forest products on lands leased or demised by the Government of the Philippine Islands under the provisions of this act shall not be cut, destroyed, removed, or appropriated except by special permission of said Government and under such regulations as it may prescribe.

"All moneys obtained from lease or sale of any portion of the public domain or from licenses to cut timber by the Government of the Philippine Islands shall be covered into the insular treasury and be subject only to appropriation for insular purposes according to law."

It is clear that, standing by themselves, these sections do not deal with private lands or with lands which then were, or might thereafter become, the property of the Government of the Philippine Islands. Their operation is, by their very terms, confined to "property and rights which have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain" (sec. 12); "public lands" (sec. 13); "public lands in said islands which had been the subject of transfer of sovereignty from Spain to the United States" (sec. 14); "the public domain * * * of the United States in said islands" (sec. 15); "public lands of the United States" (sec. 16); "public domain" (sec. 17).

The terms "public domain" and "public lands," when used in an act of Congress without qualifying words, are always descriptive of property of the United States, and no other.

The sections quoted do not in themselves contain any reference to the so-called friar lands, which were not the property of the Spanish Crown; were not acquired by our Government under the treaty of peace; and do not now, nor ever did, constitute any portion of the "public land" or "public domain of the United States." The friar lands were, at the time of the treaty of peace, and at the time of the passage of the act of Congress of 1902, in private ownership. Some six years after the treaty of Paris, and two years after the passage of the organic act, they were purchased by the Philippine Government in pursuance of authority contained in sections 63, 64, and 65, as follows:

"SEC. 63. That the Government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized, subject to the limitations and conditions prescribed in this act, to acquire, receive, hold, maintain, and convey title to real and personal property, and may acquire real estate for public uses by the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

"SEC. 64. That the powers hereinbefore conferred in section 63 may also be exercised in respect of any lands, easements, appurtenances, and hereditaments which, on the 13th of August, 1898, were owned or held by associations, corporations, communities, religious orders, or private individuals in such large tracts or parcels and in such manner as in the opinion of the commission injuriously to affect the peace and welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands. And for the purpose of providing funds to acquire the lands mentioned in this section said Government of the Philippine Islands is hereby empowered to incur indebtedness, to borrow money, and to issue, and to sell at not less than par value, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value or the equivalent in value in money of said islands, upon such terms and conditions as it may deem best, registered or coupon bonds of said Government for such amount as may be necessary; said bonds to be in denominations of $50 or any multiple thereof, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 4½ per cent per annum, payable quarterly, and to be payable at the pleasure of said Government after dates named in said bonds, not less than 5 nor more than 30 years from the date of their issue, together with interest thereon, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value or the equivalent in value in money of said islands; and said bonds shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of said Government, or any local authority therein, or of the Government of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority in the United States or the Philippine Islands. The moneys which may be realized or received from the issue and sale of said bonds shall be applied by the Government of the Philippine Islands to the acquisition of the property authorized by this section, and to no other purposes.

"SEC. 65. That all lands acquired by virtue of the preceding section shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the Government of the Philippine Islands, and may be held, sold, and conveyed, or leased temporarily for a period not exceeding three years after their acquisition by said Government on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act: Provided, That all deferred payments and the interest thereon shall be payable in the money prescribed for the payment of principal and interest of the bonds authorized to be issued in payment of said lands by the preceding section, and said deferred payments shall bear interest at the rate borne by the bonds. All money realized or received from sales or other disposition of said lands or by reason thereof shall constitute a trust fund for the payment of principal and interest of said bonds, and also constitute a sinking fund for the payment of said bonds at their maturity. Actual settlers and occupants at the time said lands are acquired by the Government shall have the preference over all others to lease, purchase, or acquire their holdings within such reasonable time as may be determined by said Government."

Nowhere in these sections are the friar lands spoken of as "public lands" or as constituting "parts and portions of the public domain of the United States in said islands."

Section 64 authorized the Philippine Government to purchase the lands of the religious orders and, for the purpose of providing the necessary funds, to issue and sell bonds, the proceeds thereof to be applied to the acquisition of the said lands and to no other purpose.

Section 65 authorizes the Philippine Government to sell all lands acquired by virtue of the preceding section "on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act," and requires all moneys realized from said sales to be placed in a trust fund or sinking fund for the payment of the principal and interest of said bonds. Does the phrase "subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act" bring forward and extend to these friar lands, purchased by the Philippine Government with its own money, and for which it is to reimburse itself out of the proceeds of their sales, all the restrictions placed by sections 12 to 17 upon the acquisition of lands belonging to the United States, but which that Government was practically giving away for the benefit of the Filipino people in the manner and upon the terms it chose to adopt for that purpose? Does that language extend to the friar lands owned by the Philippine Government the provisions of those sections which, standing by themselves, deal only with lands owned by the United States? The Philippine Legislature and the Philippine officials did not so construe it.

Section 15 of the organic act required legislation by the Philippine Government providing for the sale of public lands of the United States. Section 65 required legislation prescribing terms and conditions for sales of friar lands belonging to the Philippine Government. The Philippine Legislature passed Act No. 926, entitled "The public-lands act," which was amended by Act No. 979, approved October 7, 1903. The second chapter of this act limited the purchase of public lands by a corporation to 1,024 hectares and by an individual to 16 hectares, and it provided that "no association of persons not organized as above and no mere partnership shall be entitled to purchase a greater quantity than will equal 16 hectares for each member thereof." Subsequently the legislature passed Act No. 1120, known as the "friar-lands act," in the preamble of which it is set forth that "the said lands are not 'public lands' in the sense in which those words are used in the public-land act * * * and can not be acquired or leased under the provisions thereof, and it is necessary to provide proper agencies for carrying out the terms of said contract of purchase and the requirements of said act of Congress with reference to the leasing and selling of said lands and the creation of a sinking fund to secure the payment of the bonds so issued."

The ninth section of this so-called friar-lands act required of the chief of the bureau of public lands that "in making such sales he shall proceed as provided in chapter 2 of the public-lands act." This was properly construed by the Philippine officials as imposing the same limitations upon the sale of friar lands as had been in their public-lands act imposed upon the sale of public lands. It was very soon discovered that friar lands could not be sold to any considerable extent under such conditions; therefore, by the Philippine Act No. 1847, approved June 3, 1908, the friar-lands Act No. 1120 was so amended as to remove the obligation to follow the terms of the public-lands act, and thus to remove its restriction upon the amount of friar lands that might be sold to a single purchaser.

Section 86 of the organic act requires "that all laws passed by the Government of the Philippine Islands shall be reported to Congress, which hereby reserves the power and authority to annul the same." In pursuance of that requirement, the acts above mentioned, both original and amendatory, were duly certified to Congress, which has taken no action thereon.

The change in the Philippine law touching friar lands is fully explained in volume 8 of the Annual Report of the Secretary of War for 1908, at page 48, Part II, in the following language:

"Certain important amendments to the friar-land act have been made. This act made the provisions of chapter 2 of the public-land act apply to sales of friar lands. The amount of land which could be sold to an individual was thus limited to 16 hectares, which would in very many cases have defeated the obvious intention of the act to allow tenants to secure their actual holdings, and would have delayed for many years the sale of large tracts, thus obliging the Government to continue to pay interest on their purchase price. The provision of the public-land act that surveys should be in regular subdivisions was entirely impracticable on occupied friar estates on account of the very irregular form of actual holdings.

"The further requirement for advertising after application for purchase had been made imposed an entirely needless and unwarranted expense of ₱20 to ₱100 on each purchaser, and the most liberal arrangement relative to payment possible was that it should be made in one installment, after five years, with interest at 6 per cent.

"Under the law as amended there is no limit as to the amount of land which may be purchased."

The report of the Secretary of War, embodying the report of the Philippine Commission and including the language quoted, was submitted to Congress by President Roosevelt in December, 1908. Thus that construction of the law was given full publicity, not only in the Philippine Islands but in the United States, prior to the commencement of the present administration and long prior to any negotiations by anybody for the purchase of the San José estate.

If the phrase "subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act," appearing in section 65 of the organic act, renders the friar lands subject to the conditions found in section 15, by the same reasoning the friar lands must be subject to the provisions of all the sections touching public lands. Among them is section 13, which provides that "a single homestead entry shall not exceed 16 hectares in extent." Was it intended that the friar lands purchased by the Philippine Government with borrowed money to be repaid out of the proceeds of their sales should be subject to homestead entry? Section 14 requires that patents shall be issued without compensation, "conveying title to any tract of land not more than 16 hectares in extent which were public lands and had been actually occupied by said native or his ancestors prior to August 13, 1898." While the San José estate and one or two others were practically untenanted, the most of the friar lands were occupied by natives or their ancestors prior to August 13, 1898. All of the most valuable of the friar lands were thus occupied. Was it the intention of the organic act that the Philippine Government should be compelled to issue patents to these friar lands without compensation? If so, the requirement that the proceeds of sale should be placed in a sinking fund for the repayment of the bonds was of very little value.

Section 14 also limits the former occupant of public lands to the acquisition of not more than 16 hectares; but section 65, relating to friar lands, declares that "actual settlers and occupants at the time said lands are acquired by the Government shall have the preference over all others to lease, purchase, or acquire their holdings within such reasonable time as may be determined by said Government." Had Congress intended to limit the preference of such occupants of friar lands to 16 hectares, would not that limitation have been clearly expressed as in the case of public lands? Does not the use of the term "their holdings" indicate an intention to give them the preference and the right to acquire their entire holdings, whether more or less than 16 hectares?

In the table above given there appear the names of many tenants who have acquired title to lands previously occupied by them in amounts exceeding 16 hectares each.

If the limitations of section 15 apply at all to the lands acquired by the Philippine Government under section 65, they must apply to all lands so acquired. Was it the intention of Congress to cut up, distribute, and impair these tenant holdings of friar lands by clipping off here and there the hectares in excess of 16? If tenants holding 20, or 30, or 40, or more hectares and given the privilege over all others "to lease, purchase, or acquire their holdings" are limited in that preference and in that purchase or acquisition to 16 hectares, then to which particular 16 hectares does the preference and the right of acquisition extend? From which particular hectares are other persons excluded from purchase? By holding off for a term of years such tenant might hold a hundred or a thousand hectares against all the world, and then finally have the right to purchase only 16 himself.

Mr. Storey, in his opinion, cites parts of sections 65 and 15, respectively, but in each instance omits the proviso which is a very important part of the section. Thus the proviso to section 15 provides, as to public lands, "that the grant or sale of such lands, whether the purchase price be paid at once or in partial payments, shall be conditioned upon actual and continued occupancy, improvement, and cultivation of the premises sold for a period of not less than five years, during which time the purchaser or grantee can not alienate or encumber said land or the title thereto, but such restriction shall not apply to transfers of rights and title of inheritance under the laws for the distribution of the estates of decedents. If any part of that section applies to friar lands, it all applies. Congress, as already stated, has practically required the Philippine Government to acquire these lands, in the purchase of which it incurred an indebtedness of $7,000,000 and an annual interest charge of $280,000. Section 65 contemplates that the proceeds of sales of these lands shall be used to meet these interest charges and pay the principal of the bonds. Is it reasonable to suppose that Congress intended not only to limit each sale to 16 hectares (40 acres), but also to make sales practically impossible by requiring that the purchaser must actually occupy, improve, and cultivate the premises for five years, during which period, even though he pay the full cash price on the day of sale, he is forbidden to either sell or mortgage or in any way encumber the land? That was not an unreasonable provision where the Government of the United States was giving away its own land; but a most unreasonable condition to impose upon the sale of friar lands purchased by the Philippine Government with its own money and from the sale of which it was to provide the funds for its own reimbursement. The legislative intent must plainly appear before such a construction can be justified.

If the terms and conditions of section 15 apply to lands purchased and sold under authority of section 65, so also must the provisions of section 16, which declares that—

"such public lands of the United States in the actual possession or occupancy of any native of the Philippine Islands shall not be sold by said Government to any other person without the consent thereto of said prior occupant or settler first had and obtained: Provided, That the prior right hereby secured to an occupant of land who can show no other proof of title than possession shall not apply to more than 16 hectares in one tract."

Is it reasonable to suppose that Congress intended that limitation to apply to friar lands? Did it intend to prevent the Philippine Government from selling, at all, friar lands in the possession or occupancy of persons who had no title and did not seek to obtain one? Did Congress intend to compel the Philippine Government to buy land upon which there might be settlers without title, which land the settlers were not compelled to buy, but which the Government could never sell without their consent first had and obtained?

Section 65, which authorizes the sale of friar lands "subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act," provides that the money realized from the sales of such lands "shall constitute a trust fund for the payment of principal and interest of said bonds." Section 17 requires that "all moneys obtained from lease or sale of the public domain * * * shall be covered into the insular treasury and be subject only to appropriation for insular purposes according to law." Surely it was not intended by section 65 to extend the terms and conditions of section 17 to sales of friar lands.

All the parts of the act must be considered together and given harmonious and reasonable construction so as to effectuate the legislative intent. The words "subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act," as found in section 65, are not meaningless nor without effect even if held not to refer to the provisions of sections 12 to 17, which deal with public lands. There are plenty of "limitations and conditions provided for in this act" to which the sales or leases of friar lands are made subject. For instance, that they may not be leased for a period exceeding three years (sec. 65); that deferred payments and interest thereon shall be payable in the money prescribed for the payment of the principal and interest of the friar-land bonds issued in payment for said lands; that the money realized from the sale of lands shall constitute a trust fund and not go into the insular treasury for general purposes; that actual settlers and occupants shall have the preference over all others to lease, purchase, or acquire their holdings; that public works, duly authorized, may be constructed over and upon them (sec. 74); that corporations may not hold more than 1,024 hectares (sec. 75). This provision is general and applies to public lands, private lands, and friar lands alike.

Section 74 bears evidence that the act all the way through recognizes the distinction between lands of the United States and lands of the Philippine Government. It confers authority for public works to be constructed "over and across the public property of the United States and over similar property of the Government of said islands." This important section upon the subject of franchises contains numerous conditions to which friar lands, as well as public lands, are subjected. It provides that "lands or rights of use and occupation of lands thus granted shall revert to the Governments by which they were respectively granted upon the termination of the franchises and concessions under which they were granted or upon their revocation or repeal." That is plainly one of the limitations and conditions subject to which the purchasers may acquire friar lands.

There are many other "limitations and conditions" prescribed in the organic act, general in character, and which may reasonably be construed to have been extended by section 65 to friar lands; but the limitations and conditions specifically imposed by sections 12 to 17 upon the sale and disposal of lands owned by the United States, and which this Government has generously permitted to be sold for the benefit of the Filipino people, can not by any reasonable construction be made to extend to sales by the Philippine Government of lands purchased with its own money from private owners and which never did belong to the United States.

It is quite within the power of the Philippine Legislature to limit the amount of friar lands which may be sold to a single noncorporate purchaser, but it has not done so and Congress has not done so.

In construing the statute we must of course consider all its parts, and may also properly take into consideration the events and conditions which led to its passage. In passing upon the statutory remedy we must consider the mischief for which it was intended to be the cure.

"The legislative department is supposed to have a consistent design or policy and to intend nothing inconsistent or incongruous. The mischief intended to be removed or suppressed or the cause or necessity of any kind which induced the enactment of a law are important factors to be considered in its construction. The purpose for which a law was enacted is a matter of prime importance in arriving at the correct interpretation of its terms. (Lewis's Sutherland Statutory Construction, second edition, sec. 471.)

"The intention of the legislature in enacting a law is the law itself, and must be enforced when ascertained, although it may not be consistent with the strict letter of the statute. Courts will not follow the letter of a statute when it leads away from the intent and purpose of the legislature and the conclusions inconsistent with the general purpose of the act. (Ibid., sec. 363.)

"Statutes are to be construed as may best effectuate the intention of the makers, which sometimes may be collected from the cause or occasion for passing the statute, and where discovered it ought to be followed with judgment and discretion in the construction, though the construction may seem contrary to the letter of the statute." (Big Black Creek Improvement Co. v. Commonwealth, 94 Pa., 450.)

If it be argued that the qualification "subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this act," as found in section 65, includes necessarily all the limitations and conditions anywhere found in the act, even though they were definitely and distinctly applied in connection with sales of public lands only, the answer is found in the decision of our highest tribunal, as reported in McKee v. United States, 164 U. S., 287 (book 41, Lawyers' Co-op. Ed., 437). The fourth section of an act of Congress, approved March 2, 1891, distinctly provided "that any sum or sums of money received into the Treasury of the United States from the sale of lands bid in for taxes in any State under the laws described in the first section of this act, in excess of the tax assessed thereon, shall be paid to the owners of the land so bid in and resold, or to their legal heirs and representatives."

That language was very general, but the Supreme Court of the United States held that it did not apply to all cases. Mr. Justice Peckham, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"There was added to the act of 1891 the last clause of section 4, which would cover all such cases, and we are of opinion that this last clause does not refer to or cover the cases of those owners who are mentioned in the first clause of the same section. Otherwise this curious result might and in this particular case would follow, etc."

He then proceeds to consider "the contemporaneous history" of the sale of lands under the provisions of the direct-tax act of 1861, and says:

"It is true that if the language used in that last clause be given its widest and broadest application it would include all owners of real estate which had been sold in any portion of the country under the provisions of the direct-tax act. But we think a perusal of the whole act prevents our giving this unlimited construction, because to do so would conflict with what we think was the intention of Congress, gathered from the provisions of the whole act. Under such circumstances it is not only the right but it is the plain duty of the court to limit by a proper construction the otherwise boundless application of the general language used in the statute."

The opinion concludes in these words:

"In this case we think the intention of Congress was plain, and that the general language of the last clause of section 4 should not be held to include the class of owners of lands mentioned in the first clause of the same section, for whose case special provision was therein made."

Applying the principles of construction above set forth, we may well take into consideration the contemporaneous history and the events and conditions which moved Congress to authorize the purchase and sale of these so-called friar lands.

Prior to the Spanish-American War something over 400,000 acres of lands in the Philippine Islands were in the private ownership of the friars. Under the Spanish régime these priests possessed and exercised great power and influence in the communities in which they resided. Some of their estates were unoccupied, but the most of them were thickly peopled. The tenants and subtenants and their families living upon these estates numbered more than 160,000. The Filipino people were engaged in an effort to throw off the tyranny and despotism of Spain. Partly because the friars were not in sympathy with this insurrection, and partly because they were alleged to be oppressive and unsatisfactory landlords, the tenants turned upon them. The priests were driven from their parishes and fled to the city of Manila, where they were found when the Americans took possession of the islands. When the Americans had assumed control the friars insisted upon their rights. The tenants repudiated their obligations to the friars as landlords and refused either to surrender possession of, or to pay rent for, the lands they occupied. The American Government now faced the same serious and disturbing agrarian troubles which had caused the Spanish Government so much annoyance and disaster. That was the mischief. The remedy was to get these lands away from the friars and into an ownership which the tenants would respect. To apply this remedy it became necessary for Congress to provide a way whereby the Philippine Government could itself acquire the lands from the friars. This was accomplished by authorizing that Government to issue its own bonds and apply the proceeds to the purchase of the lands. It was also necessary to provide a method whereby the Philippine Government could provide for the payment of the bonded obligations thus incurred.

This Congress sought to accomplish by authorizing the sale of the lands and requiring the proceeds to be put into a trust fund for the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds. As a further and very necessary means of securing permanent freedom from such troubles as existed, Congress provided that the tenants should themselves have the first right to purchase, and thus acquire ownership of the lands upon which they had lived. Should they not purchase, then the lands were to be sold to others. Public lands of the United States in the Philippine Islands were, by Congress, substantially open to homestead entry, under rigid conditions prescribed in the organic act itself. People who had occupied them for the time, specified in the act, were to be given patents without compensation. The object of disposing of these public lands was not so much to secure funds as to induce the Filipino people to occupy and cultivate them. They were, and are, almost wholly unoccupied. With the friar lands, the case was quite different. Most of them were already in occupation and under cultivation. The object of their sale was to acquire funds with which to repay the money borrowed by the Philippine Government for their purchase. This work would have been defeated by applying to them the conditions of section 15 touching public lands of the United States, under which section the purchaser was not only limited to 16 hectares, but was also prevented from selling, leasing, mortgaging, or otherwise encumbering his land for five years after he had paid for and acquired title. The fact that early sales of friar lands were contemplated by the act is manifest from the fact that, while no limit of time was placed upon leases of public lands, friar lands could be leased only "temporarily for a period not exceeding three years." These leases were made temporary, so that they might not obstruct the sales, which were clearly contemplated and from the funds of which the Philippine Government was to reimburse itself. The practical effect of the conditions imposed by section 15 is well illustrated in the island of Mindoro, where public lands have been offered subject to those conditions at $2 per acre, with not a single purchaser, while friar lands immediately adjoining but without the same onerous conditions, have been sold at more than $6 per acre.

Arising out of this friar-land transaction, the Philippine Government has a bonded indebtedness of $7,000,000, with an annual interest charge of $280,000 thereon. Can it reasonably be assumed that Congress intended that Government to bear this onerous burden itself and to impose upon it the necessity of taxing the Filipino people to meet these obligations, by depriving them of the opportunity to sell, at a fair price and on such terms as they might impose, the very lands for which the indebtedness had been incurred? There were certainly hundreds, perhaps thousands, of tenants of friar lands, each owning more than 16 hectares. To have limited their rights of purchase to that amount of land, ejecting them from the excess, would have aggravated the very difficulty which Congress sought to allay.

A careful study of the organic act in all its parts, taking into account the history of the times and the objects sought to be accomplished, leads to the conclusion that the homestead provisions of sections 12 to 17, relating to public lands of the United States, do not and were not intended to apply to friar lands acquired and sold under the provisions of section 65, and that the act fixes no limit to the quantity of friar lands which may be sold to purchasers other than corporations. It is, as already pointed out, within the power and authority of the Philippine Legislature to limit the amount that may be sold to a single person.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. McLEAN. I present resolutions adopted by members of the Arkwright Club, remonstrating against the adoption of the Covington amendment to the Panama Canal bill. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, the undersigned members of the Arkwright Club, being actively interested in the manufacture of cotton goods in New England, understand that the Covington amendment, so called, to the bill now before Congress, regulating the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal, provides that "it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce, to own, lease operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in any common carrier by water with which said railroad does or may compete for traffic."

We believe in the regulation of common carriers by the Government, and in the authority granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We do not, however, believe in such restriction or limitation of investment in or the development of steamship lines or coastwise trade generally as this amendment provides.

We deem it especially important for the great industries of New England that, under proper restrictions, railroads should be allowed to develop and maintain transportation by water. This is of the utmost importance in the transportation of the freight to and from New England points and the South, especially in connection with the cotton industry. We believe that, with the opening of the Panama Canal, it is of greatest importance that there shall be adequate transportation facilities by water between New England and the Gulf cities.

Therefore, we protest against the adoption of the Covington amendment to the Panama Canal bill as unnecessarily impeding the development of transportation by water, and as thus retarding the development of New England's commerce with southern and Pacific ports; and we urge New England Congressmen to do everything in their power to defeat the amendment.

CHENEY BROS.,
Silk Manufacturers.
By CHARLES CHENEY,
Treasurer.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Chatham, Conn., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, there has been introduced in the House of Representatives as an amendment to the Panama Canal bill a proposition to prevent the railroads of the country from holding any steamship lines.

This is a matter of the greatest importance to the State of Rhode Island. The railroad lines in previous times have been built north and south through her domain, reaching tidewater in Narragansett Bay, and there connecting with the steamships which carried her products to the different parts of the country. From the earliest times it was found advisable that such railroads and steamships should be owned by the same parties.

It has been the traditional policy of Rhode Island to encourage such ownership, and this proposed measure changing the traditional policy of the State becomes a matter of great interest to us.

The legislature of the State at its recent session passed a resolution on this subject, and as it is short I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1912.

Resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island concerning House resolution 21969, pending in Sixty-second Congress of the United States.

Whereas it has been the policy of this State, beginning with the earliest railroad charters, to authorize and encourage railroad companies to build their railroads to tidewater, to own wharves and docks, and to operate, or to own the stock of companies operating steamboats; and

Whereas in the last railroad charter granted, and as late as the year 1910, the General Assembly of Rhode Island, in furtherance of this policy, authorized the building to tidewater, the owning of wharves and docks and the operation of, and ownership of the stock of, other companies which operate steamboats or steamships; and

Whereas section 11 of a bill pending in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States numbered 21969 and entitled "A bill to provide for the opening, maintaining, protection, and operating of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone" is contrary to the said policy of this State; said section being as follows:

"SEC. 11. That section 5 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph at the end thereof as follows:

"'From and after the 1st day of July, 1913, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever (by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company, or in any other manner) in any common carrier by water with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic; and in case of the violation of this provision each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense'": Now therefore

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island opposes any action by Congress in conflict with the beneficial policy of this State as aforesaid, and that the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to do all in their power to the end that section 11 of said bill be stricken therefrom.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, April 26, 1912.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution approved by his excellency the governor on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1912.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid the date first above written.

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented resolutions adopted by the representatives of eight young people's societies of eastern Connecticut, in convention at Jewett City, Conn., favoring the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SWANSON. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition, which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

HORACE V. BRUCE, Secretary.

Mr. OLIVER. I present a communication in the nature of a memorial from George H. McFadden & Bro., a large firm of shippers in the city of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the adoption of the Covington amendment to the bill regulating the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal. It is a short communication, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 27, 1912.

We, the undersigned, being actively interested in business in New England which involves the transportation of merchandise to and from southern points to New England, understand that the Covington amendment, so called, to the bill now before Congress regulating the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal provides that "it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in any common carrier by water with which said railroad does or may compete for traffic."

We believe in the regulation of common carriers by the Government and in the authority granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We do not, however, believe in such restriction or limitation of investment in or the development of steamship lines or coastwise trade generally as this amendment provides.

We deem it especially important for the great industries of New England that, under proper restrictions, railroads should be allowed to develop and maintain transportation by water. This is of the utmost importance in the transportation of the freight to and from New England points and the South. We believe that with the opening of the Panama Canal it is of greatest importance that there shall be adequate transportation facilities by water between New England and the Gulf cities.

Therefore we protest against the adoption of the Covington amendment to the Panama Canal bill as unnecessarily impeding the development of transportation by water and as thus retarding the development of New England's commerce with southern and Pacific ports, and we urge New England Congressmen to do everything in their power to defeat the amendment.

I ask that the memorials lie on the table and that the body of one of the memorials be printed in the RECORD, omitting the signatures.

There being no objection, the memorials were ordered to lie on the table, and the body of one of the memorials was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States of America,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States of America, State of Illinois, do hereby vigorously and emphatically protest against the passage of Senate bill No. 1, introduced by Senator OWEN, providing for the establishment of an independent bureau of health or other similar medical legislation, for the following reasons:

First. We believe that the present Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service has all the power and authority necessary. There is no demand from the people for legislation of this character. Political physicians simply want to increase their power over the individual citizen.

Second. We protest against any extension of the health activities of the Government for the reason that it is unnecessary. The United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service combined with the highly efficient service rendered by the State boards of health is able to meet all demands. Further legislation would be useless and would involve an endless expenditure of public moneys.

Third. It provides another agency to interfere with the rights of the individual citizen. The States under the Constitution are intrusted with the conduct of their internal health affairs.

Fourth. The proposed legislation would be an entering wedge for the creation of an immense bureau or department whose influence would be utilized by an interested organization, the American Medical Association. State medicine is as obnoxious to American citizens as State religion.

Fifth. The bill creates three new subdivisions without containing provisions for their organization and powers. It provides for the dissemination of theories at the expense of taxpayers.

Sixth. Once this bill is passed there is nothing to prevent the consolidation of all health activities on the order of the President. Congress refused to create a national department, yet under the Owen bill all agencies desired in the national department may be transferred on presidential order.

Mr. BRADLEY presented petitions of sundry citizens of Lexington, Ky., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine I have received a number of protests from people of the State of Oklahoma against the passage of what is known as the Owen public health bill, with a special request that I present them to the Senate. I do so, asking that the substance of the memorials be printed in the RECORD, and not copying the names, of course, but that a note of the signatures may be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that procedure will be had.

The memorials presented by Mr. CULBERSON are as follows:

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to put in the RECORD with regard to these alleged protests against Senate bill No. 1, establishing a public health service, my comment that the protest is based upon the false theory that the health service of the United States would be "admittedly under the control of one school of medicine" and "ultimately abridge the right of the individual citizen to choose the practitioner of his choice in times of illness."

That suggestion is not true. The bill expressly provides the contrary—that the health service shall have nothing to do with controlling the practice of medicine; that it shall not interfere with the right of the citizen to choose his own practitioner; that it shall not interfere with the practitioner of any school of medicine or of healing to practice his profession. That matter being confessedly in the control of the police powers of the State need not to have been negatived by the bill itself, but out of abundant caution and for the reason that that contention had been made the bill does provide that no interference shall be made with any citizen in choosing his practitioner or in practicing any method of healing.

The bill, in fact, does not enlarge the powers now existing in the Bureau of Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service and "Vital Statistics" and in the administration of the pure food and drugs act. These departments are merely brought together in an independent bureau, so as to coordinate their activities and to make more economical and more efficient their administration.

The obvious mechanical and artificial character of these protests I call attention to. The protest which I have in my hand came from Boley, Okla., a little village which I know very well. This protest, like all the others, is based on gross error and obvious misinformation.

The objection which I make is that this protest is based upon the theory that it would interfere with the liberty of the citizen and of the practitioner above referred to and upon the further assertion that such a bureau or department would not only be expensive, which is not true, but that it could in nowise do more effective work than the present bureau, which is also not true.

The statement that there is no public demand for such legislation is also not true, because the public demand has been so great that it represents practically the opinion of a very great majority of the people of the United States, made obvious not only by resolutions of societies devoted to the public health, by the action taken by the various great insurance companies of this country who are concerned in prolonging the life of the policy holders, and of the various societies devoted to the cure and prevention of illness throughout the United States, but it is also made obvious by the declarations of the various great political parties, including the Republican Party in its national platform and the Democratic Party in its national platform.

For many years the question of establishing an independent public health service has been under vigorous and active discussion throughout the United States. The matter was discussed on the floor of the Senate during the last Congress, under Senate bill 6049, on various occasions. Repeated hearings have been held by the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine of the Senate, and numerous bills have been introduced in Congress bearing upon this question which have been thoroughly considered in the committees of both Houses.

Great organizations have arisen throughout the United States urging the improvement of the public health service. The Republican platform of 1908 gives assurance to this element of the Nation in the following words:

> We commend the efforts made to secure greater efficiency in national public health agencies and favor such legislation as will effect its purpose.

The Republican platform of the State of Ohio declared expressly in favor of—

> The organization of all existing national health agencies into a single national public health department.

In Connecticut and other States similar declarations in party platforms have been made.

The Democratic national platform in 1908, in like manner, states:

> We advocate the organization of all existing national public health agencies into a national bureau of public health, with such power over sanitary conditions connected with factories, mines, tenements, child labor, and such other conditions connected with and in the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, and which do not interfere with the power of the States controlling public health agencies.

The Committee of One Hundred of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, consisting of the most distinguished philanthropists, editors, lawyers, churchmen, educators in the United States, and the American Medical Association, with 80,000 members or associates of men learned in questions of health, advocate the following national platform plank:

> Believing a vigorous, healthy population to be our greatest national asset and that the growth, power, and prosperity of the country depends primarily upon the physical welfare of its people and upon their protection from preventable pestilences of both foreign and domestic origin and from all other preventable causes of disease and death, including the sanitary supervision of factories, mines, tenements, child labor, and other places and conditions of public employment or occupation involving health and life, we advocate the organization of all existing national public health agencies into a national department of public health, with such powers and duties as will give the Federal Government control over public health interests not conserved by and belonging to the States, respectively.

All the great insurance companies of the United States approve this plan, and many of them have started life conservation departments of their own.

President Roosevelt said, in regard to the legislation increasing the power of the Federal Government in relation to the public health:

> I hope to see the National Government stand abreast of the foremost State governments.

President Taft, in his speech at Albany, N. Y., March 19, 1910, argued in favor of the constitutional right to etsablish a bureau of health, and has recommended the establishment of an independent health service.

Such men as Hon. R. S. Woodward, of the Carnegie Institution; Hon. Charles W. Eliot, ex-president of Harvard University; Col. W. C. Gorgas, chief sanitary officer of Panama; and the leading health commissioners of the various States strongly approve the idea of the establishment of an independent health service.

Human life could be prolonged an average to our entire population of 14 years in the United States if the people were properly informed in self-preservation, as was demonstrated in the report on national vitality.

The annual death loss in the United States is approximately seven to the thousand in excess of what it should be under improved conditions, making an unnecessary loss of life in 90,000,000 of people of approximately 630,000 men, women, and children annually whose lives ought to be saved.

This loss, upon any reasonable basis, may easily be estimated at the commercial value of two thousand millions of dollars annually.

Nearly as great a loss is due to the loss of efficiency and the loss of productive power of nearly 3,000,000 persons who are sick on an average during the year and who must be cared for during such preventable illness.

The pension roll, which costs the United States over $160,000,000 annually, is three-fourths due to death and disease which was preventable.

During the Spanish War in four camps—Chickamauga, Alger, Meade, and Jacksonville—there were over 19,000 cases of typhoid fever, with a loss of 1,460 of the finest young men in America, nearly all of which was preventable.

The preventable deaths in the United States were caused by polluted water, impure and adulterated foods and drugs, foul air, bad ventilation, ignorance of the health laws, of hygiene, of exercise, of foods, and of self-care, and to epidemics and various preventable diseases, such as tuberculosis, typhoid and malarial fevers.

A splendid illustration of what can be done is shown in the control of yellow fever in Cuba. In 1896 yellow-fever deaths in Habana, Cuba, amounted to 600 to the hundred thousand, but after the American occupation and the great discovery of James Carroll, Lazier, Walter Reed, and Agrimonte the death rates fell—in 1900, to 124; 1901, to 6; in 1902, to 0; in 1903, to 0; in 1904, to 0.

Except for this discovery it would have been impossible for the United States to have built the Panama Canal, and on the Panama Canal the death rate, even in that tropical country, is not much more than one-half what it is in the United States.

This bill provides that the health service shall not interfere with any of the functions belonging exclusively to the States, nor permit anyone to enter the premises of private persons without the permission of the owner or occupant thereof, and shall have no power to regulate the practice of medicine or the practice of healing, or to interfere with the right of a citizen to employ the practitioner of his choice, or to make any discrimination in favor of or against any school of medicine or of healing.

The opposition which has been stirred up against the establishment of an independent health service has proceeded upon the assumption that the health service would have the right under this bill to interfere with the citizen in employing the practitioner of his own choice or to interfere with the States in the regulation of the practice of medicine or the practice of healing. The Constitution offers abundant protection against these apprehended evils, and the bill permits nothing of the sort. It forbids it.

These protests do not represent the sentiment of the country. The opinion of the people on this question is set forth in Senate Document No. 637, Sixty-first Congress, second session, which contains over 200 pages of abstracts from resolutions of innumerable societies from the various States and from the opinions of leading public men, such as Bryan, Roosevelt, Taft, Cleveland, Gorgas, Wiley, and so forth.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] put into the RECORD some adverse telegrams, but the following telegram shows that these telegrams do not express the sentiment of the community:

SEATTLE, WASH., May 1, 1912.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The trustees of the King County Medical Society sent the following telegram to Senator JONES: "Beg to remind you of letter of December 28, 1911, from King County Medical Society, representing 330 physicians practicing nonsectarian medicines, requesting your support of the Owen bill. Your telegrams read in Senate recently do not express the sentiment of the community." We desire to thank you for your attitude on this great question of public health.

R. W. PERRY,
P. V. VON PHUL,
J. C. MOORE,
R. J. O'HEA,
J. B. MANNING,
H. E. ALLEN,
Trustees King County Medical Society.

It can not be said truly that there is no sentiment for this measure. Our country is the only one in the world that is so far behind in the protection of the health of the country by a proper health service.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that while the disaster on the Titanic was a terrific destruction of life, the loss by the Titanic of 1,700 persons which so shocked the world is actually less than the daily unnecessary loss in the United States of human life by preventable illness. Every day of the year over 1,700 people die by preventable diseases in this country, whose lives could be saved if we had an intelligent administration and if we took more pains to instruct the public in the well-known laws governing human life, which ought to be made as public as the bulletins on the care of our swine against disease.

The Rockefeller Sanitary Commission has been studying the question of hookworm all over the world, and has caused to be made a world-wide investigation into this disorder.

The treatment of this disease is comparatively recent.

Nine hundred millions of the sixteen hundred millions of people on the globe live in countries which are infected by this disorder.

In certain States of the Union, or in certain localities in certain States where a thorough survey has been made, the percentage of children affected by this disease has come as high as 90 per cent, covering the cases of rural children between the ages of 6 and 18.

The number of cases actually diagnosed by the commission itself has been very large, and this work has been done through the State boards of health, which have been taking great interest in the matter.

The number of cases treated last year was over 142,000. It is comparatively easy to cure it.

Within the last three months over 23,000 recorded cases have been treated by the State organization in eight States.

I remind the Senate that when I suggested, two years ago, the prevalence of this disorder in two particular States in the Union—which I need not mention—a Senator from each of those States undertook to deride and ridicule this statement on the floor of the Senate.

The cooperation of State authorities, local authorities, the press, and all classes of citizens of the States affected has become admirable.

I suggest to the Senator from California that it would not suffice to put a corps of Christian Science healers in the field to deal with the hookworm, although I do not object to their activities so long as the world has access to other methods of healing.

Mr. President, I do not wish to have this matter passed by without making a comment upon this character of alleged protest, because these so-called protests are based upon untruth, and the citizens of the country are being misled by statements which are not only false, but are instigated by the Patent Medicine Trust and the enemies of the pure food and drug laws, who can easily excite those who are innocent of wrong purpose to oppose this bill on the absurd theory of "medical freedom."

I enter my protest against memorials based upon statements and conclusions which are obviously untrue. The ordinary citizen signing these petitions does not know that these statements and conclusions are untrue, and therefore may be easily induced to sign the petitions. He has not the bill before him. He has not had the opportunity of studying this measure. He does not know the facts nor the great need for this measure.

I therefore think it proper to put upon the record at the time of the delivery of these petitions my comment upon them.

Mr. President, I think that Senate bill No. 1, against which these petitions are filed, is a matter of such grave national importance that it is the duty of the Members of the Senate to examine that bill and to examine the testimony which has been submitted in connection with it. It has been printed in the form of Senate documents. They are available, and I hope the Senate will, before acting upon the matter, at least give it the patient and conscientious consideration which a measure of this great importance deserves.

I should like to ask that Senate bill No. 1 go over until the first Monday in December.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in making that request I would not wish the Senator to think that by going over until December there would be no movement on the part of certain members of the committee to pass the bill I introduced and which I expected at the time the Senator's bill is to be discussed to offer as a substitute for that measure. If this bill goes over until next December, then I will ask the Senate to consider the bill I have introduced and which I expected to offer as a substitute for the Senator's bill.

Mr. OWEN. I should be quite content, Mr. President, to make the Senate bill the unfinished business and take it up at once.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be perfectly satisfactory; but, of course, that could not be done.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. SMOOT. That can not be done, because we have unfinished business at the present time.

Mr. OWEN. It may be made the unfinished business, subject to the existing order. I make that motion, if that be the only objection of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not make the metal schedule bill the unfinished business, nor did I ask that it be made the unfinished business, but the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] asked that it be made the unfinished business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg pardon of the Senator from Utah. I was not listening to the first part of his statement.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Oklahoma asked that Senate bill No. 1, creating an independent bureau of health, be made the unfinished business.

Mr. OWEN. Subject to the existing order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not see how that could be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I called the Senator's attention to the fact that there is already a bill which has been made the unfinished business, and I did not see how that could be done.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Senators are speaking of making this matter or that the unfinished business as though it could be done by the Senate. You can not make anything the unfinished business by motion or by unanimous consent. Unfinished business is the result of the automatic action of the rules and procedure in the Senate. If we were to attempt to make this bill the unfinished business, any objection in December or at any other time would destroy that attempted action.

Mr. SMOOT. Or destroy it now.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no such thing possible under the rule. Is there talk about the tariff bill having been made the unfinished business on somebody's motion? It was not done; it can not be done.

Mr. SMOOT. It was not done on motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. It can not be done on anybody's motion at any time.

Mr. SMOOT. It was the request of the Senator from North Carolina the day before, and then through the procedure of the Senate after the morning hour it was taken up, and it necessarily became the unfinished business.

Mr. HEYBURN. It can not be done on request; it can not be done by acquiescence.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw my suggestion, Mr. President.

Mr. HEYBURN. With the Senator's permission, inasmuch as I interrupted him, I want to finish the statement, because it should be better understood than it seems to be. No request, no acquiescence, no unanimous consent can make any measure the unfinished business. The unfinished business is a condition that results from the status of a bill at a certain hour and time, and it would result in the face of all of the objections and could not be augmented by any motion.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. We lose sight of that sometimes in talking about agreeing to make something unfinished business. We could not agree to that either by unanimous consent or by vote.

Mr. OWEN. I would be glad, Mr. President, to be permitted to acquiesce for the present in the views of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Some one was proposing to move just in the opposite direction, and I thought it well enough to point it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma withdraws his second request. His first request is that further action upon Senate bill No. 1 be postponed until the first Monday in December next.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 5952) to provide for an enlarged homestead entry in Nevada where sufficient water suitable for domestic purposes is not obtainable upon the lands, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 695) thereon.

SAVANNAH RIVER DAMS.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5930) to extend the time for completion of dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 689) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Georgia to the report.

Mr. BACON. As this is a very short bill, and important work is suspended on account of the lack of this legislation, I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 2, after the word "two," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That any dam built under authority of the said act shall be constructed, maintained, and operated subject to and in all respects in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906," and no dam shall be constructed except in conformity to plans which may be hereafter approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the extension of the time allowed to the Twin City Power Co. to construct dams across the Savannah River, authorized by an act of February 29, 1908, until three years from the date fixed in the original act for its completion, to wit, February 29, 1916: Provided, That under the approval of the Secretary of War upon plans and specifications to be submitted, the said corporation may at its option develop its contemplated water power by the construction of one dam in lieu of two: Provided further, That any dam built under authority of the said act shall be constructed, maintained, and operated subject to and in all respects in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906"; and no dam shall be constructed except in conformity to plans which may be hereafter approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers.

SEC. 2. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico, who introduced the bill, will explain its object.

Mr. FALL. The bill to which the Senator from Idaho refers provides for the creation of a national park on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for the allotment of certain lands in severalty to the Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. Such bills go to the Committee on Public Lands. This is to be made a park because these are to be public lands.

Mr. FALL. I have no objection to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for a survey and system of roads for the proper development of the Mount Rainier National Park, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the establishment of an agricultural plant and experiment station at or near the city of Mandan, N. Dak., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 18960), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SWANSON (for Mr. MARTIN of Virginia) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

ANNA I. WOOD.

Mr. RAYNER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 303), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Anna I. Wood, widow of the late Thomas Wood, laborer of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that 25,000 copies of Senate Report No. 619 on Senate bill No. 1 be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order requested by the Senator from Oklahoma will be entered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if there have not been a pretty liberal number of copies of that bill already printed?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know of any extra copies of the bill being printed. I do not think any copies of the report have been printed for distribution. The report is only seven pages and would hardly cost a dollar a thousand.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is the order requested for the printing of the bill or of the report?

Mr. OWEN. It is for the report, which includes the bill as a part of the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has that bill been reported favorably to the Senate?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir; it is a very short report, and, as I have said, I do not suppose it would cost a dollar a thousand to print it. A good many people are petitioning Congress under the impression that this is a bad bill, and I should like to have the report printed so as to enable them to become informed with regard to its contents and to learn that it is really a good bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not had any calls with regard to it as yet, and I wondered if we wanted 25,000 copies. We are dealing in thousands here very thoughtlessly, I think, in regard to printing documents. Does not the Senator think that 5,000 copies would answer the purpose for the present?

Mr. OWEN. I would be content with that number, although I think there were a thousand names, more or less, sent in here this morning in communications regarding this matter on petitions which are being artificially manufactured, and I thought it would be well to send these petitioners the bill itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. That, I should think, would be "Love's labor lost," probably.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order will be for printing 5,000 copies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to make an inquiry. I think it is wise to have a considerable number of copies printed, but I should like to inquire whether the views of the minority were filed at the same time?

Mr. OWEN. The minority submitted no views.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I understand, the report was not unanimous.

Mr. OWEN. That is true, but there were no minority views submitted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There were not?

Mr. OWEN. No.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that while there were no minority views filed, there were members of the committee who reserved the right to oppose the bill upon the floor and to offer a substitute for it.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; the Senator from Utah intends to move a substitute for the bill, I believe.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask whether this is the last report that was made upon the bill referred to when it came out of the committee?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir; it was the only report, so far as I know.

Mr. WORKS. It has been said, Mr. President, that there were no views of the minority submitted. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee out of which this report is supposed to have come whether it was issued with the knowledge of the chairman of the committee or whether it really expressed the views of a majority of the committee?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from California, I will say I was myself among the number who reserved the right and privilege of opposing this bill on the floor of the Senate. The bill was referred to its author to make the report. I did not see the report, and have not yet read it. I did not concern myself particularly about it, and I do not know whether the report was submitted to any other members of the committee or not. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], to whom I have referred, can answer the question specifically.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to have an answer to that question from some one who knows. It is my understanding that this report is simply the views of the Senator from Oklahoma alone, and was neither submitted to nor approved by any other member of the committee.

Mr. OWEN. The report is simply an abstract of the bill, with quotations from various authorities who have expressed themselves favorably to it. It contains no peculiar views of the Senator from Oklahoma, but I understand does represent substantially the views of the majority. He was authorized to report the bill, and he reported it with a brief abstract of the bill. The whole matter, including the bill, does not make seven pages. The hearings were very voluminous, going into hundreds of pages, possibly several thousand—the hearings in the Senate and in the House combined.

Mr. SMOOT. The hearings were not upon this bill, however, but upon the bill as originally introduced by the Senator a couple of years ago.

Mr. OWEN. The hearings did proceed upon this bill and upon its predecessor in the previous Congress, bill 6039. But these bills are of like purport. There is no substantial fundamental difference between them.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say further that there were members of the committee who voted to have the bill reported to the Senate, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has already said, who reserved the right, in agreeing to reporting favorably the bill to the Senate, to object to it and to vote against it on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether there is anything in this report to which he objects?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not objected to the report. I have not read the report.

Mr. OWEN. I do not think he could object to anything in the report, because there is nothing in it but the most formal matter of well-ascertained fact.

I should like to ask the Senator from California if there is anything in the report to which he, as a Senator holding opposing views, objects?

Mr. WORKS. I have no objection whatever to it as coming from the Senator from Oklahoma, but I was trying to ascertain whether it contained the views of the majority of the committee or whether it was made by the Senator from Oklahoma without conference with other members of the committee or without any submission of it to them. I was trying to get an answer to that question.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I very frankly reply to the Senator from California that, being authorized to make the report, I made it. The report as printed speaks for itself that the Senator from Oklahoma made the report. This he did under the usual practice of the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. I have no objection if the Senate desires to send it out as the views of the Senator from Oklahoma, but I did not want it to go out as the declaration of the committee, because I have been informed that it does not contain their views on the subject at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand the Senator from Oklahoma modifies his request so as to reduce the number to 5,000?

Mr. OWEN. I do if anybody objects to 25,000 copies; otherwise I would desire 25,000. I understand it would cost the Government about $25. If there is anyone who objects to it, I shall refrain from making any such extravagant request. I do not want to impose upon the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think 5,000 copies will be sufficient.

I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question. The Senator in debate has frequently said that the President had recommended a department of health. The President recommended a bureau of health. I suppose the report does not contain a statement that he recommended a department of health, because all he recommended in his message to Congress is a bureau; and if the statement is made in the report that the President made that kind of recommendation I hope it will be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands there is no objection to the request for the printing of 5,000 copies as a Senate document.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to check up on this. I can just dimly see the smiling countenance of the Senator from Oklahoma. I understand the bill has gone over until December.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is incorrect. Objection was made to that.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am incorrect. The bill remains on the calendar.

Mr. OWEN. It does.

Mr. HEYBURN. The proposition is to send out extra copies of the report for the purpose of creating public opinion. In that event I shall do what I may under the rules to have this measure taken up and voted down before the campaign. I merely say that to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not know how I shall vote upon this bill. I have a number of telegrams from citizens of Arizona requesting me to vote for the bill and a number asking me to vote against it. I have more than 60 requests for copies of the committee report. I am certain, in view of the discussion that is going on through the public press with respect to this bill, that a great number of copies of the report will be called for.

I earnestly hope no objection will be made to the publication of a sufficient number of committee reports.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No objection has been made, and the order stands entered for the publication of 5,000 copies.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to correct the Senator from Arizona. The report is not the committee report.

Mr. ASHURST. I have in my hand a printed report of what purports to be a report of the committee. It is either a report or it is not. If it is not a committee report, it should not have been promulgated as such.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a report from the committee, but a report prepared by the Senator from Oklahoma, and not another member of the committee subscribed to the report or knows what is in it.

Mr. OWEN. I do not wish to allow that statement to stand. The substantial fact is that the Senator from Oklahoma was authorized by the committee to make the report.

Mr. ASHURST. I assume that no Senator ever has or ever will undertake to make a report for a committee without the authorization of the committee, and I am proceeding upon the hypothesis that this report as promulgated and printed was made with the concurrence and authorization of the committee, and I shall so proceed until I am very sufficiently advised otherwise.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that a majority of the committee voted that the Senator from Oklahoma should make the report, and he made the report.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the report was made under the authorization of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, they ordered him to make a report.

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what he did; but the committee itself has signed no report. You will find no name signed to the report.

Mr. ASHURST. I care not whether the members of the committee signed it or not. If they authorized the report, it is their report.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand.

Mr. ASHURST. I am seeking facts, so I may know how to vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Reports come here which are not unanimous and which are not signed, but whenever a report is made by the committee it is generally signed by those favorable to the report. There are no names signed to this report.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not care to interrupt the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will proceed in his own right.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I simply desire, as chairman of the committee, to say that a majority of the committee ordered a favorable report upon the bill. As chairman of the committee, and following the usual rule of designating some member to make the report, I designated the Senator from Oklahoma, the author of the bill, as the one to make the report, and he did so. Whether the report was submitted by him to other members of the committee I do not know. Speaking for myself, I have not seen the report, except in its printed form, and I have not read it. Of course I did not read it in manuscript form.

With reference to the statement of the Senator from Utah, I will say to the Senator that the committee did not authorize the Senator from Oklahoma to make the report, but as chairman of the committee I followed the usual rule, and I designated him.

Mr. ASHURST. The report should be accepted as a true report or the system abolished, because we are proceeding upon the hypothesis that it is a report of a committee.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. ASHURST. Very cheerfully.

Mr. WORKS. I was not objecting to the report on the ground that it was not authorized, nor was I criticizing the action of the Senator from Texas, as chairman of the committee, in designating some one to make the report, but it seemed to me a rather singular thing that a member of a committee can incorporate in the report upon that authority data and information and argument in support of the bill. I simply wanted it understood that, so far as this report constituted argument in favor of the bill, it was the argument of the Senator from Oklahoma alone.

The VICE PRESIDENT subsequently said: In order that there may be no misunderstanding about the matter presented by the Senator from Oklahoma, the Chair will state that the Chair understands it was for 5,000 additional copies of the report, not as a document, and, of course, they will go to the document room.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing as follows:

Ordered, That 5,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 619, to accompany the bill S. 1, Sixty-second Congress, second session, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT HURON, S. DAK.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask unanimous consent, on account of the importance of time in the matter, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6009) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak.

I will simply state that the Supervising Architect reports that it will require about $6,000 additional appropriation for the post-office building in the town where I live to enable them to complete the surface walls in the same material. The excavation is going on and it is important that the matter receive attention at once if it is to receive attention at all.

There being no objecion, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "six," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak., be, and the same is hereby, increased $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to finish the walls of said building with the stone specified in the existing contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AND EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there other morning business? If not, morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate, in pursuance of its unanimous-consent order, a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries resulting in disability or death to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask if a motion to recommit is not in order under Rule XXII?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No such motion has yet been made, but, of course——

Mr. CULBERSON. The motion has been proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been printed, but the bill was not then before the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is in order before an amendment under Rule XXII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in grave doubt whether, under the unanimous-consent agreement, the motion can be entertained.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was about to call attention to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be glad to hear the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to put in some memorials, as does the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Texas kindly consents to yield for a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that can be done, although it is very unusual to interrupt a unanimous-consent agreement to do anything of the kind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is with reference to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not rule it can not be done; but it is very unusual.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A Senator can read them or they can be read by the Secretary during the course of his speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator in that respect is correct.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Georgia wanted to have some telegrams read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Missouri will present his first, as they are short ones, and then I will present mine.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in presenting these telegrams I desire to have the dates of each read in order that the Senate may understand the change of sentiment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the telegrams, including the dates.

The Secretary read as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
Kirkwood, Mo., April 26, 1912.

Hon. JAMES A. REED,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your favor, inclosing copy of employees' liability and compensation act, appreciated, and after a thorough reading of same individually I can personally assure you I am not in favor of same. Do not consider it as reasonable to any extent, more especially as it makes a distinction as between an employee making $100 per month and one making $50. I wish to contend that the $50 per month employee's family is entitled to as much consideration of the right of recovery or compensation as the $100 per month employee. The corporation's right to force injured employees to work or benefit to cease is un-American, narrow, and not within the rule of reason. The right of the court for recovery can not be denied anyone, by such a law or otherwise. Such an enactment would merely make a disabled or injured employee or defendant the victim of court-appointed adjusters or company doctors. Granting to others the right of their own opinions, individually I do not consider the bill a measure of relief to any extent whatever—in fact, quite the contrary. With the assurance of good will on my part, I wish to thank you for your efforts, so far, so good.

Yours, very truly,

J. F. MURRAY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams and letter will lie on the table.

Mr. BACON. I present two communications in the nature of memorials in regard to the compensation bill, which I ask may be read. They are short.

The Secretary read as follows:

MACON DIVISION, No. 123,
ORDER OF RAILWAY CONDUCTORS,
Macon, Ga., April 28, 1912.

Hon. A. O. BACON,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: By a unanimous vote of Macon Division, No. 123, Order of Railway Conductors, I was directed to write you requesting that you oppose the passage of the bill now pending before the Congress known as workmen's compensation act.

Our members have not sufficient time to familiarize themselves with the bill, and feel that under no circumstances should the bill be passed at this session of Congress.

I learn from engineers, firemen, and trainmen that fully 95 per cent of all the men are opposed to the bill in its present shape.

Trusting that you can and will use your influence against the passage of the bill, and with best wishes, I am,

Very truly, yours,

A. N. KENDRICK, Secretary.

DOUGLAS, GA., April 29, 1912.

Hon. A. O. BACON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Douglas Division, No. 606, Order of Railway Conductors, request that you oppose the workmen's compensation bill pending in Senate and House.

W. B. LEE, Chief Conductor.
S. E. PARRISH, Secretary and Treasurer.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to state, in order that there may not appear to be any partiality in the matter, that every communication I have received without exception is opposed to the passage of the bill, except one which I previously submitted to the Senate, and which was afterwards recalled and a communication adverse to the bill sent in its place.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I send the following statement to the desk and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent to have read the statement he has sent to the desk. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The following is a short statement relative to the present Federal employers' liability act and the proposed Federal compensation act. This argument was presented to Congress by Avondale Division, No. 334, Order Railway Conductors, Birmingham, Ala.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.

The statute makes the railroad company liable to an employee or his survivors when he is injured or killed, when his injury or death results in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carriers, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, trucks, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

The statute also declares that contributory negligence of an employee who is injured is not a defense to any suit that may be brought because of the injury or death of the employee, but it provides that where there is contributory negligence—that is, where an employee is partly to blame for an injury or death—that there should be an apportionment of the damages. So that when an employee is injured and brings suit under this act, if both he and the railroad company were negligent, he would be entitled to a verdict at the hands of the jury, but the jury would have the right, if it saw fit, to reduce the amount in proportion to the amount of the negligence of the person injured or killed.

No contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever will enable the railroad company to avoid the payment of damages for any liability under this act. No insurance paid by the railroad company for injuries to employees under this act will relieve the railroad company from the payment of damages for injuries.

This act declares that an employee injured or killed is not guilty of contributory negligence of any kind in any case where his injury or death was caused by the failure of the railroad to comply with any of the safety-appliance statutes of the United States.

Nor can he be held to have assumed the risk of injury or death where the railroad company has failed to comply with the safety-appliance statutes.

The act also provides that suits can be brought under the statute in the courts of any State or of the United States which could have jurisdiction.

It is also provided by the present Federal law that a violation of the Federal safety-appliance acts makes the railroad absolutely liable for an injury or death to an employee, and that no defense is available to the railroad where the injury or death results from such violation of the safety-appliance act. It is therefore well to state in this connection the provisions and requirements of the Federal safety-appliance acts:

Locomotives must be equipped with driving-power brakes operated from the cab.

All trains must have cars equipped with continuous power brakes to enable an engineer of a train to control the speed of the train without a brakeman.

They must have couplers that will couple by impact; that is, by pushing them together.

They must have couplers that will uncouple without the necessity of men going between the cars to uncouple.

They must have grab-iron handholds on the ends of cars.

There is a standard height of drawbars of cars, and all cars must measure up to that standard.

The boilers of locomotives and their appurtenances must be in safe condition to operate without unnecessary peril to life or limb.

There must be secure sill steps on every car.

Every car must have efficient brakes.

There must be secure ladders on every car.

There must be secure running boards on every car.

There must be secure handholds or grab irons on roof of cars at top of ladder.

They can not haul cars coupled together by means of chains in any revenue train.

Locomotives must have ash pans that can be operated without going beneath the engine.

When a railroad company fails to have any of the foregoing safety appliances on their cars or engines or fails to have them in operating or good condition, and an employee is injured or killed, the railroad company is guilty of negligence, and the employee, under the law, is neither guilty of contributory negligence nor has he assumed the risk of injury or death by using the unsafe appliances.

Therefore, when an employee is injured on an interstate highway and he is engaged in interstate commerce and the injury or death is caused by a failure to have any of the safety appliances in operation, the railroad company can offer no defense to the suit. It is only necessary to ascertain the extent of the injury and fix the financial loss for it.

Where the railroad company is itself an interstate highway or handles interstate freight, passengers, or express, and the employee is not engaged in the transportation of interstate commerce, his injury or death by a failure to comply with any of the safety-appliance statutes would give him the right to sue in any State independent of the Federal employers' liability act. He would then be held not to have assumed the risk of injury if he knew that the company failed to use proper safety appliances, for the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the safety-appliance act "is intended to embrace all locomotives, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railroad which is a highway of interstate commerce."

It may be said of the laws of the United States now in force that in practically no case can an employee who has been injured have his right to damages defeated if there is negligence on the part of the railroad. A casual reading of the act will make this clear, and when a failure to comply with the safety-appliance statute results in injury or death there is no defense available to the railroad.

PROPOSED COMPENSATION ACT.

The proposed compensation act contains the following features:

It is exclusive and compulsory, but it only displaces the Federal liability act.

It appoints an adjuster, who is really a special master of the United States court.

The adjuster has the right to fix the amount of compensation to be paid an injured employee under the act.

He has the right, after that amount has been fixed, to increase or diminish it.

He has the right to change a judgment of the court, even though that judgment had been upheld by the court of appeals and approved by the Supreme Court.

He has the right to stop payments provided for in a judgment of the United States court.

Appeals from his decision go to a jury, and the controversy is then between his findings and the injured employee.

It limits the employee in the employment of his attorney, but it places no limit on the railroad as to the employment of an attorney.

It provides for compensation for death or injury, and makes the following classifications:

Death.
Permanent total disability.
Permanent partial disability.
Temporary total disability.
Temporary partial disability.

It provides that no compensation shall be paid for the first 14 days.

It arbitrarily says that no man's wages shall be greater than $100 per month, and all calculation for compensation is based on that arbitrary declaration.

It provides for the practice before the adjuster, the method of appealing the cases, and as to who shall pay the cost. Under it the injured party will have to pay the cost if he excepts and appeals. If the injured employee excepts to the adjuster's findings, he has to pay the cost incurred thereby. If he wants a trial before a jury, he must demand it and must pay the cost of that trial, but paragraph 4 of section 14 says that even before the jury the findings of the adjuster are prima facie evidence of the facts set forth in the findings.

That leaves the trial before the jury where it is not a trial as between the railroad and the employee, but as between the adjuster and the employee, for in the trial the employee will have to attack and overcome with evidence the findings of the adjuster.

It provides a limitation upon the employment of counsel by the employee, but does not limit the railroad company to the amount or quality of its attorneys or counsel, nor to the number of its claim agents that are to be employed.

Section 20 is of more interest to railroad employees on account of its far-reaching effect than one would imagine by reading it. It means that they can say to any man earning over $100 a month when he is injured that he was not entitled to earn more than $100 per month. In future years when wage agreements are considered this limitation on a man's wages can be used by the railroad as an argument.

It provides that if a man receiving permanent partial disability—that is, his hand is cut off—and if he goes to work and he receives another partial disability—that is, his other hand is cut off—he would only be paid for the loss of both hands 50 per cent of his wages, limited to $100 per month, for a total of nine years and six months. The loss of both feet in the same way, or the loss of both eyes in the same way, or the loss of a hand or a foot in the same way would not give him the benefit of the compensation provided for for total permanent injuries.

It provides that dependent children over 16 years of age means children unable to earn a living by reason of mental or physical incapacity.

Many have read the bill a number of times and have failed to find all the jokers.

It provides, on page 41, beginning at line 1, that whenever an employee of an interstate highway is killed or injured it shall be presumed prima facie that he was engaged in interstate commerce.

All employees would prefer to bring their suits under State acts, but the proposed act puts on them the burden of proving that they were not engaged in interstate commerce. It will be almost impossible for them to carry this burden in many cases.

It provides that no man shall be paid for the first 14 days of his injury, and under that a man could be injured, stay away from work 14 days, go to work on the fifteenth day, be injured again on that day, lose 14 days more, and go to work on the fourteenth day again, lose the month's time, and get nothing for his injuries.

It forces an employee to accept the services of the company's physician unless he wants to employ his own at his own expense. The amount of the physician's bills and hospital bills that a man is entitled to from the road is limited to $200, and one serious surgical operation would cost that amount, and after the railroad had paid for that the employee would have to continue the payments.

It allows the employer and employee to constitute committees for the settlement of claims, and this gives the employer a hold that will enable him to squeeze many dollars out of injured employees, for everyone knows that an employee on a committee is not likely to be very severe on his employer when he knows that his own job is at stake.

It limits the payments to a widow to a total of eight years, but the payment stops if she dies or remarries. This would eliminate half the payments to widows. Another one is that children receive the benefits of this act until they are 16. The number of girls who can earn money enough to support themselves between the ages of 16 and 21 are few, and that class would be compelled to supplement their ordinary earnings in extraordinary ways. Take the case of an engineer earning $225 a month, who had two girls in school at the ages of 16 and 17. They would immediately be thrown on the world to earn a living, and to them it would mean starvation or begging. That section could be illustrated in a number of ways.

Another thing, this bill puts a premium on carelessness and recklessness; it provides for the extreme reckless employee the same amount that can be recovered by the very careful employee, and that can be best illustrated in this way: A train hand earning $100 a month carelessly neglects to set a switch to a main line behind a freight train, and a high-class passenger train, properly operated by an engineer and conductor each earning $250 a month, runs into the open switch, and the careful engineer and conductor and the careless train hand are all killed. Thirty passengers may be killed and a half million dollars worth of property destroyed, yet the company will only have to pay for the careful engineer and conductor the same amount that it pays for the careless train hand.

It provides that if the widow has 1 child or 10 children she shall be paid 50 per cent of the wages of the deceased, limited to $50 a month.

It provides for certain payments to the dependent parents, and for a very small amount to be paid other relatives in case there is no widow, children, or parents.

It says that the loss of sight in both eyes, the loss of both feet at or above the ankle, the loss of both hands, the loss of one hand and one foot, an injury to the spine resulting in permanent and complete paralysis of the legs or arms, and an injury to the skull resulting in incurable imbecility or insanity are permanent total disabilities, but it leaves open to the adjuster and the courts the question of what other things are permanent disabilities and provides in that way for many lawsuits.

To those who have the permanent total disabilities it only pays 50 per cent of the salary, limited to $100 a month during the life of the deceased.

It provides that for the loss of the arm above the elbow joint an employee is paid 50 per cent of his wages for six years. That would mean that an employee earning $200 a month will get $3,600 for the loss of his arm. One earning $50 per month will get $1,800 for the loss of his arm. The loss of the leg above the knee joint would only cost the railroad $3,300 for a man earning $100 or more a month, and for a man earning $50 a month it would cost them $1,650.

A complete loss of hearing in both ears would entitle the employee to receive 50 per cent of his salary, as limited heretofore, for 72 months. For the loss of one ear he would be paid for 36 months. It provides that for the loss of the sight of one eye the employee would be paid 50 per cent of his salary, limited to $100 per month, for 30 months. The loss of the sight of an eye permanently incapacitates a railroad man from ever engaging in the service again, and if he were a conductor earning $200 a month he would get $1,500 for that permanent injury.

For the loss of other members he would get similar amounts.

It also provides that if an injured employee goes to work and receives for his work as much as 90 per cent of his wages, limited to $100 per month, the company is to pay him nothing for his injury during the time he is at work. Should he receive less than 90 per cent the compensation shall be diminished.

That portion of the bill really means that should a conductor earning $200 a month have his left hand cut off the company would be due him $50 a month for 57 months. Should he lose a foot they would be due him the same amount for 48 months, but if he accepted from them a position as train auditor, or any other position that would pay him $90 a month, they would never have to pay him a dollar for his injury, and when the 48 months or the 57 months expire the company could discharge him, having paid him $90 a month for his work and nothing for his injury.

An effort has been made to show that this plan originated with railroad employees. That is true, but the employees were the claim agents of the railroad. You will find the scheme fully explained on page 44, Minutes of the Association of Railway Claim Agents at Montreal, and the same page shows you that their work to have this act passed has been done secretly.

The only knowledge that railway employees have of this bill has been gained within the past 30 days, the bill having been published in the various railroad publications since the 1st of March, and in the Railroad Trainman of April, page 355, is another proof of the employees' lack of knowledge of this question.

OUR OBJECTIONS.

We object to this bill because of the provisions above stated, and further because it will compel every railroad man to increase his cost of living by purchasing additional heavy insurance.

We object to it because it displaces the employers' liability act.

We object to it because it does not provide adequate compensation in the case of injury or death.

We object to it because it takes out litigation from the State courts and puts it in the hands of one man.

We object to it because the framers of it evidently hold human life and limb cheap.

We object to it because it is entirely in favor of the railroads and bears no provision in favor of the employee.

During the reading of the foregoing statement,

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, this seems to be a pretty long document. I ask the Senator from Georgia whether it would not suit his purpose to have the remainder of it printed without reading?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would rather have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have received a number of telegrams on this subject, which are not of the usual stereotyped character. One is against the bill, while the others all seem to favor it. I ask that they be read as evidencing the sentiment of a number of organizations in my State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have a letter in my hand from one of the leading locomotive engineers in the South. I know him personally. He is a very intelligent man. I want to say that he came here to attend the hearings before our subcommittee, but after coming he did not appear before the committee. He said he dared not go in there, because if he went in and opposed this bill at that time he feared he would be dismissed, as he was an old man. He stated that he had insurance, that he did not want to lose it, and that his charter might be taken from him. Since that time, however, I understand the bridle has been taken off, and he has written me a letter which he has given me permission to publish. I will send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS,
Raleigh, N. C., April 19, 1912.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. OVERMAN: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your valued favor of the 16th instant in regard to the workmen's compensation act, and I thank you most heartily for the efforts you are making to delay this measure, but I very much regret to hear you say that the principle is probably right and a step in the right direction. We, the railroad employees who are directly affected, can not see it that way. We feel that it is without doubt one of the most unfair and unjust pieces of legislation ever offered to us. It is class legislation. If a train is wrecked, passengers and crew killed, the passengers can sue for any amount, according to conditions. The crew is denied this privilege. They must accept the miserly sum set forth in this act.

It is unconstitutional from the fact that it denies us a trial by jury, as intended by the Constitution. It is true the language of the bill says we may sue; but what are the conditions? The evidence given before the adjuster shall be prima facie evidence. Again, the jury can not exercise their free thought and make an award according to evidence, but are bound by the amounts set forth in the bill. With these conditions it renders the trial by jury a simple mockery.

We are perfectly satisfied with our present laws, especially the Federal liability act. This gives us the necessary protection. A large per cent of our personal injuries cases are compromised and never go to trial. I promised to send you a copy of the minutes of the Railroad Claim Agents' Association to show you that this measure was the outcome of this association to kill the Federal liability act, but Senator HOKE SMITH wanted the original books, hence I have been unable to get copies. You can see these minutes by calling on him. The actions in the Senate committee to rush the measure without allowing due consideration, and the heads of the labor organizations to smuggle this act in without letting those affected know of its existence, and when by chance we did learn of it and offered a protest we were told to keep quiet or we would be fired. They tell you of the many hearings and publicity this matter had, but they did not tell you that the men affected by this act were not allowed to testify under penalty of expulsion unless they favored the bill. These are facts, nevertheless.

I am not a chronic kicker but a loyal member, and have been for the past 25 years, but when conditions are such that I have to decide whether my loyalty shall be to the order or to my family it does not take me long to decide that my family comes first.

If you want to please 99 per cent of the men in North Carolina affected by the workmen's compensation act—I have allowed 1 per cent margin, although I pledge you my word of honor that I have not found a single man who favors this bill in part or as a whole—then oppose this measure first, last, and always; fight single-eyed for its defeat, and you will ever have the appreciation and deep gratitude of the railroad men of the State.

With best wishes for your success and high personal regards, I beg to remain,

Yours, very truly, D. K. WRIGHT.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is one further article, Mr. President, which I desire to put in the RECORD which has already been before the committee. It is in the shape of a communication in the Raleigh News and Observer, and I am informed, though I do not vouch for the fact, that the article in question was written by one of the great judges of my State, who has been on the bench for 25 years. He is not an "ambulance chaser," but a man of high talents and attainments, and I think his analysis of the bill is about as fine as any I have seen.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from North Carolina will allow me, I hope that argument will be read. I am reliably informed that it was prepared by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the reading of the article, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE EMPLOYEES IN OPPOSITION—RAILROAD WORKERS ARE AGAINST THE PASSAGE OF THE FEDERAL ACCIDENT COMPENSATION ACT—HOLD PROPOSED BILL IS WICKEDLY INGENIOUS—THE VIEWS AND POSITION OF THE RAILROAD EMPLOYEES ARE SET OUT BY A DISTINGUISHED LAWYER, WHO HAS GIVEN STUDY TO THE MATTER AND WHO DECLARES THAT THE MEASURE, IF MADE INTO LAW, WILL SERIOUSLY AFFECT RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

The railroad employees in this country number perhaps one million and a half. This splendid body of men are much concerned over the "compensation act" now pending in the United States Senate. The sentiment of the employees in this section of the country is very adverse to it, and they are confirmed in their views by the opinion of those skilled in the laws in whom they have confidence and with whom they have conferred. This paper is asked to publish the views of a distinguished lawyer in this State who has stood for justice to the employees all these years. He said: "The striking features of the proposed compensation act, so called, may be thus summed up:

"1. It proposes to take from railroad employees the protection they have secured through State and national legislation in this country by means of 'employer's liability' acts, under which a workman who has been injured by the negligence of a common carrier can recover just compensation therefor whether it results in death or lesser injury.

"2. It restricts the compensation far below the actual damages sustained and divides the amount which a jury would award in a lump sum into payments distributed over a varying series of years up to eight years. The highest compensation allowed by the act for wrongful death is $50 per month for eight years, which is equivalent to less than $4,000 cash, and even that is allowed only when the deceased leaves both widow and children.

"3. It proposes to relieve railroad companies by whose negligence the death or other injury is inflicted from the cost of such compensation by placing it upon the shippers and the traveling public, for section 31 provides: 'The burden of compensation under this act for personal injuries shall be considered as an element of the cost of transportation, and the Interstate Commerce Commission in any proceeding before it affecting rates is directed to recognize and give effect to this policy.' Under the present system the owners of the corporation are interested in avoiding accidents and injuries to employees accruing from negligence because compensation therefor will tend to reduce dividends. But the proposed act by shifting this burden upon the traveling public and shippers makes the owners and managers of the railroads immune to any consequences flowing from their negligence. The increase in the number of killed and mangled will be inevitably prompt.

"4. The act further relieves the railroad companies from all expense of litigation which now falls upon them and places it upon the taxpayers, for it provides that the adjustment of losses shall be made by a new set of officials called 'adjusters,' to be paid salaries of $1,800 to $3,000 each, in addition to their actual traveling expenses and their subsistence at the rate of $5 per day, all of which shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Just why these corporations should be relieved of the expense of litigation incident to their refusal to pay compensation for injuries accruing by their negligence, and why the cost thereof should be shifted to the United States Treasury, is a secret locked up in the breast of the ingenious corporation counsel whose fine Italian hand is seen in every line of this proposed statute. These adjusters will cost the public, for salary and expenses, over $6,000 a year each, and their number is not limited by the act.

"5. Unlike the jury, which now decides upon the compensation to be allowed for negligent injuries caused to employees, this compensation is to be awarded by 'adjusters,' in whose selection the employees will have no voice. This crowd of new officeholders are to be selected and appointed by the Federal judges, who, not being elective and holding for life, may not be altogether uninfluenced in the appointment of such adjusters by their acquaintance with the heads of these great transportation companies by the friendly aid of whom some of the Federal judges have been helped to a seat on the bench. Certainly there is not the same likelihood of adjusters being selected upon the recommendation of the employees.

"6. The compensation provided by the act is very complicated, as well as minute in providing the different kinds of injuries, but it is uniform in only one respect, that the compensation provided is in every instance very far below what may be a just compensation for the injuries sustained.

"7. While the act does not restrict the amount which the corporations shall pay for able and experienced counsel, it is careful to provide that the compensation for counsel retained for the employee shall be fixed by the adjuster, whose method of appointment has already been noted.

"8. The act is also careful to provide that when an employee has been injured or killed neither the cause of action nor the payments due therefor, when determined by the adjuster, shall be assignable. As a further restriction upon the compensation, it is further provided that in calculating wages, the percentage of which shall be the basis of compensation, 26 times the daily wage shall be considered a month's wages, and 'no employee's wages shall be considered more than $100 per month.'

"9. The act is indeed unconstitutional, in that it proposes to deprive the employees of common carriers of the right of trial by jury, which is guaranteed by the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States 'in all cases where the amount in controversy shall exceed $20.'

"It is true the act provides for a jury trial if exceptions are filed to the report of the adjuster and a written demand for a jury, but this is practically nullified by a provision that 'the findings of the adjuster shall be received as prima facie evidence in such trial before the jury; that the court may submit special interrogatories and that the trial by jury is waived if this demand for a jury is not made within five days after the adjuster files his report.' Of this filing the employee, who will often be distant from the court, may fail to be apprised.

"10. To sum up: The act takes from the employees the protection of the present employers' liability act; it restricts compensation far below a just compensation and divides the payment over a series of years; it relieves the railroad company of the burden of all compensation and places it upon the shippers and traveling public. The act relieves the companies not only from payment of all court costs, providing for adjusters, who are to be paid out of the Treasury; it provides for the selection of these adjusters in a method which is likely to secure appointees more favorable to the corporations than to the employees; the method of compensation is complicated; it restricts the employee, but not the employer, in the selection of counsel, and deprives them of their constitutional right, guaranteed to all citizens, of a trial by jury.

"11. All this is done upon the pretext that lawyers who represent employees in such cases are 'ambulance chasers,' and that this act will decrease the volume of litigation. It may so do, though it has not had that effect in other countries. But if it has that effect here, it will be by depriving the employees of just remedies and by adding enormously to the advantages already enjoyed by these great combinations of capital in their contests with crippled employees or with destitute wife and children when the employee has been taken from them by death caused by the negligence of the corporation. In free Switzerland every attempt to introduce this proposed 'compensation act' has been defeated, and that country enjoys the broadest and most liberal 'employers' liability act.'

"12. In the language of Mr. Carter, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, 'Congress should devote its legislative energy, first, to the prevention of deaths and other injuries to railroad employees by broadening the "safety-appliance" laws and the "employers' liability" laws; and then, when it exhausts its authority and capacity in that direction, enact laws for the compensation of those whose death from injuries were not preventable. Congress should not now accept as inevitable the mangling and killing of thousands of railroad men each month and then attempt to absolve itself and the employers from further responsibility by enacting a law that is said to compensate this awful slaughter of human beings and "charge it to the consumer."'

"13. The statistics show that the number of people killed and wounded by the railroads in this country is twenty times as many in proportion as those occurring on railroads in Europe. If this act is passed, and the compensation for death and injury caused by the negligence of railroad companies is shifted to the traveling public and shippers, as is proposed, by increasing rates, and the cost of litigation is to be shifted, as is also proposed, to the United States Treasury, it is easy to foretell that the increase in negligence in the operation of railroads and in the number of employees killed and wounded thereby will be phenomenal.

"14. The so-called 'relief departments,' by which on a few railroads employees are compelled against their will to raise a fund out of their own wages out of which compensation is paid for those killed and wounded by the negligence of the corporations, is bad enough in all conscience, but this proposed bill is wickedly ingenious." (Raleigh News and Observer, Mar. 7, 1912.)

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The document which has just been read was read before the Judiciary Committee of the House on March 26, and at that time Mr. W. G. Lee, who is president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, representing, as I recall, over a hundred thousand men in the United States, made a report. It is contained in the same document. I ask that the Secretary may continue the reading and to read that in connection with what has been read.

Mr. OVERMAN. It follows right along.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It follows right along.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested:

The Secretary read as follows:

[By W. G. Lee, president Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.]

In appearing before you I take the same position in reference to my opinion on the proposed compensation act as I did when I appeared before the commission appointed to investigate and report its findings and recommendations to the President on the question of employers' liability and workmen's compensation. That is, briefly, to say that, while the railway employees naturally would prefer a greater amount in benefits, still I feel that the men I represent are agreed that the bill meets with their approval and they are more than anxious to have it enacted into law.

I have the very best of reasons for this belief, based on the inability of the Federal liability law (and, so far as they can apply, the State liability laws) to provide benefits for all cases of injury. We know that in a very fair proportion of cases of death and disability the employer is at fault, and in consequence can be made to pay for his fault, but we also know that there are very many instances of death and disability that can not be attributed to the fault of anyone, and in consequence this great number of accidents is unrecompensed. We believe that instead of having a few benefited under the liability laws as they are now enforced, even though the amounts be large in proportion to those allowed by the proposed compensation act, that it is far better to pay every case of accident and relieve the general suffering. Our efforts, therefore, are directed toward the betterment of the many as against what I believe can truthfully be termed the few. There has been some unfair opposition shown against the proposed measure from one part of the country, namely, a few of the South Atlantic States, but I believe I am justified in saying that the inspiration for the opposition comes from lawyers who have gained the most of their living from the prosecution of personal-injury suits, and who see in the proposed compensation law the necessity for their getting into some other kind of business or being forced to ask a good-natured community to contribute to their maintenance.

Under date of March 7, 1912, there appeared in the Raleigh News and Observer a communication against the proposed bill which has been quite extensively distributed through that part of the country I have just mentioned, and which pretended to show the wicked ingeniousness of the proposed law. It was written by a distinguished lawyer of North Carolina, name unknown, who, to quote from the press, "has stood for justice to the employees all these years," and who summed up his objections to the proposed compensation act in several numbered paragraphs, which I will quote and answer, because I take it that this is the composite objection of many other like distinguished attorneys, who feel that the law is wicked and ingenious because it promises to put the ambulance chaser out of business.

Paragraph 1 of the objections reads:

"1. It proposes to take from railroad employees the protection they have secured through State and national legislation in this country by means of 'employers' liability' acts under which a workman who has been injured by the negligence of a common carrier can recover just compensation therefor, whether it results in death or lesser injury."

The objection that the employees have no longer recourse to the liability laws is correct. I believe, however, that there is too much stress placed on the protection to the employee by way of the State liability laws, for, in my opinion, since the approval of the Federal liability act, that is the law under which railway employees coming under the regulation of Congress must seek their redress. The objectionist does not state, however, that the liability laws in which he places so much dependence do not protect the employee unless the employer is absolutely at fault and it can so be proven. A compensation law, to the contrary, pays for every death and disability, regardless of who is at fault.

Objection 2 reads:

"2. It restricts the compensation far below the actual damages sustained, and divides the amount which a jury would award in a lump sum into payments distributed over a varying series of years up to eight years. The highest compensation allowed by the act for wrongful death is $50 per month for eight years, which is equivalent to less than $4,000 cash, and even that is allowed only when the deceased leaves both widow and children."

The first objection is that compensation is restricted below actual damages. I have yet to hear the claim made in defense of the liability laws that they have given full compensation. The payments under the proposed law were so arranged on the advice of the railway labor organizations, officers, and members, who all agreed that it would be far better for the men and their families to distribute the payments over a period of years rather than to place a lump sum in their hands at one time. If the arrangement for the payment of benefits was satisfactory to the employees who carefully considered it, it surely ought not to meet with serious objection from the distinguished attorney. There is no pretense on the part of the law that it fully compensates for disability or death. It might rather be regarded more as an industrial insurance placed against accident. The amounts mentioned by the objecting attorney are not correct, and I do not hesitate to say that he can not even estimate the amount that will be paid on the average to the railway employees. It is an offhand statement based on prejudice and absolutely without reliable information as its basis.

Objection 3 reads:

"3. It proposes to relieve railroad companies, by whose negligence the death or other injury is inflicted, from the cost of such compensation by placing it upon the shippers and the traveling public, for section 31 provides: 'The burden of compensation under this act for personal injuries shall be considered as an element of the cost of transportation and the Interstate Commerce Commission in any proceeding before it affecting rates is directed to recognize and give effect to this policy.' Under the present system the owners of the corporation are interested in avoiding accidents and injuries to employees accruing from negligence because compensation therefor will tend to reduce dividends. But the proposed act, by shifting this burden upon the traveling public and shippers, makes the owners and managers of the railroads immune to any consequences flowing from their negligence. The increase in the number of killed and mangled will be inevitably prompt."

Were it not for complimenting the distinguished attorney with ingeniousness, I might be tempted to say that he has tried to direct public opinion against the bill; but I rather attribute his expressions to his fears that he will lose if the bill becomes a law. There is no business, aside from that of railway operations, that is not permitted to place the entire cost of its operation on the selling price of its product. The objection entertained by our distinguished friend is found in practice in every other business. In fact, I am absolutely certain it applies with particular force to his own. Just where anybody exercising ordinary common sense could hope to find a convincing argument against the proposed measure in the fact that the burden of cost would be divided over the entire public, is not easily seen except that he hopes to create prejudice against the law by calling attention to the fact that the public will have to bear its share of the cost. If he were as fair as he claims to be distinguished, he would follow up his objection by referring to the added cost of operation to every product, which cost must be borne by the ultimate consumer. For instance, if the cost of coal mining is increased the consumer pays an added cost for his coal, as everyone knows. If the price of beef is advanced, the packers tell us that it costs more to get its product to the public, and the public pays the cost. If the cost of railway operation is increased because of legitimate expense, why should it not follow that this cost should be assumed by the public, the same as it is assumed in every other advanced cost in every other business? Our distinguished friend would have the public believe that the railway companies have inexhaustible treasuries from which all expenses can be met without paying the least attention to their revenues. It is nothing more than a cheap argument that rests its case in the hope that it can prejudice public opinion against the bill, but it should not appeal to railway employees who are compelled to pay the increased cost of production for everything else.

Objection 4 reads:

"4. The act further relieves the railroad companies from all expense of litigation which now falls upon them and places it upon the taxpayers, for it provides that the adjustment of losses shall be made by a new set of officials called 'adjusters,' to be paid salaries of $1,800—$3,000 each, in addition to their actual traveling expenses and their subsistence at the rate of $5 per day, all of which shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Just why these corporations should be relieved of the expense of litigation incident to their refusal to pay compensation for injuries accruing by their negligence, and why the cost thereof should be shifted to the United States Treasury, is a secret locked up in the breast of the ingenious corporation counsel, whose fine Italian hand is seen in every line of this proposed statute. These adjusters will cost the public, for salary and expenses, over $6,000 a year each, and their number is not limited by the act."

The distinguished attorney is rather mixed up in his statements in objection 4. His burden of grief appears to be that some one besides himself will adjust claims that are in dispute between the employer and the employee. He can not understand why these adjustments should be made at the expense of the Federal Government. It is not difficult to understand why our distinguished friend is opposed to any plan that will take from him what he rightfully believes is his. The railroad employees believe that the Federal Government quite properly can assume this cost, save the expense to the individual employee, and place it generally on the public where it properly belongs. The fine Italian hand to which he refers is not seen in behalf of the corporations, and no one who knows the subject thoroughly honestly can lay claim to any such idea. The proposition, as I view it, is to protect the man from needless expense to which he is now subject in every case when he attempts to recover a dollar for injuries received in the service. The number of adjusters, according to the proposed bill, will correspond to the judicial districts in the United States, or, I believe, 88 in number, and to take the figures of the compensation commission, in which I have the utmost reliance, the additional cost will not exceed a few million a year. This, applied to individual cases of disability and death, would be an enormous cost, but taking the entire country into consideration this expense is so trivial that even the distinguished lawyer will experience difficulty in making the public believe that it had been imposed upon by an increased per capita tax to this slight extent.

Objection 5 reads:

"5. Unlike the jury, which now decides upon the compensation to be allowed for negligent injuries caused to employees, this compensation is to be awarded by 'adjusters,' in whose selection the employees will have no voice. This crowd of new officeholders are to be selected and appointed by the Federal judges, who, not being elective and holding for life, may not be altogether uninfluenced in the appointment of such adjusters by their acquaintance with the heads of these great transportation companies, by the friendly aid of whom some of the Federal judges have been helped to a seat on the bench. Certainly there is not the same likelihood of adjusters being selected upon the recommendation of the employees."

The writer does not go into the difficulties that are sometimes experienced in securing an award from a judge and jury. He would have us believe that in all instances the jury agrees the employer is at fault, and consequently pays the employee or his family enough to provide for them comfortably the remainder of their days and leave something to their descendants. The facts do not substantiate any such specious argument. Again, the attorney objects because "this crowd of new officeholders are to be selected and appointed by the Federal judges," etc. It seems peculiar as well as inconsistent for the distinguished attorney to have so much confidence in a Federal court judge in a liability case and so little of it in the appointment of an adjuster, but that is part of the business of the distinguished attorney, and can be taken exactly for what it is worth, which to the men is nothing.

So far as influence being used in the appointment of these adjusters by the Federal court, I do not hesitate to say that the railroad employees will have just as much if not more influence than their employers. Public opinion counts for something in these days, and if that fact has not come home to the distinguished attorney, I believe that it has been forcibly impressed upon very many men who occupy positions of public trust, and who will not take the chance of flying in the face of a fair public opinion.

The adjusters are not appointed for life, and they can be removed if their services are not satisfactory. Again, the objection does not show that the proposed law provides for committees between the employers and employees, who have it in their power to settle all questions in controversy, and I have confidence enough in the managements and the men to believe that after the law is once fairly operative that the majority of the railway companies and their men will follow this plan of making settlement.

Another objection to section 5 is that it takes away the right of trial by jury, but does not explain to the employees that there is substituted for this trial by jury certainty of compensation in all cases of death and disability. I do not pretend to say that the amount of compensation provided by the law for all cases will equal the amount awarded by a judge and jury when the employer is at fault. But here comes another thought that the distinguished lawyer has failed to set forth, and it is this: The award secured after suit must be reduced first by the amount due the attorney who prosecuted the suit and also by a reduction through interest allowances on the amount that has been received, because it takes time to bring suit and prosecute it, and when we compare benefits under the liability law and under the proposed compensation law these statements I have made have a very significant bearing on the general result. I believe it is safe to say that when the attorney's fees now collected under the liability laws, together with the interest allowances that properly can be deducted from deferred payments made under the liability law as against the immediate payments under the compensation law are taken into consideration that the differences in the amounts paid will not be so great as our distinguished attorney would have us believe.

Objection 6 reads:

"6. The compensation provided by the act is very complicated as well as minute in providing the different kinds of injuries, but it is uniform in only one respect, that the compensation provided is in every instance very far below what may be a just compensation for the injuries sustained."

The objection herein quoted appears to be one of the few truthful statements made by our distinguished opponent. Judging from what he has already said in his objection to the bill, I take it for granted that the bill to him is very complicated, but I make bold to say that anybody who has sense enough to read well-written English can see just what the compensation provides. To an attorney in a hurry to get his share out of a possible lawsuit the law may appear to be complicated, but to the employee who has plenty of time to figure out what it means the law reads plainly enough. He also gets back to his former statement that compensation is very far below just compensation. I agree in this, but I also believe that it is unwise for the railway employees to attempt the impossible in legal enactment, even though it be done to meet the objections of our opponent.

Objection 7 reads:

"7. While the act does not restrict the amount which the corporations shall pay for able and experienced counsel, it is careful to provide that the compensation for counsel retained for the employee shall be fixed by the adjuster, whose method of appointment has already been noted."

This objection is as plain as if the writer had declared his fears that his personal commissary department was in danger. We take it for granted that the corporation has never given him anything to do, and that the most of his revenues comes from the employee whose interest he has defended so vigorously. He objects to the fairness of the judge in appointing the adjusters, but lauds his wisdom and justice to the skies when making an award, all of which is as consistent as the most of the argument he has offered against the bill. He does not have the fairness or the sense to see that the section protects the employee against the rapacity of the ambulance chaser. This is another wickedly ingenious scheme introduced in the bill which does not meet the approval of a certain class of lawyers.

Objection 8 reads as follows:

"8. The act is also careful to provide that when an employee has been injured or killed neither the cause of action nor the payments due therefor, when determined by the adjuster, shall be assignable. As a further restriction upon the compensation, it is further provided that in calculating wages, the percentage of which shall be the basis of compensation, 26 times the daily wage shall be considered a month's wages, and 'no employee's wages shall be considered more than $100 per month.'"

Just why an attorney who is so deeply wrapped up in the welfare of an employee objects to the protection of the amount due him is not explained in his objection, and I leave it for you to guess. His objection to the method for computing computations is doubtless based on the fact that he did not know the railway employees themselves declared in favor of this plan of computation. The proposed compensation law is a give-and-take proposition. It adds to the wages of the man who does not work and takes from the amounts earned by the man who is exceptionally fortunate when it sees to it that the man who makes no wages in every instance receives the maximum amount provided by the law.

Objection 9 reads:

"9. The act is indeed unconstitutional, in that it proposes to deprive the employees of common carriers of the right of trial by jury, which is guaranteed by the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, 'in all cases where the amount in controversy shall exceed $20.'

"It is true the act provides for a jury trial if exceptions are filed to the report of the adjuster and a written demand for a jury, but this is practically nullified by a provision that 'the findings of the adjuster shall be received as prima facie evidence in such trial before the jury; that the court may submit special interrogatories and that the trial by jury is waived if this demand for a jury is not made within five days after the adjuster files his report.' Of this filing, the employee, who will often be distant from the court, may fail to be apprised."

If the distinguished lawyer will read the proposed act and is able to understand it, his objections to the unconstitutionality will be set aside.

Paragraph 10 sums up thus:

"To sum up, the act takes from the employees the protection of the present employers' liability act; it restricts compensation far below a just compensation and divides the payment over a series of years; it relieves the railroad company of the burden of all compensation and places it up the shippers and traveling public. The act relieves the companies not only from payment of all court costs, providing for adjusters who are to be paid out of the Treasury; it provides for the selection of these adjusters in a method which is likely to secure appointees more favorable to the corporations than to the employees; the method of compensation is complicated; it restricts the employee, but not the employer, in the selection of counsel, and deprives them of their constitutional right, guaranteed to all citizens, of a trial by jury."

The whole proposition is based on an attempt to confuse the real purpose of the law by pointing out its pretended injustices and impossibilities. The fact of the matter is that every careful lawyer knows that recovery can not be made twice for the same damage, nor do we believe the courts will permit the employee to have two methods of recovery while denying the same right to the employer. I have answered his statements made in reference to placing the burden on the public, and I do not think it necessary to go over the ground again, nor do his further arguments need repeated attention, because I think I have answered them in their turn.

Paragraph 11 reads:

"11. All this is done upon the pretext that lawyers who represent employees in such cases are 'ambulance chasers,' and that this act will decrease the volume of litigation. It may do so, though it has not had that effect in other countries. But if it has that effect here, it will be by depriving the employees of just remedies and by adding enormously to the advantages already enjoyed by these great combinations of capital in their contests with crippled employees or with destitute wife and children, when the employee has been taken from them by death caused by the negligence of the corporation. In free Switzerland every attempt to introduce this proposed 'compensation act' has been defeated, and that country enjoys the broadest and most liberal 'employers' liability act.'"

The volume of litigation naturally will be decreased, because there are specific payments provided by the bill for a certain number of injuries that naturally will reduce the question of adjusting the extent of the injury, because it is apparent there will be controversy over injuries the extent of which is not apparent, but there is every reason to believe that precedents once established there will be no further cause for any great degree of difference between the employers and the employees.

The distinguished attorney said: "In free Switzerland every attempt to introduce this proposed compensation law has been defeated, and that country enjoys the broadest and most liberal employers' liability act."

Our friend is again incorrect. The fact is that the Swiss employers' liability law has been repealed and a workmen's compensation law substituted for it after submission to a referendum vote of the Swiss citizenship. But in his mistake, or willful misstatement, he is in full accord with the majority of objections he raised against the proposed law. Switzerland discarded her liberal employers' liability law, and admitted in so doing that many deserving employees could not be recompensed under it, and substituted for it a compensation law that benefits every workman.

Paragraph 12 reads:

"12. In the language of Mr. Carter, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, 'Congress should devote its legislative energy, first to the prevention of deaths and other injuries to railroad employees, by broadening the "safety-appliance" laws and the "employers' liability" laws, and then, when it exhausts its authority and capacity in that direction, enact laws for the compensation of those whose death from injuries were not preventable. Congress should not now accept as inevitable the mangling and killing of thousands of railroad men each month, and then attempt to absolve itself and the employers from further responsibility by enacting a law that is said to compensate this awful slaughter of human beings and "charge it to the consumer."'"

With all deference to the opinion of Mr. Carter, I must call the attention of this committee to the fact that all safety appliances in use to-day are the result of legislation and not of the voluntary act of any of the companies, and I can not believe that when the railway companies are forced to pay for the death and disability of every employee that it will have the effect of making them less careful of their employees. If railway companies could go to the public as other businesses can go, and arbitrarily fix the price of transportation, there might be more reason to take this question of increased cost to the public seriously. But when we know how extremely difficult it is for the railway companies to secure an advance in railway rates we know that the railway companies will have to make good cause before they can secure any concessions from the Interstate Commerce Commission. And, again, to get back to the bottom of the operation of this proposed law, every member of your committee knows that it will be several years before the companies will have to pay what they are now paying, for the reason that payments are going to accumulate, and the companies are not going to pay lump sums as they do now, so that we can safely say that it will be at least five years before the accumulated costs to the companies will equal what they are paying now. This fact appears to have been overlooked by our distinguished opponent in his hurry to get before the railway employees to show them the wickedness and ingenlousness of the proposed law.

Paragraph 13 reads:

"13. The statistics show that the number of people killed and wounded by the railroads in this country is 20 times as many in proportion as those occurring on railroads in Europe. If this act is passed and the compensation for death and injury caused by the negligence of railroad companies is shifted to the traveling public and shippers, as is proposed, by increasing rates, and the cost of litigation is to be shifted, as is also proposed, to the United States Treasury, it is easy to foretell that the increase in negligence in the operation of railroads and in the number of employees killed and wounded thereby will be phenomenal."

This is further quoted from Mr. Carter's statements to the compensation commission in Chicago, and I think these statements have been very successfully refuted by Mr. Arthur Holder, representing the American Federation of Labor, who stated to the commission at Washington that the number of accidents had decreased, that greater care was exercised by the employer, and that litigation had decreased to the minimum in England in the past two years.

These statements were corroborated by Mr. Herman Wills, assistant grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who made a personal study of conditions abroad during the fall of 1911 and who came back to us very much impressed with the operation of the English compensation law and this plan in general. His evidence, like that of Mr. Holder, was secured first hand through the organizations of employees. There was not a single objection from them concerning the operation of the law, except that its benefits should be higher. This is a natural objection, as we all know. But so far as the extra care against accidents, the adoption of safety appliances, and the decrease in litigation are concerned the employees of Great Britain unanimously declare that these very excellent results have followed the operation of the law.

We find in our own country that since compensation has been brought forward with a fair chance of a compensation law being enacted that the railway companies have awakened to the conditions under which very much of their work is being performed, and they are taking steps to reduce their casualty records to the lowest possible degree. The largest systems in the country to-day have taken up the question of safety through the appointment of safety committees, who are authorized to point out all of the dangers that attend railway work and are invited to suggest improved methods of safety; and the advice given to the men by those in charge of operation not to sacrifice their lives and limbs for the sake of getting their work done in a hurry is another evidence that the railway companies do not believe that they can reach into the public purse without good reason and reimburse themselves for the added costs that will be necessary because all of the men in the service are to be paid if they are killed or injured.

This lawyer also continually harps on the charge to the consumer. In all fairness, to whom would he charge it? Where does any business get its returns except from the consumer? Even the poor devil who places his case in the hands of an ambulance chaser places him in a position to live off his own returns, in which case the ambulance chaser is the ultimate consumer, and, generally speaking, a very large one in proportion to the amount received. This lawyer pretends to have a tremendous interest in protecting the public, and all through his objections it will be found that his real interest is more in the direction of protecting his own business than it is in protecting the employee.

The lawyer who said the proposed bill is wickedly ingenious might, in full accord with his conscience, have added "so far as we ambulance chasers are concerned." It is natural to look for objection of this kind from men whose principal source of revenue is in jeopardy. The proposed compensation law guarantees to the family of every killed employee a certain revenue for a certain time, and it guarantees the money without giving half of it to any ambulance-chasing attorney. It guarantees to every disabled employee a specific amount for certain injuries and leaves the determination of other amounts to be paid on their apparent effects as compared to other injuries received. There is no law on earth that could go the limit and cover every imaginable accident and its results and give satisfaction. The law, like every other law, will have to be enacted, its principles accepted as correct by the United States Supreme Court; and after it is applied its deficiencies, inaccuracies, and injustices can then be adjusted by amendment.

I can say that a great majority of the members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen are in accord with the principles of the law. They have expressed their desire for it at their convention, and have gone on record in favor of certainty of benefits to take the place of uncertainty of litigation. We believe in doing everything for the benefit of the greatest number, and for this reason we do not point to the high verdicts that are received in exceptional cases as a basis for a compensation law. We realize the impossibility of paying the amount awarded by the exceptional verdict where the employer is absolutely at fault in all cases of injury or death, whether caused by the fault of the employer or the fault of the employee. In behalf of my organization I trust that your committee will see fit to report the bill to your respective assemblies as it has come to you from the compensation commission. I subscribe to the language of the commission in submitting its report to the President, that while this proposed law is not, perhaps, the most perfect measure which could be devised, nor the last word which can be said upon the subject, it is the result of careful investigation and the best thought of the commission, and constitutes a step in the direction of a just, reasonable, and practicable solution of the problem with which it deals. I regard it as desirable constructive legislation, to take the place of destructive litigation, and again express the hope that it may be reported by your committee to both Houses of the Congress and that it may pass at this session.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, just one word.

In view of the references which have been made to the writer of the article which has been put in the RECORD, I wish to repeat that I am informed the chief justice of North Carolina wrote the article. He has been on the supreme court bench of North Carolina for 20 years. He has been chief justice of the State more than 10 years. He is recognized by all lawyers who are familiar with the reports of that State as one of the greatest judges upon the bench of any State in the Union.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, let me suggest a word in this connection also. I do not know the gentleman who wrote the statement. I do know Mr. Lee very well. Mr. Lee is at the head of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. He has been with this proposed legislation since its inception. He is familiar with every detail of the bill. He has the interests of these various railroad trainmen at heart, and I venture to say that he knows more about what is for the practical benefit of the railroad men of this country than any judge on the bench in North Carolina or elsewhere.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not desire to discuss the merits of the men or the familiarity of the chief justice with the subject of railroads; I wished to state the character of the judge who was the author of the article.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have several communications bearing on the pending bill, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without being read.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARKANSAS STATE LEGISLATIVE BOARD,
BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
Little Rock, Ark., April 23, 1912.

To Hon. JEFF DAVIS and Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senators, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: The railway firemen and enginemen of this State desire to appeal to you, through me as their chairman, asking that you kindly use your influence in the postponement of Senate bill No. 5382. This bill, as you know, has for its purpose the repeal of the present employers' liability law.

I hope you will make every effort within your power in protecting our people against such an unreasonable measure, and that May 2 will see the measure postponed until the next session of Congress, when I hope it will meet with defeat.

It is wholly unnecessary for me to go into the so-called merits of this measure, knowing full well your ability to look into the distant danger for which this measure is gotten up. Again I ask you to free our good people from the damage that would be sure to follow the enactment of such a law.

Thanking you in advance and hoping for your success, I am,
Very respectfully, yours,
A. N. DE MERS, Chairman.

PARAGOULD, ARK., April 9, 1912.

Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen at Wynee and throughout Arkansas will appreciate your support of the Federal workmen's compensation bill.

P. N. WOOD, Treasurer.
J. A. LOONEY, President.

FORT SMITH, ARK., April 8, 1912.

Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at this point earnestly desire your support for passage of Senate bill 5382.

E. C. SPERRY, Secretary.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS,
SUBDIVISION NO. 182. ROBERT HERRIOTT, C. E. W. F. WILSON, F. A. E.
Little Rock, Ark., April 1, 1912.

Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You are urged and earnestly requested by the engineers of the State of Arkansas to use your influence and support in getting Senate bill No. 5382, introduced by Senator SUTHERLAND, to pass the Senate, and would ask that you hand this letter to the Representatives in the House so they will know that we would thank them for their support. Thanking one and all for their support in advance,

I am, yours, very respectfully,

J. E. MILLS,
Locomotive Engineer and Secretary Legislative Board,
No. 912 North Street.

CONGRESS HALL HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., March 20, 1912.

Hon. JAMES P. CLARKE.

DEAR SENATOR: There is now pending in the Senate S. 5382 and in the House H. R. 20487, known as "A bill to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death to employees of common carriers by railroads engaged in interstate and foreign commerce or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

This bill is the result of deliberation by a commission appointed under joint resolution for the purpose of consideration of this subject.

The organizations I am representing, namely, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Order of Railway Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, prepared and were active in aiding the passage of a resolution providing for the appointment of the commission who has made a report and recommended this bill. Through our influence one of our members was appointed a member of that commission.

The chief executives of the organizations I am representing, as well as myself, have given every phase of this question careful consideration, having attended the hearings, and have officially put ourselves and our organizations on record in favor of the pending bill.

Our members will be greatly benefited by the passage of this measure, and we earnestly desire your support of this legislation.

It is possible that some individual members of our organizations, in some localities, may be misled by false and misleading statements that have been circulated. These come, we think, from those who are personally interested in bringing damage suits, as it is a well-known fact that from 30 to 50 per cent of the amounts now recovered from railroads in damage suits is paid to claim attorneys.

The report of the commission, of which you have a copy, shows that the railroad employees will receive benefits of $15,000,000 per annum under the proposed legislation, while under the present law they receive only $10,085,000 per annum less the amount that goes to their attorneys; the $15,000,000, as can be seen from the report, will be paid without detriment to the railways.

The legislation will have a tendency to eliminate a great cause of friction between employer and employee, and is recognized by those who have given it careful consideration to be a fair and just measure.

I wish to most respectfully ask that you give this matter your careful consideration, and will be pleased if you will let me know your views on the subject.

I am, with respect, very truly, yours,

H. E. WILLS,
Joint National Legislative Representative
B. of L. E., O. R. C., B. of R. T.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I think I had the floor when the reading began. My purpose was to call up the motion I had made to postpone, and to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with certain instructions. That takes precedence under the rules of a motion to amend the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion had not been made. The Senator will now make it. The Senator gave notice the other day that he intended to make it when the matter came up, the Chair understands.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to make a point of order against that motion, that it is in conflict with the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to make the motion first.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thought the Senator had made it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply got leave to make the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator had the leave, and was about to make the motion.

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

The other day, when this motion to recommit was presented by myself, I was not unmindful of the unanimous-consent agreement; and thinking that possibly it might be held to be in derogation of the unanimous-consent agreement, I prepared certain amendments, which are substantially those contained in the motion to recommit.

I call the attention of the Chair to the fact, however, that to my mind it is not clear that a motion to recommit is in violation of the agreement. It does not say "shall vote upon amendments and the bill until finally disposed of," but it says "that a vote will be taken upon any amendments that may be pending or offered, and upon the bill itself to its disposition," with the proviso which was suggested by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], "that a motion shall be in order to postpone to a day certain the further consideration of the bill."

In view of the intimation of the Chair, though, this morning, that he thought the motion as originally prepared by me was in derogation of this unanimous-consent agreement, and not desiring to press it against the intimation of the Chair or that of any Senator, but desiring, on the contrary, to live up to the consent agreement, I have modified the motion in the way I suggested, which I will send to the desk to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed order as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is ordered, That consideration of S. 5382, "to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," be, and is, postponed until December 2, 1912, and in the meantime it is recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, and said committee is instructed to redraft the bill so as to conform to the following:

1. That it be made optional and cumulative instead of exclusive.
2. That the maximum and minimum schedule of compensation be increased 50 per cent over that proposed in the bill.
3. That the provisions in paragraph 4, section 14, to the effect that the findings of the adjuster shall be received as prima facie evidence of the facts therein and that the court may submit special interrogatories to the jury looking to a special verdict, be stricken out.
4. Omit the requirement in section 1 that to justify recovery the accident must have arisen "out of and in the course of his employment" and insert in lieu thereof the provision of section 1 of the act of Congress of 1908, that the liability shall accrue to "any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator offers that motion now?

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer that motion to postpone and recommit at this time.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think the unanimous-consent agreement as expressed here on the Calendar of Business means exactly what occurred. It says "that a motion shall be in order to postpone to a day certain the further consideration of the bill." Now, I will read to the Chair the colloquy that occurred, which is found on page 4980 of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has the RECORD before him.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have been absent from the Chamber and I do not know whether this has been gone over or if the Chair has ruled on it:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair used the term "final disposition" without the Senator from Utah having used it.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason I raised the point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah may have had in mind a disposition which should not be final.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason I raised the point.

* * * * * * *

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Utah will put it in that form, I think it will be agreed to.

As the Vice President had used the word "final," I thought I would raise the question, so that I would not be precluded from making a motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would imagine that with the word "final" omitted, simply leaving it "the disposition of the bill," a postponement of action thereon until next December or any other time would be a disposal of it.

So I inquire now, if this motion should prevail, whether a motion to postpone, say, to the 21st of May, would be in order under that unanimous-consent agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the motion proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is not in order under the unanimous-consent agreement in the form in which it was made. The impression of the Chair is that it is perfectly clear by the proviso agreed to by the Senate and the colloquy at the time it was agreed to that it was the contemplation of the Senate to permit alone a motion to postpone until next December, because succeeding the matter in the RECORD which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has read is the following:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Add as a proviso to the request, then, as heretofore stated by the Chair, the words "Provided, That a motion shall be in order to either definitely or indefinitely postpone the further consideration of the bill."

Mr. WILLIAMS. To postpone it to a definite day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To postpone to a definite day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To postpone to a definite day further action thereon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

The Chair then put the question in that form to the Senate, and in that form it was agreed to. So that the one motion now in order, it seems to the Chair, is to postpone to a definite day.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, on the bottom of page 4980 the Senator from Utah, in asking unanimous consent, said this:

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will include in my request for unanimous consent the further provision that it shall be subject to the right to move to postpone the further consideration of the bill to a day certain.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is only for one certain day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; and that, it seems to the Chair, is the one motion which is now in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then I make the motion that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until December 2, 1912.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is certainly in order. The Senator from Texas moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the 2d day of December next.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Sentors answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	Myers	Shively
Bacon	Davis	Nelson	Simmons
Borah	Dillingham	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Bourne	du Pont	Nixon	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Fall	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family. I make this announcement, and desire to let it stand for the day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent on business of the Senate. I should like to have this announcement stand for all votes to-day.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent. As I understand, he is paired with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Senate by important business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. My colleague [Mr. GARDNER] is necessarily detained from the Senate on business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, for the present I withdraw the motion to postpone the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas withdraws his motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the bill may be now read for committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the bill for the presentation of committee amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to present, for the information of the Senate and to have read, the amendments which I intend to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done at the present time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What was the request, Mr. President? I did not hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request was to have the amendments which the Senator from Georgia purposes hereafter to offer now read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And, Mr. President, many amendments which I desire to offer are amendments to strike out certain sections of the bill. As an amendment to strike out a particular section is read I should be glad to have the section of the bill read immediately thereafter, so that it will be seen to what the amendment applies.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I suggest that the orderly way to proceed is to have the bill first read for committee amendments, and I ask that that be done. I have no objection to the amendments suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] being read, but I ask that their reading be postponed until after the bill is perfected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Utah, then, the Secretary will first read the bill for committee amendments.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to submit some remarks on the bill, and have arisen for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to submit them before the bill is read?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir; I desire to submit them now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this bill directly affects the legal rights of 1,650,000 men. It indirectly affects the rights of their families, which, averaged at four, raises the total number to nearly 9,000,000 people. It affects in a still more indirect way every man, woman, and child in the United States. It proposes to wipe out all of the rights reserved to railway employees and their heirs at common law, all of the rights reserved to them by the statutes of the various States, and all of the rights conferred upon them and reserved to them by the acts of Congress. It substitutes for the common law, for State statutes—some of which have existed for years, some of which have been newly enacted—and for the Federal liability acts enacted in 1908 and 1910 this bill, which was brought into the Senate about 30 days ago. It has been discussed principally to empty benches by two or three Senators. Their remarks were worthy of a hearing by the Senate and by the country, but they were treated with an indifference exceptional even in the Senate.

Before the Senate of the United States passes a bill so radical and revolutionary in its character as the one here proposed it would seem that earnest thought and study should be given to it and that an opportunity ought to be afforded for discussion of the measure by the men who are directly affected by it. It is true, Mr. President, that there appeared before the commission which was created under the act of Congress a few men representing in their official capacity certain railway organizations in the country; but it is perhaps safe to say that not to exceed a score of men who are intimately concerned with the affairs of railway organizations have been before the commission. The bill, therefore, lacks the direct consideration of the men who are to be affected.

I challenge the Senate's attention to the further fact that back of the men who belong to these railway organizations stands an army of women and of children, who, if they are to have protection at all, must receive it at the hands of the lawmakers; and that, therefore, the acts we are about to engage in at this session of the Senate are fraught with the gravest of responsibilities.

In my humble judgment, every man who votes for this measure will regret it most seriously before the lapse of 12 months. I charge upon the conscience of the Members of the Senate the solemn duty before they adopt this revolutionary act, that overturns the common law, annuls the statute laws of the States, and repeals the laws of Congress, that they shall give to the bill most careful attention and reading; I express the doubt now with regret—but, nevertheless, I do express it—that this bill has not even been read by a majority of the Members of the Senate, much less have they read the long report of the commission and the still longer report of the evidence that was taken before the commission.

I challenge attention to another fact, that there is not, to my knowledge, even one Senator who has at any time or in any manner or form received or heard of a protest against this bill from a single railway corporation in the United States. If such a protest has been received, I pause now that the fact may be made known. Your silence confirms my opinion. Yes, sir; here is a bill which, we are told, compels the railway companies to expend for personal injuries inflicted upon their employees $5,000,000 annually over and above the amount they are now required to pay. When did it ever happen in the history of the United States, sir, that any legislation proposing to impose burdens of $5,000,000 upon the railways of the United States annually has been received with a silent acquiescence such as is now manifested? Truly the railway officials are suffering from intellectual paralysis or they have suddenly been converted to the creed of the Altruist or else they know the bill will save them money and that it was drawn in their interest.

Upon the other hand, to state this matter fairly, large numbers of telegrams and letters have been received by nearly every Senator of the body—I doubt not by all of them—but I challenge your thought to this: Nearly all those telegrams began to flood the Senate on about the same day, early in the month of April. They continued for four or five days, coming with great regularity and with considerable similarity of language, and then they practically ceased, and the majority of the later telegrams which have come and been read have implored Congress to postpone action upon this bill or to defeat it.

I take it that I am entirely within the facts when I assume that when this legislation was brought before Congress word was sent to the various organizations that here was a splendid measure, beneficial to them, and that the great principle of compensation was about to be recognized; and, without any intimate knowledge regarding the terms of this bill, these organizations acted and passed their resolutions, but that, some light having later come to them, they are beginning to wake up and to understand what is hidden within the terms of the bill. I state it as my judgment, for whatever my judgment may be worth, that if this measure is postponed for three months there will arise against it from the labor organizations themselves such a storm as will accomplish its inglorious defeat. I denounce it to-day as the most vicious piece of legislation introduced in Congress in 20 years; and when I make that statement I do not make it in any light or frivolous manner, but as my deliberate judgment.

Sir, after many, many years of battle, persistent, almost heroic, the laboring men of the world have been gradually coming into their rights. I need not rehearse or trace the history of the law. All men, in this body, at least, know that there was a time when the man injured in an employment was without any substantial remedy; we know that as time elapsed and men became more decent the law became more humane, but that until the act of Congress of 1908 railway companies in many cases were able to shield themselves from liability behind three defenses: First, that the act was the result of the negligence of a fellow servant, and that therefore no liability attached to the master; second, that the accident was the result of the risks naturally incident to the business, and that the employee had assumed the risk; and, third, that the man suing had himself been guilty of negligence which in some degree, however slight, had contributed to the injury. Every lawyer who has ever defended a railroad company in a personal-injury suit has depended on those grounds, and every lawyer who has had the temerity and been guilty of the awful crime of suing a railroad company for some poor fellow mangled, maimed, and disfigured for life in a railway accident has had to meet one or all of these defenses.

So, Mr. President, after a contest lasting for a half century or more, those defenses were wiped out by Congress in the act of 1908. For the first time the rule of law was changed, so that when an employee was injured he could recover if the injury was contributed to by any negligence on the part of his employer, instead of being defeated, as the old rule was, if his act had contributed to the injury in the slightest degree.

This law having been enacted, it remained to pass one other law in order to give it potentiality and force, and that was to provide a forum where injured employees could obtain a fair trial before jurymen summoned from the vicinage in which they lived. So, by the act of 1910 it was provided that the suit could be brought in a State court and that it could not be removed by the railway company from that court to a Federal court. Then, for the first time, railway employees were armed with the ability to recover in every case save two; (1) where the injury was the result solely of their own negligence, and (2) where the injury resulted from an accident pure and simple. These acts were challenged both as to their scope and constitutionality, and it was only on the 15th day of last January they received the final approval of the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, having reached that point of perfection, where for the first time the rights of these men were secure and where everything was covered except mere naked accidents (accidents in no way contributed to by any negligent act of omission or commission on the part of the company), we find this state of facts.

In May, 1910, various claim agents of the railway companies began to consider ways and means to avoid the force and effect of these statutes. I hold in my hand, through the courtesy of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the only copy that I have ever been able to find of the minutes of the Association of Railway Claim Agents at their twenty-first annual meeting, held at the Hotel Patten, in the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., May 25, 26, and 27, 1910, and I challenge attention to some of the language which I shall read which was used at this meeting. I challenge attention to it because it clearly proves that legislation of the character provided in this particular bill now under discussion was advocated by these claim agents, and that if this bill does not actually owe its inception to that meeting of claim agents at least they there made fallow the ground.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator reads that I think we ought to have a quorum. I therefore suggest the want of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Clarke, Ark.	Guggenheim	Lodge
Bacon	Crane	Heyburn	McCumber
Bourne	Culberson	Hitchcock	McLean
Brown	Davis	Johnson, Me.	Martine, N. J.
Bryan	du Pont	Johnston, Ala.	Myers
Chamberlain	Foster	Jones	Newlands
Chilton	Gallinger	Kern	Nixon
Clark, Wyo.	Gore	Lea	O'Gorman
Oliver	Poindexter	Shively	Stone
Overman	Pomerene	Simmons	Sutherland
Owen	Rayner	Smith, Ariz.	Swanson
Page	Reed	Smith, Ga.	Thornton
Paynter	Richardson	Smith, S. C.	Tillman
Penrose	Root	Smoot	Warren
Perkins	Sanders	Stephenson	Williams

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the statement has been made to me that I omitted to say that the fellow-servant defense had been also wiped out. I think I included it in my statement. But I ought to say now, by way of further word preliminary, that in State after State the defenses which the companies have relied upon have been in process of abolition for many years, and that the act of the Federal Government in finally abolishing them and in giving the employee the right to begin and keep his case in the State courts produced a condition which challenged the careful and prayerful thought of these claim agents; that is, assuming that claim agents sometimes pray.

In this report of the claim agents' meeting I find that the following was the fifth topic which they took up for consideration:

Topic No. 5.—(a) What effect would the passage by Congress of compensation legislation for injured employees have upon the scope of the work of the claim department as now organized?

(b) Should such legislation be enacted, would not the claim departments of the carriers be the proper forums to handle the investigations of the accidents and to make the payments to the parties entitled?

There was also topic 2, which read as follows:

Topic No. 2.—(a) Does not the tendency of modern legislation, both Federal and State, in curtailing the defenses heretofore available to the carriers, demand that the claim departments should secure relatively a larger proportion of settlements than formerly rather than rely upon the hazards of a trial in the courts?

(b) Do not the existing conditions, caused by recent legislation, tend to enlarge the scope of the work of the claim departments and increase their efficiency for practical results?

Now, at this meeting of claim agents 91 railways or systems were represented, with an aggregate of over 200,000 miles of road. Among other companies present was the New York Central Railway. It was represented by Mr. F. V. Whiting.

Upon the commission that framed this bill sat W. C. Browne, president of the New York Central Railway, and when he was not present he was represented, not on the committee but before the committee, constantly by this same Mr. F. V. Whiting, the claim agent of the road; and Mr. F. V. Whiting, the claim agent of that road, was an active and interesting figure in the meeting of the claim agents, which is recorded in this book I hold in my hand. I shall have to weary the Senate a little—those who remain to listen—and to encumber the RECORD a little bit for the benefit of those who do not remain to listen, in order to challenge attention to these proceedings.

This same Mr. Whiting made a speech upon the topic "Compensation and Compensation Acts." He made it before this meeting of claim agents, and it is recorded there at pages 52 and succeeding pages. I shall not take the time to read all. There was a good deal of preliminary statement, but we finally get down to this statement by Whiting:

We have gradually seen the defense of "fellow servant" narrowed so far as corporations are concerned and broadened in its application to workmen until in some States, especially with reference to the hazardous part of the railway business, not a vestige remains. Likewise, the defense of "assumed risk" has been partially taken away, and we are now testing a Federal law which, to a great extent, abolishes the doctrine of contributory negligence.

A little later in his speech he discusses the various workmen's compensation acts, and finally he makes his suggestions as to the kind of workmen's compensation acts we should have. I challenge your thought to this, because right here from the lips of this claim agent, made in the secret meeting of the claim agents, is to be found the skeleton of this bill which they are now seeking to impose upon the Senate of the United States.

Second. It seems to me that compensation to a certain extent should be based upon the number and age of the next of kin—

You will find that in this bill—

i. e., greater compensation should be paid where deceased leaves a widow and several children than where he leaves but a widow. This can be accomplished by increasing the maximum rate on a percentage basis for each child.

You will find that at one place in the bill.

Fourth. All payments should, when possible, be based on previous average earnings and not on daily rates.

You find that in this bill; but the commission improved on the claim agent's scheme and "went him one better" by providing that no man's average wages should ever be considered more than $100 per month, even though his actual earnings were greatly in excess of that amount.

Fifth. We should follow the advice of economic writers to the effect that when compensation is provided rights to recover damages should be eliminated.

You find that in this bill.

And it is the spinal column of the bill—if the bill can be said to have a spinal column. All right to recover damages at law is abrogated, just as recommended by these claim agents in this claim agents' secret meeting.

Then, I find this further statement:

In those States where the liability of the master has been greatly enhanced, where verdicts are beyond all reason, we would welcome reasonable legislation if it brings definiteness and certainty and excludes the chances and uncertainty of the present.

Thus in this convention of claim agents we find them welcoming the very kind of legislation proposed in this bill upon the specific ground that their old common-law defenses have been wiped out.

There were four or five members of the convention who addressed their brother claim agents. All of them agreed upon the desirability of substituting a compensation law for the present liability law. Finally I find this:

Mr. Wilson, of the Lackawanna, brought up the question of the compensation acts, suggesting that the Chair appoint a committee to go into the question thoroughly. Mr. Wilson stated that he considered this perhaps the most important question confronting the railroads today, and he felt that it was a matter which the association ought to take up and work out some practical suggestions. He said, further, that this was a work which would add dignity to the association and be appreciated by the railroad managers and also by any fair-minded commission appointed by the Government or by different States.

Mr. Wilson then made a motion that the Chair appoint a committee of five to investigate this subject and to report at the Montreal meeting. This motion was seconded, and after some discussion was carried. A motion was also made and carried that the secretary and treasurer be instructed to appropriate $150 or $200 to the use of this special committee for their legitimate and reasonable expenses.

The following was the committee named:

Special committee on compensation acts: F. V. Whiting, chairman, New York Central; W. C. Wilson, Lackawanna; G. E. McCaughan, Rock Island; R. C. Richards, Chicago & North Western Railway Co.; C. S. Pierce, Boston & Maine.

So here is the evidence that these claim agents recognized that modern legislation, and especially the acts of Congress, had so greatly increased the chances of an injured employee to recover that it had become to the interest of the railway companies to secure their repeal and the substitution of a compensation act. They knew that the same would be appreciated. It would "increase our dignity" and "render us of greater service to our employers," so they appointed a committee to take up this subject, and provided for the expenses of the committee.

Here, then, is the statement of Mr. Whiting himself, and there are concurring statements of a number of others of these claim agents, that a bill of this kind is a thing the railroads desire, because of the acts of Congress and in those States where laws similar to the Federal acts have been passed.

Now, Mr. President, let us see what they did. I come to the next annual meeting, and here again is a copy of the minutes of the Association of Railway Claim Agents, the same association, held in the succeeding year, May 24 to 26, 1911, at the Hotel Windsor, Montreal, Canada. I wish that these minutes might all be printed as public documents, if this bill goes over, and be sent to the various railway men's organizations.

You will recall that a committee was appointed at the preceding meeting to secure the passage of compensation acts.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. I had the misfortune not to hear the Senator when he first began his address. Is he reading from the minutes of a convention held by the Claim Agents' Association?

Mr. REED. I am. I have read from the minutes of the Association of Railway Claim Agents at their twenty-first annual meeting held in Chattanooga, Tenn., May 25 to 27, inclusive, 1910. At that meeting, I will say for the information of the Senator, a committee known as the committee on compensation acts was appointed, and I am now about to read from the report of the succeeding meeting held on the 24th to the 26th of May, 1911, and I propose to read the special committee's report.

Mr. SHIVELY. What I want to know is, Are these annual conventions?

Mr. REED. Yes; they are annual conventions of railway claim agents.

Mr. SHIVELY. They are held by representatives of these organizations, and the Senator is reading from the minutes of one of those annual conventions?

Mr. REED. I am; and these pamphlets are, of course, open for further examination by any Senator.

I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana further to the fact that a Mr. Whiting was the man who made a speech at the previous meeting in favor of this kind of legislation, and he was appointed chairman of the committee.

Now, here is Mr. Whiting's report, together with his fellow members'. Somebody asks here—I hear the voice, although I do not recognize it; some Senator—who is Mr. Whiting? I answer that Mr. Whiting was the claim agent of the New York Central Railway; and that one of the members of the commission which framed the bill we are now considering was the president of the New York Central Railway, and when he was not present on the commission Mr. Whiting sat in the room very steadfastly, very consistently, very attentively, and saw to it that no harm was done during the absence of his chief.

I read from the minutes:

The committee on special compensation acts then presented its report, read by Mr. F. V. Whiting (New York Central Lines):

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON COMPENSATION.

During the past three years, at least, public thought has to a great extent been directed toward the question of compensating workmen injured in the course of their employment, not only for accidents caused through fault, but also for accidents arising out of the work, which are called inherent risks of the service. At our last annual meeting, held at Chattanooga, topic 5 of the program was that of "Compensation and compensation acts." It is not the intention of your committee to take up any time in rehearsing the history of this movement, and attention is only called to the paper presented at our last annual meeting, and the discussion thereon, so that those who desire may refresh their recollections by examining the minutes of the last meeting.

Your committee, at one of the several meetings it has held, reached the conclusion, owing to the fact that compensation acts were being considered in many States and that action would probably be taken in some of them during the winter, that the most effective and efficient way in which we could serve our association was to prepare a compensation act, to be used as a foundation for legislation everywhere. The committee felt that all the acts which had been suggested were patterned after the English act or acts drawn since and that, no doubt, if such a scheme were prepared it would be followed to some extent.

The committee therefore acquainted itself with laws which had been passed and with acts which were pending before various legislative bodies. It also gathered material from various State commissions and finally set to work to draft a compensation act. A tentative plan was completed, put in print, and submitted to the heads of the various claim departments of roads constituting the membership of the association, and a meeting was held at La Salle Hotel in Chicago on December 13 and 14, 1910.

Now, I remark by way of parentheses that the heads of the various claim departments are always the lawyers who defend the damage suits, so that the plan referred to in the report was submitted to them. I proceed with the reading:

Two days were spent in discussing the plan, and some slight modifications were adopted. It is strange that with an attendance of about 40 men, representing various lines in the United States and Canada, that there should have been such unanimity of thought and conclusions as we had at that meeting. The consensus of opinion was overwhelmingly in favor of compensation, there being three—possibly four—dissenting votes.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. May I ask the Senator the date of that?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir. It is May 24 to 26, 1911.

Mr. RAYNER. May I furthermore ask the Senator, if I do not interrupt him, at what time was the committee appointed to investigate this matter?

Mr. REED. I can not answer that question without stopping.

Mr. RAYNER. I will not interrupt the Senator. I simply wanted to know the date.

Mr. REED. The first hearing before the commission was May 10, 1911.

Mr. RAYNER. What is the date of the report?

Mr. REED. The date of the last report is May 25, 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Give the date of the first action?

Mr. REED. The date of the first action is a year before that.

Behold, now, these tender-hearted claim agents consorting—their tender, sympathetic souls inspired alone by a compassionate desire to serve injured railroad men by compelling the railways to pay them more money than can be received at law. Who is so foolish as to be thus imposed upon? Yet the claim agents with one voice demanded a compensation act. Were they in favor of it because it would wipe the tears from the eyes of the widow? Did they demand it because it would bring the light of hope to the pain-dulled eyes of some man broken in body and health? Did they support it to the end that the orphan might be preserved from want? Were these the reasons, or was it because they knew if this act could be passed it would save money to the companies they represented? When were their natures and when were their sympathies transformed? In what moment, in what twinkling of an eye, did they change from claim agents to traveling eleemosynary institutions? They were unanimously in favor of this bill that, according to the statements made here, is going to take millions from the railroads. If these claim agents had reported a bill that would have taken millions from their employers, if they had supported such a bill and forwarded such a measure, there is not one of them who does not know he would have been discharged immediately. I am not saying they are better or worse than other men, but I am saying they are no better than the ambulance chaser that has been abused here. I am saying that the disgraceful spectacle of a lawyer soliciting this business has more than its parallel in a spectacle more abhorrent—that is the presence of a claim agent of a railroad standing beside the bed of a man whose wounds are still bleeding, and trying, under those circumstances, to extort a statement from him.

I am saying that bad as is the ambulance chaser there is a creature in this world viler than he, and that is the man who will take advantage of a poor wretch lying stricken upon the railroad track and get a settlement from him before even a physician has arrived. And I am saying that there is a creature viler than he, and that is the president of a railroad who will authorize things of that kind; and if there is anybody viler than all of them, it is a man who would try to put a law upon the statute books that will despoil the widow and rob the orphan of a man who has gone bravely to his death with hand upon the brakes.

But I read on:

The consensus of opinion was overwhelmingly in favor of compensation, there being three (possibly four) dissenting votes. After this meeting the association, through its secretary, had the plan reprinted without showing that it was the work of the association, and the same has been given very general distribution throughout the country.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KERN. Is that last statement shown in the minutes of the proceedings?

Mr. REED. The distinguished Senator from Indiana, known throughout the United States, will oblige me by taking the minutes in his hand, so that out of the mouths of two or more witnesses every word may be established. I know the Senator did not mean to infer that I had misread. He simply meant that he did not know whether I was reading or talking. I am reading, and, lest I should be misunderstood, I will read it again. You will find it on page 44, at the close of the third paragraph of these minutes:

After this meeting the association, through its secretary, had the plan reprinted without showing that it was the work of the association, and the same has been given very general distribution throughout the country.

Why did they not want it known that it was the work of the association? Why these dark-lantern methods? Why this crawling through the shadows? Why this anonymous campaign? Why were these men proceeding secretly, unless the legislation they were promoting was in the interest of the railroads? They understood very well that if the men of this country knew that the bill had originated or was being fathered by the railroads themselves their employees would scan it with a microscope and would discover its iniquities and its injustices. Whenever it is necessary for an association to proceed surreptitiously, whenever it is necessary to send out an anonymous publication, whenever it is necessary to conceal facts, it is time for every honest man to regard its acts with suspicion and to investigate it with care. Such act bears the brand of dishonesty.

But I read on from the point where I paused a moment ago:

We are unable to state what influence this suggested plan has had on legislation, enacted or proposed. No doubt many of the members of the association here present can tell us of instances where the plan has been considered.

Thus these gentlemen, in effect, say, "We have scattered the poison broadcast through the country; we can not as a committee tell just what dog has picked it up; but our intelligent members, coming from various sections of the country, have probably observed and can enumerate the victims."

I do not intend by that illustration to compare these men to dogs, but I do mean to say that this method of scattering ideas in an anonymous, surreptitious way, in order that they may find root in the minds of others, is similar to the act of one who cunningly scatters poison for poor, dumb brutes to pick up, which would be rejected were the hand which scattered it known.

Mr. Whiting made this report, the same Mr. Whiting who was employed by the commission that framed this bill to furnish statistics which the commission regards as so valuable as to warrant their quotation in its report. Mr. Whiting, who while he did not sit on the commission sat with it almost constantly, made the infamous report to the claim agents I have just read. I read further from the same document:

We may state, however, that the act has been introduced in the Iowa Legislature verbatim—

They were doing very well in Iowa. I wonder who represented them in the Legislature of Iowa. I wonder what crooked fellow of that State or what foolish fellow was led to introduce, unbranded as it was, this legislative Maverick.

We may state, however, that the act has been introduced in the Iowa Legislature verbatim; that a voluntary compensation scheme has been passed in New Jersey, taking effect on July 4 next (that great day of liberty—

I wonder if this was irony, or satire, or just what it was intended to be, but here is the parenthesis—taking effect on July 4 next (that great day of liberty, which was evidently selected as being the most appropriate day of the year on which the act should be put into effect).

Liberty for whom? Liberty for the down-trodden workingman, as the Irishman would say? Was it liberty for the employee or liberty for these concerns that do not want to stand beneath the responsibilities fixed upon them by the recent acts of Congress? Let us read it again:

We may state, however, that the act has been introduced in the Iowa Legislature verbatim; that a voluntary compensation scheme has been passed in New Jersey, taking effect on July 4 next (that great day of liberty, which was evidently selected as being the most appropriate day of the year on which the act should be put into effect), which in many respects is similar to our plan. It is voluntary in form, but compulsory in fact. Employers and employees are deemed to have consented to the act, unless they give notice to the contrary. New employees, unless specifically notifying employers on entering the service, are bound by the law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to suggest that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Davis	Martine, N. J.	Richardson
Bacon	Dillingham	Myers	Root
Borah	Fall	Nelson	Sanders
Bourne	Gallinger	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Brown	Gore	Nixon	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Guggenheim	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Burnham	Hitchcock	Overman	Stephenson
Catron	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Stone
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Sutherland
Clapp	Jones	Paynter	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Penrose	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Perkins	Townsend
Crane	Lippitt	Poindexter	Wetmore
Culberson	Lodge	Pomerene	Williams
Cullom	McCumber	Rayner
Curtis	McLean	Reed

Mr. BORAH. I desire to state on behalf of the members of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals that that committee is having a hearing, and witnesses are appearing before it, which accounts for the absence of some of the members of that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present, and the Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I was reading at the time the roll call began, I will say for the enlightment of those Senators who have come in since, a portion of the report of one of these claim agents, in which he gleefully boasts of the effect that has come from the anonymous publications they had sent out in favor of a compensation act, and in which he declares that the bill drawn by the claim agents had been introduced in the Iowa Legislature exactly as they wrote it. Another bill, similar to it, had been introduced in New Jersey, which, he says, while it is voluntary in form, is neverthless compulsory in fact. I had reached the interesting point where he said that in this bill—

Employers generally are penalized if they stay out of the compensation law, for the reason that all common-law defenses are abolished. If an employer comes into the act, he is relieved from the statutory liability imposed upon him, so far as those employees with whom he has contracts are concerned. However, employees who stay out of the act are given additional remedies against the employer. It really looks as if the only thing an employer in New Jersey can do, if he wants to operate under the compensation law, is to employ only those who will agree or consent to be bound by the law.

In other words, the compensation act was so favorable to the employer of labor, as introduced in New Jersey, that these gentlemen seemed to be disturbed as to just how men could be forced to accept it. Mr. Whiting states further:

Detailed maximum amounts are fixed for certain specific injuries, going further as to the extent in character of injuries than the plan proposed by the committee.

In other words, the Legislature of New Jersey had had the temerity to add somewhat to the bill prepared by these gentlemanly conspirators.

I proceed with the reading:

A law has also been enacted in the State of Wisconsin, the terms of which we have not as yet been advised.

A bill very similar to the New Jersey law has been introduced into the Pennsylvania Legislature.

There has also been introduced a Federal compulsory compensation law in the House of Representatives.

Now, this is all a catalogue of those things which this gentleman says resulted from the activity of the claim agents. I think he claimed too much, for I want to discuss this matter thoroughly and frankly. I think before the claim agents ever began to agitate this legislation, before they ever dreamed of accepting it, at the time when they were denouncing it as socialism and as anarchy, labor organizations were trying to have enacted compensation laws. But it was when the statutory law had advanced to a point where the railroad claim agents preferred a compensation law to a liability law that they then seized upon this measure and now boastfully take credit to themselves for all this legislation. I think that what they did succeed in doing, and all they succeeded in doing, was that they were able to influence and largely shape the character of the legislation which was passed in these various States.

Mr. President, those two documents explain very clearly why it is there is no opposition to this bill by the railroads.

The bill which we are now considering was introduced in the Senate on the 20th day of February, 1912. As early as the 25th day of February, 1912, and even earlier, the Senate began to be flooded with telegrams. It was impossible for those telegrams to have been based upon an accurate understanding of what was contained in this bill. In many instances the bill had not had time in due course of mail to reach those who sent the telegraphic importunities. Railway-employee organizations had not had their meetings and time to pass upon the measure. The bill had been amended and reamended up to the very day almost when it was introduced in Congress. Even the printed form which is submitted here shows amendments have been made after the bill was actually put in type. The telegrams, therefore, that have come to us in that early stage mean nothing more than that the officers of these organizations had reported back to the officers of the subordinate organizations, telling them that a compensation law had been agreed upon, and they were asked to lend their indorsement. They gave the indorsement as requested, not because they approved this particular bill, but because they approved the principle of compensation and believed they were getting a bill which would bring to them great benefits and blessings.

I say, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, if this bill is postponed until the members of these organization can have time to advise regarding it among each other and to understand its principles, it will be condemned by substantially a unanimous vote.

I sent this bill to some 10 or 12 societies that had wired me, asking me to give it support. With but two exceptions, after examining the measure, they have wired or written asking either that the bill be defeated or that action upon it be postponed.

Now, Mr. President, I want to discuss the bill itself.

Mr. RAYNER. If the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator's speech is very instructive and interesting. I wish to ask him if the bill that has been reported by the committee is substantially the same bill that was prepared by these claim agents and sent to the legislatures of some of the States?

Mr. REED. I can not answer that, because the bill which was sent out they themselves say was sent without signature. My only information regarding that bill, or what is contained in it, is that which I gleaned from the reading of these minutes, and I do not find in these minutes repeated expressions of ideas which are embodied in the bill.

I would say this, however, that it would be inconceivable to me that these men would have brought the exact form of bill and laid it down to this commission, but what I do say is that the minutes which I have just read refer to the fact that a bill has been introduced in Congress, and they refer to it——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What is the date when that statement was made?

Mr. REED. The statement was made in 1910.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On what date in 1910?

Mr. REED. It is in the minutes of May 24 and 26.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course that was long before this bill was prepared at all.

Mr. REED. The present bill; but a bill had been introduced in Congress—and I state, replying to the Senator from Maryland, while they do not say it is their bill, they catalogue it among those bills which they mention, after having asserted that they had sent out the form of a bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There were two or three bills introduced in Congress. One bill introduced was called the Sabath bill. Another bill was introduced by Mr. LEWIS, a Member from the State of the Senator from Maryland. The bill which Mr. LEWIS introduced is what is generally called the Civic Federation bill—that is, it follows the general lines of the Civic Federation bill. A bill was prepared by the American Federation of Labor. Another bill which was prepared is what is called the commission's bill—that is, there were a number of commissioners appointed, one from each State, and they met and held meetings and prepared a bill which they put out. There have been innumerable bills put out.

Mr. RAYNER. May I ask the Senator——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me say, however, with regard to the question which the Senator asked, I was chairman of this commission; and until the Senator from Missouri mentioned it I never heard of any claim agents' convention. There never was before our commission any bill suggested by any claim agents' convention. The first draft of the bill which was before our commission I prepared myself, and in preparing it I consulted all the laws that I could find. I went over the English law, the German law, the French law, the various laws that that have been presented by many commissions in the United States, the New Jersey law, which has been in operation, the Ohio law, and many others.

Of course, all these laws follow along the same general line. There are two general plans resorted to; one, as we have stated in our report, called the German plan and the other the English plan. If you follow the English plan, the skeleton of any one of these bills would be pretty much the same. But the bill of the commission, which is presented here, is the commission's bill; there is no one responsible for it except the commission, and any insinuation to the contrary of that is utterly false and unwarranted.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat, knowing how faithfully and laboriously the Senator has worked upon this measure and how impartially I believe he has done it.

I was going to ask him whether any bill had been presented prepared by these claim agents, because I suppose they had the right to present a bill. Of course it might put a different aspect to the case entirely. But what I should like to ask the Senator from Utah is this: Did the American Federation of Labor present either a bill or a skeleton of a bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not to us; but their bills were published.

Mr. RAYNER. They had a perfect right to do it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can hand the Senator the book from my desk at any moment, and he will find published by the Bureau of Labor of the United States these various bills. They are all printed there in full. I can hand the Senator the volume in a moment. He may look at it. The American Federation of Labor bill is published, the Civic Federation bill is published, and this commission bill that I spoke of is published. They are all published. If there ever was a bill proposed by the claim agents' convention that was published, I never saw it. I say, and I repeat, that until the Senator from Missouri mentioned it I never heard of any action taken by any claim agents' convention.

Some two or three weeks ago the Senator from Missouri sent out a telegram to some of his constituents in an effort to antagonize this bill, and in that telegram something was said about the claim agents' convention and about this being a claim agents' bill. That was the first intimation I had ever had of it.

Now, let me say, further, there were before our commission, of course, testifying, several of these claim agents. They were before us urging us to recognize their beneficiary organizations, as they were called. We declined to do it. They were before us testifying, as others were, with reference to other matters. Employees were before us; lawyers representing the railroad companies were before us. Our commission was made up of two Members of the Senate, two Members of the House, and two members selected by the President. One of the members selected by the President was Mr. W. C. Brown, the president of the New York Central lines; the other was Mr. D. L. Cease, the editor of the Railroad Trainman, and he was put upon the commission to represent the railroad employees. Mr. Brown was unable to attend a great number of our meetings.

Mr. Whiting, whose name has been mentioned here, was the chief claims attorney of the New York Central lines. Mr. Brown introduced him to the commission, and he informed us, in substance, that Mr. Whiting was a very well informed man—I never had met him before in my life—and that he could give information—we were seeking information from all sources—he could give information with reference to the details of accidents and various other things perhaps as well as any man in the United States. We availed ourselves of Mr. Whiting's statements and what information Mr. Whiting had, just as we did with others. Mr. Whiting sat in the room while we were at work. Mr. Cease, who was the representative of the railway employees, sat in the room, and he and Mr. Whiting discussed these matters. Sometimes they would agree upon a detail and sometimes they would not. So far, however, as Mr. Whiting's influencing the commission in any respect whatever is concerned, any more than they were influenced by the statement of any other witness—such an assumption as that is not only utterly false, but in view of the make-up of the commission it is utterly absurd. I do not know for what purpose the Senator from Missouri injects all this—I was going to characterize it—perhaps I had better not——

Mr. REED. Just characterize it any way your please, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, I will characterize it—all this stuff, because it is nothing more than stuff.

This bill is to be tested by itself. It ought to be taken by its four corners. If it is not a good bill, it ought to be voted down, and if it is a good bill it ought to be put in operation, it does not make any difference who is in favor of it or who is against it. So far as I am concerned I do not care.

Mr. REED. I feel that I ought to express my pleasure at the fact that the Senator has concluded the question that he rose to ask me, and I thank him for his courteous characterization of my remarks. I shall possibly some day reach that intellectual altitude where I may sit in the shadow of his greatness, and when I do I shall know that there are no other heights to scale.

Mr. President, I have not charged by innuendo that these claim agents wrote this bill; on the other hand, before the Senator took the floor, I had expressly disclaimed that idea; but I had charged, and I now charge, that these claim agents were actively interested in this species and character of legislation, that they desired to have it adopted, and that the ideas and the skeletonization of the very matters that went into this bill afterwards were approved by them in their meetings a year before this commission sat.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. REED. And I have charged, and I now charge, that Mr. Whiting practically represented a member of this commission. I base that upon the remarks just made by the Senator, that the president of the New York Central Railroad Co. was absent much of the time, and said Mr. Whiting would remain there and furnish information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in what respect does the bill presented to the Senate represent the claim agents' proposed measure?

Mr. REED. I called attention to two or three, and before I get through my remarks I shall be prepared to furnish from the minutes of these meetings the things in which they agree with this bill. One thing was this, that the act should be exclusive, and that all legal rights should be wiped out except those reserved in the bill. That was not in accordance with the English act—the Senator said a little while ago this bill resembled it—but it is in conflict with the English act in this fundamental and vital principle.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. REED. For the English act does preserve the right to proceed under the common and statute law or to proceed under the compensation act at the option of the injured man.

Another place where the suggestion these claim agents made in their meeting is found in this bill is that there should be no compensation during the first 14 days of injury. Those two things come to my mind now without going back and examining the minutes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to say a word there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So far as the exclusive feature of the proposed law is concerned, it is true that is not in the English law, but it is in every other European law with which I am familiar. The exclusive feature is in the New Jersey law—which, by the way, we followed in many respects—more than that of any other State law with which I am familiar. It is in a number of the other State laws. It is true that in some of the State laws which have been proposed there is a provision that where the negligence is personal—the personal negligence of the employer—then the employee shall have a right to sue; but in many of the State laws the law is exclusive. After a very thorough consideration and for the reasons which we have suggested in our report, we framed this law along exclusive lines.

With reference to the 14-day period, the 14-day period was the exact provision in the English law of 1896. It is true that in the law of 1906 they cut that waiting period down to a week, but for reasons which, if I have the opportunity later, I intend to go into, we followed the two-weeks period. The two-weeks period is also followed in some of the States of the Union. In Germany it is a 13-weeks period before any accident compensation can be allowed; during those 13 weeks the burden falling upon the sickness fund, and so on; in other words, these provisions are not original either with us or, if the claim agents advocated them, they are not original with them. They are well-known provisions in laws of this character.

Mr. REED. I expressly stated that the claim agents——

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just one moment, and then I will yield to the Senator.

I expressly stated that I did not claim that the claim agents originated these compensation ideas. On the other hand, I said that for many years they denounced those who believed in them as socialists; that they adopted them when it was more profitable to adopt them than to live under the laws which had been enacted in the various States and by the Congress of the United States.

What I said further was that these claim agents did agree upon many of the essentials contained in this bill, and that one of them was an important factor, at least as a witness or adviser, before the commission.

I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from Missouri will permit, I understood from the Senator from Utah that the commission followed largely the New Jersey law in framing this bill. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not suggest to what extent.

Mr. DAVIS. Then, I understand from the Senator from Missouri that the claim agents were responsible for the New Jersey law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no; the New Jersey law was passed before——

Mr. DAVIS. He said they got it introduced almost verbatim in Iowa, and a very similar scheme had been adopted in New Jersey.

Mr. REED. I do not know whether this claim agent was telling the truth or not, because I have heard of claim agents who did not always tell the truth. I do not mean to say that it is a universal rule; I think there are exceptions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think the Senator will find any such statement made by the claim agent, because it would be manifestly untrue. Claim agents did not have anything to do with the law in New Jersey.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from Utah will permit me further, I beg to differ with him. The minute which was read does show that the claim agents in their last report claimed credit for the passage of the New Jersey law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let us hear it.

Mr. REED. The minutes of 1911, page 44, last paragraph—I will read the whole paragraph—state:

> We are unable to state what influence this suggested plan—
>
> That is the plan the agents sent out—
> has had on legislation, enacted or proposed. No doubt many of the members of the association here present can tell us of instances where the plan has been considered. We may state, however, that the act has been introduced in the Iowa Legislature verbatim; that a voluntary compensation scheme has been passed in New Jersey, taking effect on July 4 next (that great day of liberty, which was evidently selected as being the most appropriate day of the year on which the act should be put into effect), which in many respects in similar to our plan. It is voluntary in form, but compulsory in fact. Employers and employees are deemed to have consented to the act, unless they give notice to the contrary. New employees, unless specifically notifying employers on entering the service, are bound by the law. Employers generally are penalized if they stay out of the compensation law, for the reason that all common-law defenses are abolished. If an employer comes into the act he is relieved from the statutory liability imposed upon him, so far as those employees with whom he has contracts are concerned. However, employees who stay out of the act are given additional remedies against the employer. It really looks as if the only thing an employer in New Jersey can do, if he wants to operate under the compensation law, is to employ only those who will agree or consent to be bound by the law. Detailed maximum amounts are fixed for certain specific injuries, going further as to the extent in character of injuries than the plan proposed by the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not understand that it is there suggested that the plan of the bill prepared by those claim agents—if they did prepare one—was adopted by the New Jersey Legislature. It would be absolutely untrue if they did make such a statement, because, as a matter of fact, the New Jersey law was prepared by a commission; and that has been the case with reference to practically all of these State laws. The Wisconsin law was prepared in the same way, by a commission, as was the California law. There are laws of this character—I mean compensation laws—I think, in some 12 States in the Union; and I know that most of them, and I am inclined to think all of them, were prepared by a commission, upon which commission both the employing class and the employed class were represented in almost every instance.

Mr. REED. I can only refer again to the written language and say that it is the report of Mr. Frank V. Whiting, chairman. If he is untruthful, he is yet the same Whiting the distinguished Senator just said had rendered valuable service to the commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Whiting is not untruthful. I found Mr. Whiting—and I think my colleague upon the commission, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], will bear me out in the statement—to be a very truthful and a very well-informed gentleman.

Mr. REED. I have not charged him with being untruthful. I think he told the truth in his report to the claim agents.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Utah allow me to ask him a question in order to call his attention to one thing?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED. In view of the fact that the Senator from Georgia wishes to ask the Senator from Utah a question, I will yield to him, and then I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only wish to ask the Senator from Utah if he was not inaccurate in his statement that the New Jersey law was compulsory?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not state that the New Jersey law was compulsory.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood the Senator to say that it supplanted all other legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no; I did not so state.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought the Senator stated that it belonged to that class.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no. What I said was that we have taken—I do not remember my exact language—many features from the New Jersey law, and the scheme of our compensation provision was taken from the New Jersey law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The New Jersey law is not exclusive.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no. It is just as was stated in the matter which the Senator from Missouri read awhile ago; the New Jersey law is elective in form, but compulsory in fact. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I will state, for the benefit of those who may be interested in it, how that comes about.

The New Jersey law provides that if the employer does not come under the compensation law he shall be liable as at common law, stripped of all the common-law defenses, and that if the employee does not come under the compensation law he shall have his right of action for negligence burdened with the common-law defenses, so that the effect of it is to hold over the heads of both classes a club.

Mr. REED. That is about what we would expect from New Jersey.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The progressive governor of New Jersey——

Mr. REED. He did not recommend that, did he?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He has advocated it very strongly.

Mr. REED. That is the strongest indictment I have heard against him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, the Senator will find that to be so.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, if I may be permitted——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Missouri I think is very unfortunate in his expression. You may expect from New Jersey not evil legislation, but good legislation. For many years "New Jersey justice" has been proverbial.

I will say with reference to the New Jersey compensation act, that it has met with the almost universal approbation of the workmen, and particularly of the railroad engineers, in our Commonwealth. There is no State in this Union that is more directly and seriously affected by railroad accidents than the State of New Jersey. Little though we are geographically, we are sandwiched between the great West and the great metropolis of New York. We are gridironed with railroads, and railroad accidents in that State run into the thousands where in other States they run into the hundreds.

As I have said, the New Jersey law has met with universal commendation and favor. I have received, I will say—I had no thought of making this expression, but since the Senator from Missouri, my most lovable and delightful friend—and I hate to be divergent with him, for we are entirely in harmony in general thought—has referred to New Jersey, I will say I have received, from railroad men almost entirely, 148 letters and telegrams favoring the adoption of this bill, and I have received but 12 letters and telegrams opposing this bill. In answer to the suggestion that these letters and telegrams came from the head of a great railroad corporation or through his dictation or influence I will say that on their face they disprove that suggestion.

I shall vote for this measure. It is not all I would like, there are some provisions which I should like to be different, but I believe it to be a step in the right direction and that it is a good bill, and God knows some of us hope to live—I do—to aid in rectifying these ills and evils.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. Just for a moment. The Senator from Utah asked the Senator from Missouri to mention the points of similarity between the bill before the Senate and the skeleton bill as prepared by the claim agents. The Senator from Missouri pointed out two very striking features of similarity. Now, I would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that if he will only get the bill that has been introduced almost verbatim in Iowa, he will find, in substance, the bill that is before the Senate to-day. That will answer the question of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to say, in this connection, that I have never seen the bill of the claim agents at any time. I will make the further statement that you might compare the bill of this commission with the bills that are in force in nearly every country in the world where such measures are in force, and you would find that there are features that are almost exactly alike. I think it fairer to assume that the railway claim agents, if they did prepare a bill, must have followed, in their essential features, some of the acts that are in force on the Continent of Europe.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just passing from that particular thought for the moment and replying to my good friend from New Jersey, first I want to say that I should not have made the remark that "one would expect that sort of legislation from New Jersey," because no man has a right to reflect upon a great State. The thing I had in mind which prompted me to make the statement was the fact that New Jersey has been so procorporate in its legislation until recent years; thus in the heat of debate I used the expression I did.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to say——

Mr. REED. Now, for the benefit of the Senator from New Jersey let me state that it is only recently that the highest court of New Jersey decided that a labor organization could not meet together for the purpose by peaceful means of persuading others to quit work. The decree of the highest judicial tribunal of New Jersey was that that was the law of New Jersey.

That court solemnly held that a statute declaring it to be lawful for men to meet and by peaceable means endeavor to induce others to quit work was in contravention of the constitution of the State of New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator permit me one word just there?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will let me conclude this thought I will yield.

I call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator to the further fact that it is not at all remarkable that any kind of law that would give any kind of relief or compensation should have been welcomed by the working classes of New Jersey, in view of the fact that, contrary to the history of most other States, all or substantially all of the old common-law defenses have been preserved in New Jersey until this very recent legislation. So that until this very recent legislation every engineer or fireman or conductor who suffered the loss of a hand or a foot was met with the defense of contributory negligence; he was met with the defense of assumption of risk; he was met with the defense that the accident had occurred through the act of a fellow servant—with the most rigid application of that doctrine. So that these people had come to understand that they practically had no rights except where they could show the clearest and most absolute case at common law. Therefore people thus situated, thus hampered, would naturally welcome any law that would give them compensation upon any terms; but I call the Senator's attention—and I do it most respectfully, for he knows how thoroughly I respect him—to the fact that under the Federal laws now applicable every man affected by this bill has the right to recover compensation unless his own negligence was the sole cause, or unless the injury occurred without the negligence of any person whatsoever. I say, therefore, no matter what the Senator's opinion may be, that the law of New Jersey is an unjust law, because it says, "Here is a compensation act; now, if you will come in and agree to accept its terms, Mr. Employee, then, if your employer also accepts, you may obtain a very meager compensation. But if you dare to refuse acceptance then you can be met with all the old common-law defenses of fellow servant, assumption of risk, and contributory negligence, and thus can be stricken down. It was a legislative device—I do not care who concocted it—to compel people to accept compensation in lieu of their legal and constitutional rights, and no wonder these claim agents gleefully refer to it as being compulsory in fact while it is voluntary in form.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I am not here to defend the claim agents, but I am here in defense of the New Jersey statute upon this particular subject. That statute in its workings has proved eminently satisfactory and has met with almost universal approval.

Now, with reference to that particular——

Mr. REED. If I may ask the Senator a question, how long has that statute been in force?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. About a year and a half.

Mr. REED. To whom does it apply?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It applies to workingmen in many industrial pursuits.

Mr. REED. To laboring men?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. REED. Then, it is not like this bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; but the same results would follow.

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think that is probably so. We are willing to admit the fact, as the Senator from Missouri has suggested, that for 40 or 50 years we have been under a cloud, under a ban. I am willing to admit that. God knows there has been no State of this Union that has been dominated over more and persecuted more by corporate greed and influence than has been New Jersey; but, thank God, we live in a brighter day; there is a new dawn; we have a Democratic governor who has brought about this great result, and my hope and ambition is that we may press his policies further along until the whole United States may be blessed with his force and his advanced ideas.

Mr. REED. I am willing to admit of record—and I do it gladly—that Woodrow Wilson is a vast improvement over anything you have had in public office in New Jersey for many years; and I am also willing solemnly to admit of record that my good friend, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], is a vast improvement over some of the other men who have filled that office from the State of New Jersey. I do not refer to the personality of any of these men; I am not comparing them as individuals, but in the fact that human beings are now represented instead of the inordinate greed of gigantic aggregations of wealth. I congratulate the State of New Jersey upon the change, and I trust they will continue to progress along this glorious, sunlit highway until they reach the plane where old Missouri and other good progressive States have been for the last 40 years.

Now, Mr. President, I want to discuss this bill, and I will conclude what I have to say with a word further in reply to the Senator from Utah. He has compared this bill with the laws of European countries; he compared it with the German law. Constantly we are hearing that comparison. Let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact, as I understand it—I may be in error and, if so, the Senator from Utah will correct me—that in Germany there was substantially no right of action on the part of the employee when he was injured unless, possibly, when he was injured by the direct act of the master, and I am not sure that it existed then. For all practical purposes it was nil, and therefore the idea of compensation was taken up not for the purpose of substituting it for liability which existed, as we are doing here, but for the purpose of creating a sort of pension for the unfortunate, and it has proceeded upon that line in Germany and upon that line alone. It is a very different proposition therefore from taking away from men those rights reserved to them under the Constitution, under the statutes, and under the common law, and giving them a substitute therefor which is inadequate.

I understand further that what is true of Germany is true of other continental countries, and that what the gentlemen have been doing is to try to draw a law for American citizens, who possess legal and constitutional rights, and to base it upon the experience of the proletariat of Europe, who had no rights. It is a very different proposition.

When, however, we come to England, the one country which most nearly approaches ours, we find that the rights of the Englishman at common law were preserved to him, and that those rights at common law had been extended by the act of Parliament, and that that act of Parliament had been further extended until in England the right of recovery had become a very broad and generous right; that when they came to adopt the compensation act in England they did not wipe out the legal rights of the English citizen. They allowed those rights to stand and gave him the option to accept this law or to proceed under his legal rights; and one of these claim agents, to wit, Mr. Whiting, after having discussed the English act before his board of claim agents, advocated a departure from that great fundamental principle retained in the English act, to wit, the right of every man to hold his legal rights and to have this additional remedy or alternative remedy. Mr. Whiting advocated that we abandon that, and we do abandon it in this bill.

Now, sir, I have this to say: I have no objection whatever to the enactment of this bill, even with all its bad provisions, and I think many of them wholly bad, if you will make it a right which may be exercised by the men, reserving to them the rights they already have at law. But when you propose to strike down the rights of the American citizen as they have been crystallized and sanctified in the common law for hundreds of years; when you propose to strike down all the rights guaranteed to him by the statutes of all the various States of this Union, and finally wipe out what was done by the act of Congress; when you propose to destroy those rights and substitute this bill with all of its shortcomings and its iniquities, I say you are doing a grave and dangerous thing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Oh, yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator a moment ago spoke about the German law and said that, in his opinion, it did not, as I understood him, allow a recovery for negligence—that it practically prevented any recovery at all.

Mr. REED. My understanding has been—I want to be frank about it, and if I am in error I want to be corrected—that for all practical purpose the employee in Germany was without remedy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator is in error about that. As early as 1838 the German law provided that, in the case of railroads, they should be liable for all accidents, irrespective of their negligence, unless the railroad company could prove that the accident was caused by the fault of the injured person or by act of God, the risks inherent in the industry itself not being so designated.

Mr. REED. That is a statutory law. Am I not correct in the statement that, outside of the statutory law, they did not have any right of recovery?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But this statutory law was passed in 1838.

Mr. REED. I understood the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The compensation law was not passed until about 25 years ago.

Mr. REED. And it applies to all?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It applies to all.

Mr. REED. The other applied only to railroad men.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is true with reference to that law; but with reference to other industries, some time prior to the compensation law being adopted the master was responsible for his own negligence, but it left proof of negligence to be made by the employee. But, substantially, the English law, so far as that was concerned, prevailed in Germany.

Mr. REED. The fact remains, as I understand, that the ordinary employee had no remedy, except where it was the direct negligence of the master, but that in the case of railroad employees they did have a remedy and the compensation law of Germany is not limited to railway employees, but embraces all classes of employees.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There was a more liberal remedy in the case of railroads, but in the ordinary industries substantially the common law of England prevailed in Germany. Of course it was not the common law there.

Mr. REED. I do not know what the Senator's authority is, but in going through some of the hearings I have found statements to the contrary, that it was really an act which for the first time conferred rights upon those people. But, even if that is not true, it is of small moment in this discussion. The main fact to be considered here, regardless of where this bill originated, regardless of whether it suits the railroads or does not suit them, is what will be its effect upon the railway employees and upon the railroads, is it a just and proper measure to be enacted into law.

Mr. President, I want to discuss this question at length.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I desire to have printed by to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has been on his feet two hours, and I move that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope that will not be done. The Senator from Missouri we all recognize has been on his feet a long time and is no doubt weary, but we can proceed with the reading of the bill and dispose of the committee amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is a motion to take a recess debatable? Does the same rule apply to a motion to take a recess?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the motion will not prevail. It is yet early.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	McCumber	Sanders
Bacon	Curtis	McLean	Shively
Borah	Davis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bourne	Fall	Myers	Smith, Ga.

Mr. BRYAN. My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. PERCY] is detained on committee work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock to-morrow. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will change the hour to 12 o'clock. That was what I rose for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], who is absent on a matter of importance. If he were present he would vote "nay," while I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. Has that Senator voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. BURNHAM (after having voted in the negative). I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I am informed by those who are willing to speak for him that were he present he would vote "nay." I have therefore disregarded the pair and voted "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. FOSTER. May I inquire if the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a general pair with him, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WATSON] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. MYERS. I transfer the pair I have just announced with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—25.

So the motion of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was rejected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know the Senator from Missouri is weary, and to relieve him I will ask that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I prefer to go on with my remarks if the Senate insists upon staying here. I want to say to the Senator from Utah, and to all the Senators, that this is no filibuster, this is no attempt merely to consume the time of the Senate for the purpose of killing the bill. I had some remarks to make about it which I probably would have concluded by this time had I not been interrupted when the Senator from Georgia asked that we take a recess at the usual hour until to-morrow, which was only a proper courtesy under the circumstances, and one that I have never questioned, and one which is generally extended to others.

But if the Senate proposes to sit regardless, then I will proceed in the ordinary way, and I want a quorum here every minute.

I simply want to state——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. REED. I think Senators have misapprehended our attitude. We are not trying to consume time here. We want to debate this question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was going to suggest a course which probably would obviate any difficulty. I am not anxious to keep anybody here—nobody on this side is—an unreasonable time. Yet I think we ought within a reasonable time to come to a vote on this bill. I will ask unanimous consent that on Saturday at 3 o'clock a vote be taken on the bill and all amendments then pending or then to be offered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know whether the unanimous-consent agreement could be modified, but if it could be I would not consent to its modification.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes; it has been done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand it can not be. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know that particular thing has been done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand it has been held that a unanimous-consent agreement can not be changed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The attention of the Chair was diverted. Will the Senator from Utah kindly restate his proposition?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I asked unanimous consent that a vote upon the bill and all pending amendments be taken, beginning at 3 o'clock on Saturday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair that would be changing the unanimous-consent agreement, which the Chair thinks can not be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator from Utah will not lose anything if he will consent to take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock. The Senator from Missouri has been speaking and has not yet reached the details of the bill. Owing to interruptions that has been impossible, and he has spoken much longer than he would have otherwise done. The Senator from Utah should not insist that we should go on and require him to speak further to-day. This courtesy has been given to every one in my recollection during nine years of service here. Do you propose to make an example of him? When you do that you are not going to make anything by it. I appeal to the Senator from Utah to let a recess be taken now until to-morrow at 12 o'clock. The bill has been read, I understand.

Mr. ROOT. The bill has not been read. We have been all day under the unanimous-consent agreement. The Senator from Utah has been vainly endeavoring to get the bill read for action on the committee amendments. I do not think the Senator from North Carolina knows how much like a threat his observation sounds. I do not think he intended it, but it sounded very much like a threat.

Mr. OVERMAN. I say that this same courtesy has been extended to other Senators.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator from Utah has offered everything that courtesy can suggest to relieve the weariness of the Senator from Missouri by proceeding to have the bill read for action on amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let me ask the Senator from New York if that would be a wise thing to do when the Senator from Missouri is discussing the bill generally? The next amendment probably will cause an hour at least of debate.

Mr. ROOT. Perhaps not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know it will.

Mr. ROOT. Let us see if the Senate wishes to debate the amendment. It will give the Senator from Missouri the rest his associates desire for him, but for which he does not seem to be very anxious.

Mr. OVERMAN. There have been some general speeches made on the subject by the Senator from Utah, who is usually courteous, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. Only one speech has been made on the other side. Now, the Senator from Missouri is making a speech on the general bill, and I think it is not right to break into the Senator's speech and begin to discuss the amendments. I hardly think the Senator from New York would say that that would be exactly fair.

Mr. ROOT. The orderly procedure would have been to settle the amendments before speeches were made upon the general subject of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. That might have been so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That has not been the practice, so far as I have observed it here. If it is it would seem to be a very strange practice. The general discussion ought to precede all special amendments, I should think. I wanted to have my amendment read before the bill itself was dealt with, because I thought before dealing with the amendments of the committee it was but fair to have also read the amendments intended to be offered by others. My only reason for objecting to reading the bill for amendment was that I know the practice here, and the better practice here would be a general discussion, and then come to the amendments, taking up the committee amendments and then the amendments offered by other Senators.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise merely to ask a question. Has the formal reading of the bill been dispensed with?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been dispensed with by the action of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The bill is now to be read for amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in the line of being read for amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Speeches can be made at any stage of a general character when the bill is being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question on that point at all.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, before the Senator from Missouri proceeds I want permission to make a statement that I think is timely just at this point.

This bill has been under discussion for an hour or two. It is an exceedingly important bill, one of some complication. It is a bill that involves an entirely new rule in the legislative system of the country. It is one that I entirely approve, and one for which I intend to vote.

I do not believe anyone has abused the patience of the Senate, or that anyone desires to do so. I think the motion for a recess at this time, looked at from the standpoint of a supporter of this proposition, is entirely reasonable and right and ought not to meet with serious opposition. Certainly it should not meet with opposition based on the assumption that anyone is attempting to unduly obstruct the consideration of this measure. It is going too far to assume that any such purpose is entertained by anyone. I trust Senators will treat it from the standpoint of courtesy and the high plane of fairness which has characterized the proceedings of this body, and not at the outset undertake to wave a red flag or provoke a condition of warfare here that the occasion does not justify. I say this to my friend from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, nothing would be further from any desire of mine than to insist upon going ahead if a very large proportion of the Members of the Senate do not feel inclined to do so, but I do think we ought to dispose of the bill this week.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I see no reason why it should not be done; and I have every reason to believe that it will be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was going to suggest to the Senator and to the Senate that so long as this measure is before the Senate undisposed of, we can of course do nothing else.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. We ought not to desire to do anything else. It is a matter of sufficient importance in itself to justify the entire time of the Senate while it is under consideration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator is perhaps familiar with the situation on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am entirely familiar with the situation on the other side of the Chamber, too.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think that we can get a vote on the bill by Saturday?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I see no reason why we should not get a vote, if fair debate has been exhausted, at that time. I have not been aware of any purpose on the part of anyone to captiously obstruct the consideration of the bill, and I do not believe any such purpose prevails.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well. I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 minutes before 12 to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m. to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m., Thursday, May 2) the Senate took a recess until 11 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m. Friday, May 3, 1912.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 2, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, deepen our reverence for Thee and increase the divine within us that it may dominate the human and bring us closer to Thee, that we may hallow Thy name in thought, word, and deed. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GOOD ROADS CONGRESS.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the elaborate discussion which has recently been had in this House on the subject of good roads and in view of the general interest manifested in this important question, I take occasion at this time to call attention to the fact that the Fifth National Good Roads Congress will meet in the city of New Orleans on May 16, 17, 18, and 19, 1912.

The people of the State of Louisiana have evinced the greatest interest in good roads. In 1910 a constitutional amendment was adopted imposing a general tax of one-fourth of a mill therefor, and it is worthy of note that, while the people of the city of New Orleans will under the terms of that law receive but slight direct benefit as compared with other portions of the State and will yet be compelled to pay the same tax as those owning property outside of the city, the constitutional amendment was carried in the city of New Orleans by a heavy vote. The people of that city realize the inestimable value of good roads and feel that any improvement in them in rural sections must of necessity sooner or later redound to the benefit of urban communities. I mention this fact to show that in our State, at least, there is no clash or conflict between the city and the country on this great question. I trust that a similar spirit of mutual cooperation obtains and will obtain in other parts of the Union.

I beg leave to submit the official call of Arthur C. Jackson, president of the National Good Roads Association, under whose auspices the coming congress in the city of New Orleans is to be held, and the proclamation of Jared Young Sanders, governor of Lousiana, in reference thereto, which I ask to be inserted in the RECORD:

OFFICIAL CALL OF THE FIFTH NATIONAL GOOD ROADS CONGRESS.

To the people of the United States:

The Fifth National Good Roads Congress is hereby called to meet at New Orleans, May 16, 17, 18, and 19, Chicago June 17, and Baltimore June 24, 1912, under the auspices of the National Good Roads Association.

May 16 and 17 will be devoted to the general problem of good roads and streets in their relation to the city, State, and Nation, at which time a Louisiana State good roads association will be developed.

May 18 will be woman's day in connection with the First Louisiana Woman's State Good Roads Convention to be conducted by the club women of Louisiana.

May 19 will be good-roads Sunday, in which the churches of all denominations are urged to participate in a union meeting in recognition of the vital relationship of good roads and streets to the church, school, and home.

June 17, at Chicago (the day before the Republican Party national convention), and June 24, at Baltimore (the day before the Democratic Party national convention), will be devoted to plans for securing good-roads planks in the national party platforms and a general recognition and adoption of State and national aid for the construction and maintenance of public highways.

Officials of all States, counties, cities, associations, corporations, and women's clubs are invited to send delegates.

The President of the United States and ex-President Roosevelt have been named as honorary presidents of this congress. The Vice President of the United States, ex-Vice Presidents Morton, Stevenson, and Fairbanks, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Cabinet, United States Senators, Congressmen, and governors of States and Territories honorary vice presidents. Members of State and Territorial legislatures, State highway commissioners and engineers, officers of all good roads, agricultural transportation, industrial, commercial, educational and religious organizations, mayors of cities, State and county superintendents of schools, clergymen, teachers, all members of women's clubs, all rural free-delivery carriers, and the editors of all regular publications honorary members.

The history of the National Good Roads Association has been one of continuous and successful promotion of the good-roads movement since its organization in 1900. Its objects are, first, to associate all interested organizations and individuals in a universal demand for the permanent improvement of public roads and streets; second, to secure better results from the millions of dollars annually expended upon the public roads and streets; third, to have established in all States and Territories highway departments with practical engineering supervision; fourth, to secure thorough teaching of highway engineering in all universities and agricultural colleges; fifth, to utilize all able-bodied tramps, vagrants, paupers, prisoners, and convicts in preparing materials and building public roads and streets; and sixth, to secure State and national aid for the construction and maintenance of permanent public roads.

The good-roads movement in nearly every State had its inception in conventions held by the National Good Roads Association; hundreds of conventions have been held and hundreds of thousands of good-roads addresses have been distributed.

On May 23, 1908, the National Good Roads Congress was incorporated under the laws of the State of Illinois to associate all interested in a national movement for good roads, and the following call was signed by the governors of 40 States and the mayors of more than 100 leading cities:

"Recognizing a well nigh universal sentiment in favor of better public highways and believing that a general discussion of this great problem from every point of view will prove timely and effective, the undersigned join in urging all interested to attend the National Good Roads Congress at Chicago, June 15, 1908, and Denver, July 6, 1908, that the results of its deliberations may be presented for the consideration of the coming national conventions, all legislative bodies, and the public in general."

As a result of the congress the Republican national convention at Chicago adopted the following good-roads plank in its platform:

"We recognize the social and economic advantages of good country roads, maintained more and more largely at public expense and less and less at the expense of the abutting owner."

And the Democratic national convention at Denver declared:

"We favor Federal aid to State and local authorities in the construction and maintenance of post roads."

The second National Good Roads Congress was held at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, May 18, 19, 20, and 21, 1909, and in Washington, D. C., May 22, 1909. It was opened by Cardinal Gibbons and addressed by Vice President SHERMAN, Speaker CANNON, Gov. Crothers, and many of the most prominent men in public life.

The third national congress was held at Niagara Falls, N. Y., July 28, 29, and 30, 1910, and was addressed by distinguished good-roads advocates from 11 States and from Canada.

The fourth national congress was held at Birmingham, Ala., May 23, 24, 25, and 26, 1911, with 1,364 delegates in attendance from 18 States.

The importance of this movement for good roads is being recognized as never before, and it is felt that when the women of the Nation add their influence to that of the press and clergy a victory will have been won, greater and more far-reaching in effect than any other within a generation. For it is a matter of tremendous import that in the United States bad roads are directly responsible for the loss of a billion dollars a year, and the saving of this stupendous sum surely constitutes an economic question of vast importance.

When the agricultural production of the United States for the past 11 years totals more than $70,000,000,000 a sum to stagger the imagination, and it cost more to take this product from the farm to the station than from such station to the American and European markets, and when the saving in cost of moving this product of agriculture over good roads instead of bad would have built a million miles of good roads, the incalculable waste of bad roads in this country is shown to be of such enormous proportions as to demand immediate reformation and the wisest and best statesmanship.

Great as is the loss to transportation, mercantile, industrial, and farming interests, incomparably greater is the loss to women and children and social life, a matter as important as civilization itself, and the truth of the declaration of Charles Sumner 50 years ago, that "the two greatest forces for the advancement of civilization are the schoolmaster and good roads," is emphasized by the experience of the intervening years and points to the wisdom of a union of educational forces for aggressive action for permanent roads and streets.

New Orleans is the place and May 16, 17, 18, and 19 is the time.

THE NATIONAL GOOD ROADS ASSOCIATION,
ARTHUR C. JACKSON, President.

Proclamation of State of Louisiana.

Whereas the people of Louisiana have by constitutional amendment adopted a special tax for use in State aid for good roads;

Whereas this movement for the betterment of our highways is absolutely essential to our material development and is fast gaining in strength in every community of our State; and

Whereas on the invitation and earnest solicitation of the mayor and the commercial organizations of the city of New Orleans it has been decided to hold the next meeting of the National Good Roads Association in the city of New Orleans on May 16, 17, 18, and 19, 1912:

Now, therefore, I, Jared Young Sanders, governor of Louisiana, do hereby issue this, my proclamation, calling on the mayors of our several cities, towns, and villages, the police juries of our several parishes, farmers' organizations, agricultural clubs, and commercial bodies to appoint and send delegates to this Good Roads Congress, and I request these delegates appointed and all other good citizens whose convenience will permit to attend this Good Roads Congress and thereby obtain the direct and inestimable benefit of an interchange of ideas and experiences with the delegates from other States.

In testimony whereof I have hereby set my hand and caused to be fixed the great seal of the State this 15th day of April, 1912.

[SEAL.] J. Y. SANDERS, Governor.
EDW. EVERETT, Secretary of State.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business for to-day is the disposition of the Post Office appropriation bill. The previous question was ordered on the bill H. R. 21279 and all amendments to its final passage.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the bill H. R. 21279, the Post Office appropriation bill, which passed on Tuesday, and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been passed.

Mr. FOSTER. It has passed the Committee of the Whole. This is a matter to which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] had an amendment, and it was understood it was to be offered. He is unavoidably absent to-day and has requested that I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be offered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 23, line 18, by inserting after the word "mail" the following:

"Provided, That the sum of $6,000 be immediately available for the payment to the widow or next of kin of J. S. March, O. S. Woody, and W. L. Gwinn, sea post clerks, who lost their lives on the S. S. Titanic, said sum to be equally divided, $2,000 to each widow or next of kin."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent to offer the amendment which has just been reported. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understand the proposition as now presented would make available $6,000—$2,000 a person——

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. MANN (continuing). On account of the mail clerks who lost their lives in the Titanic, which, if the provision which is already inserted in the bill were already in the law, they would receive anyhow?

Mr. FOSTER. That is correct. We inserted a provision in the law that sea postal clerks should receive the same amount as railway postal clerks; that is, $2,000 to be paid the legal representatives for each person who loses his life while in the service by accident.

Mr. MANN. This would simply provide as though the law had already been in operation when this disaster happened?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir; the same thing.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] this. I do not know of any law in existence now that would authorize the payment.

Mr. FOSTER. There is not any law now that provides for sea post clerks.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. This is, in effect, an extra appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; for that purpose—that these three men who lost their lives in the Titanic disaster should be paid the same amount as those railway postal clerks who lose their lives in the discharge of their duty.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In other words, under existing law, if these men had lost their lives on the railroad, their widows or heirs would in each case have got $2,000, but for want of law covering the sea postal clerks their widows or children would get nothing except for this appropriation?

Mr. FOSTER. That is correct.

Mr. BATHRICK. Employed in the United States service?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; employed in the United States service.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the amendment of the gentleman says "widows or next of kin." The amendment offered says the money shall be paid "to the widows or next of kin." It seems to me it ought to go to the widows and children surviving, and if none, to their dependent parents. The gentleman's amendment reads "to their widows or next of kin."

Mr. FOSTER. I could not say as to that.

Mr. CALDER. I can say, for the information of the gentleman, that Mr. Gynn had a wife and six children.

Mr. BARTLETT. The money should go to the wife and children surely. I call the attention of the gentleman to the matter. It may be amended in some other place. The provision should be guarded as to who shall be the beneficiaries. It is virtually a gift by the Congress. Of course, I am willing to give this to them, but it ought to go to the people who are dependent. We so provide in the law with regard to the postal clerks on railroads. It should be the same language in both cases, affecting railway postal clerks and sea postal clerks. The person or persons next of kin might be third or fourth cousins, and it might be that there is nobody dependent on these deceased clerks. The next of kin might be able to take care of himself and have ample means. The object of the law in the case of a postal railway clerk is to provide for the dependent family of one who dies or is killed on the railroad.

Mr. FOSTER. I will state to the gentleman that the present law provides for the payment of $2,000 to the legal representative and makes that $2,000 exempt from use or seizure for any debts.

Mr. BARTLETT. In that way it would go into the estate of the man who was killed, and it would be administered and turned over to his wife and children or other dependents.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would go to the next of kin of these three sea postal clerks.

Mr. BARTLETT. One might have a wife and children, and the others might not have anything but cousins, uncles, or aunts.

Mr. FOSTER. I could not answer the gentleman positively, but my understanding is that these postal clerks, if they have not wives, have immediate relatives, as, for instance, a mother, who would be paid this amount of money.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman would provide as they do in the matter of the Life-Saving Service, the money would go to the widows and children or dependent parents. In other words, when the Government gives this as a gratuity, the Government ought not to be called upon to contribute something by reason of the death of one of its employees to somebody who is not dependent on the person who dies or is killed, or to somebody who may be competent to take care of himself. The idea of the law is to take care of the widows and children and those dependent on those who die or are killed in the service of the Government; not to everybody who may be of kin to them. I do not feel like objecting, Mr. Speaker. It would be an ungracious thing to do. I suggest, however, to the consideration of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] that if this amendment is adopted it should be so framed as to take care of the people who were dependent on these clerks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on what is known as the Shackleford amendment and on what is known as the Barnhart amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands a separate vote on the Shackleford amendment and another separate vote on the Barnhart amendment. The Clerk will report the Shackleford amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on what is known as the Mann amendment for the Sunday closing of the post offices.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] demands a separate vote on the Mann amendment about closing post offices on Sunday. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment besides these three? If not, the Chair will put the rest of them in gross.

No other separate vote was demanded.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Shackleford amendment.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment, which is as follows:

On page 35, at the end of line 7, insert the following:

"That for the purposes of this act certain highways of the several States, and the civil subdivisions thereof, are classified as follows:

"Class A shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide composed of shells, vitrified brick, or macadam, graded, crowned, compacted, and maintained in such manner that it shall have continuously a firm, smooth surface, and all other roads having a road track not less than 9 feet wide of a construction equally smooth, firm, durable, and expensive, and continuously kept in proper repair. Class B shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track not less than 9 feet wide composed of burnt clay, gravel, or a proper combination of sand and clay, sand and gravel, or rock and gravel, constructed and maintained in such manner as to have continuously a firm, smooth surface. Class C shall embrace roads of not less than 1 mile in length upon which no grade shall be steeper than is reasonably and practicably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, with ample side ditches, so constructed and crowned as to shed water quickly into the side ditches, continuously kept well compacted and with a firm, smooth surface by dragging or other adequate means, so that it shall be reasonably passable for wheeled vehicles at all times. That whenever the United States shall use any highway of any State, or civil subdivision thereof, which falls within classes A, B, or C, for the purpose of transporting rural mail, compensation for such use shall be made at the rate of $25 per annum per mile for highways of class A, $20 per annum per mile for highways of Class B, and $15 per annum per mile for highways of class C. The United States shall not pay any compensation or toll for such use of such highways other than that provided for in this section, and shall pay no compensation whatever for the use of any highway not falling within classes A, B, or C. That any question arising as to the proper classification of any road used for transporting rural mail shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture. That the compensation herein provided for shall be paid at the end of each fiscal year by the Treasurer of the United States upon warrants drawn upon him by the Postmaster General to the officers entitled to the custody of the funds of the respective highways entitled to compensation under this act, under and in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed jointly by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General: Provided, however, That no payment shall be made under the provisions of this paragraph for the use of any privately owned or toll road.

"The provisions of this paragraph shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1913."

During the reading,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 136, noes 49.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

PARCEL POST.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, as an evidence that the people of this country want a general parcel post along the lines of the amendment I offered to the pending Post Office appropriation bill, and that I was right in what I said concerning the matter, I desire to read at this time a leading editorial from the New York Press, dated May 1, 1912:

PARCEL-POST ZONES.

Senator BOURNE proposes a zone system of charges in the parcel-post bill he has just introduced, with varying rates running up to 12 cents a pound for packages not more than 11 pounds carried farther than 2,000 miles. The lowest charge under the Bourne bill is 15 cents for an 11-pound package carried within the limits of a city. On the whole, the average rate of the Bourne bill is far lower than 8 cents a pound in the zones within 1,000 miles, except that the 1-pound package in the 1,000-mile zone pays 9 cents, but each additional pound at 5 cents brings the rate for the maximum package going that distance down to 59 cents as against the 88 cents it would cost under the Sulzer bill. Beyond the zones lying within 1,000 miles the rate, of course, is far higher than the uniform charge of 8 cents a pound for a maximum package of 11 pounds under the measure advocated by Representative SULZER, of New York.

But the Sulzer bill is preferable to the Bourne measure because it is based on the same idea as the uniform letter postage for all distances. That idea rests on the law proclaimed in 1837 by Rowland Hill and ever since adopted by the Governments of the world, and it is this: That once a public transport service is in operation the cost of its use is regardless of the distance traversed upon the moving machinery by any unit of traffic within its capacity.

In the debate on the parcel post a question was asked by Representative NORRIS which occurs to every one unfamiliar with the principle on which the uniform letter postage is based. It would cost 88 cents, under the Sulzer scheme, to send a package weighing 11 pounds across the river from Washington to Alexandria. Did not the gentleman think that charge would be exorbitant and unreasonable? Representative SULZER'S reply was: "No more so in comparison than the cost for a letter carried the same distance."

It is right that mail matter of all kinds should be carried on the uniform system of charges. No distinction should be made in principle between a letter and a package. If the same man shipping a package from Washington to Alexandria for 88 cents were to ship another package from Alaska to Portland, Me., the 88 cents would seem ridiculously low. But the cost of the service in the two cases put together would be met by the two charges for the service combined.

Senator BOURNE'S project is unwelcome not only because it would introduce into the postal scheme a principle at variance with one of its fundamentals but because it opens up a new avenue of discussion and delay. Like the proposition for the Government to buy out the express companies and assume their monopoly itself, the zone-system idea has the effect of distracting attention from the sound and simple program embodied in the general parcel-post measure which Representative SULZER has long been urging on Congress. That bill has the approval of many organizations representing millions of citizens. It is the program upon which all advocates of the parcel post who want to stop talking and establish that great public convenience are in full agreement. Senator BOURNE has done the country great service, and we regard the act of the Republicans of Oregon in retiring him from his seat at the recent primaries as altogether deplorable. But it was perhaps because of a belief on their part that his advocacy of the parcel-post principle was not effective that Mr. BOURNE was deprived of another term in the Senate.

Every Member of Congress who really wants t' parcel post will vote for the Sulzer bill. Anyone who votes against it will have difficulty in making the people believe that he is not interested in swelling the golden gains of the extortionate express monopoly.

Mr. Speaker, that editorial from one of the great progressive newspapers of this country speaks for itself and needs no further comment from me.

I now read another editorial, from the New York Evening Mail, dated May 1, 1912:

AN IMITATION PARCEL POST.

About the best that can be said for the parcel-post feature of the Post Office appropriation bill as approved by the House is that it is a makeshift, which is more likely to complicate than to simplify the whole question to which it relates.

The measure provides for an experimental parcel post for rural routes exclusively and a general system applicable to parcels of fourth-class mail matter not exceeding 11 pounds in weight. The rate for the general system is fixed at 12 cents a pound, as prescribed by the International Postal Union, but for the rural route system the rate is 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent for each additional pound.

The trouble with this arrangement is that it divides parcel-post traffic into two classes and prescribes a different rate for each. In other words, it proposes a discrimination in postal rates based solely on the route over which the traffic passes. In that respect it is a repudiation of the principle of uniformity in charges which governs the entire mail service.

It is amazing that this ill-considered measure should have received the approval of the House as against the Sulzer bill. The latter proposes a simple, businesslike parcel post, general in scope and uniform in rates. The people want it, but the express companies do not, and that explains what has happened.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, that editorial is from one of the leading Republican papers in this country. It tells the story, and I am glad to put it in the RECORD.

I now read another editorial from the New York Evening Mail, dated April 29, 1912:

GIVE US A REAL PARCEL POST.

As a demonstration of the art of making two bites of a cherry the creation of a limited parcel post, as proposed in the Post Office appropriation bill now before Congress, may be all right, but as a measure of business policy it is all wrong. If the parcel-post system is sound it should be general, not limited. The proposal for a limited system, together with the creation of a special commission to investigate its operation, is a shifty expedient that will please nobody bue the express companies, from whose extortions the public demands relief.

There is no need of an inquiry as to the desirability of a general parcel post. The value of the system is certified to by every Government that has adopted it. In its ramifications and efficiency our mail service is the best in the world, but in its provisions for carrying merchandise packages we are away behind even the smaller of the European countries. To establish a limited parcel post, confining the service to packages on particular routes, would be an injustice to the routes excluded. It would be like granting a 1-cent letter rate on certain routes and charging 2 cents on others.

The Sulzer bill embodies the true and business-like method of dealing with the matter. It proposes a general parcel-post system applicable to the entire mail service, without any frills or commissions. Naturally, the express companies are opposed to it, but that fact is one of the strongest arguments for its enactment.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, that editorial tells the truth, and I hope it will be read by the taxpayers of the country.

I now read an editorial, dated Monday, April 29, 1912, from the New York Evening Globe, a fearless independent newspaper in the city of New York:

FOR PARCEL POST.

Washington dispatches agree that the parcel post is now in good shape to be pushed. At the moment nothing better than the so-called experimental delivery on rural routes is expected at this session. There is no reason, however, why a great deal more should not be obtained. A definite proposal for a general distribution of packages is before the House. It is being seriously considered. The Postal Progress League and other influential bodies indorse it. It is necessary only that public opinion shall express itself in terms which the lawmakers will understand, as demanding that the interests of the people are superior to those of private concerns.

Early in the session the Post Office Committee suggested a two years' trial in the outlying districts. This was intended as a sop that would keep "excessive demands" in order and leave the express companies undisturbed. But the parcel-post men were not appeased. Refusing to accept what they regard as not even an experimental parcel post, they insisted on the real article or nothing. Mr. SULZER responded with a resolution, amending the committee's measure, which meets this requirement. It provides for the delivery of packages of as much as 11 pounds weight instead of only 4, at a postage of 8 cents a pound instead of 16. This is little better than a return to the conditions which the express companies induced Congress to change more than 30 years ago. But it is a very great advance. It would put us abreast of most other progressive countries in this important matter and, if Mr. SULZER'S estimates are correct, without cost to the country. He thinks, indeed, that such a service would show a handsome profit, and there is no reason to doubt the soundness of his prediction.

Naturally the express companies object. They have long enjoyed the advantages of a system their own servants among our lawmakers put upon the country. The profits they have got out of it have made them rich enough to be enormously powerful. They will spare no effort to preserve as long as possible a condition that suits them so well. Other selfish interests are with them in the fight to prevent the people from getting what they are entitled to.

All this opposition, however, can be overcome by a determined effort. No reasonable argument has to be met. No vested interest needs to be protected against unfair treatment. The shoe is on the other foot. Vested interests have had their way long enough. It is time the people had theirs. And they can have it if they will speak out. Usually it is difficult to get out a proposal that gives full effect to a popular desire. The Sulzer resolution is not ideal by any means, but it goes a long way in the right direction. With such a bill enacted the country would be committed to the principle and practice of a real parcel post.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, the editorial just read is a corroboration of all I have said in Congress on the subject of a general parcel post.

I now read a letter from the Farmers' National Congress:

[President: George M. Whitaker, 1404 Harvard Street NW., Washington, D. C. First vice president: C. F. Sanford, London, Ohio. Second vice president: R. H. Kirby, Dallas City, Ill. Treasurer: W. L. Ames, Oregon, Wis. Legislative agent: John M. Stahl, 6063 Jefferson Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Secretary: John H. Kimble, Port Deposit, Md. Assistant secretaries: O. D. Hill, Kendalia, W. Va.; Strod Hays, Newcastle, Ind.; J. H. Patten, Belton, S. C. Executive committee: Levi Morrison, Greenville, Pa.; A. C. Fuller, Dows, Iowa; L. C. Lawson, Clarks, Nebr. President, secretary, and treasurer, ex officio.]

FARMERS' NATIONAL CONGRESS, U. S. A.,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, 453 NEWTON STREET NW.,
Washington, D. C., April 29, 1912.

DEAR SIR: The representatives of the Farmers' National Congress have studied carefully the riders on the postal appropriation bill purporting to be a step in the further extension of the parcel-post business. But we are almost forced to believe that these provisions, if they become a law, may actually obstruct a reasonable development of the parcel-post system, and this may furnish an argument later on against a further extension of these facilities. Certain facts and speeches almost lead to the conclusion that some who favored these provisions did so with the purpose of defeating rather than promoting any increase of existing parcel-post facilities. We therefore believe that all real friends of enlarging the parcel-post system should vigorously oppose these riders and advocate something more extensive and something that will count for real parcel-post development.

Respectfully,
J. M. STAHL, Legislative Agent.
J. H. KIMBLE, Secretary.

Approved.
GEO. M. WHITAKER,
President Farmers' National Congress.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, that is all I want to say now on this subject, save to make this prediction. that in less than two years from to-day the people of this country will have a general parcel post, the express companies to the contrary notwithstanding. The struggle for this beneficial postal legislation is not ended. The fight has just begun and the people will win.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Mann Sunday closing amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 11, lines 24 and 25; in lieu of the amendment agreed to insert the following:

"In all, $37,878,000: Provided, That hereafter post offices of the first and second classes shall not be open on Sundays for the purpose of delivering mail to the general public; but this provision shall not prevent the prompt delivery of special-delivery mail."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. MANN. But I submit the gentleman can not move the previous question yet. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Am I not entitled to recognition for the purpose of offering a motion to recommit, representing the minority?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has pursued this course about that ever since he has been Speaker. If any gentleman on the committee which has charge of a bill desires to offer a motion to recommit, the Chair has generally recognized him, and the Chair thinks that that course ought to be pursued. On tariff bills the Chair has always recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], except at one time when he requested that the Chair recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], which the Chair did.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state whether he is opposed to the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. MADDEN. I move that the Post Office appropriation bill, No. 21279, now pending, be recommitted to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with instructions to strike out, on page 27, of the engrossed bill, line 15, and all following lines to and including line 26; and all of page 28; and all of page 29 down to line 24 on said page; and all of line 13 down to and including line 24 on page 33; and all of page 34 down to line 21; and to report the bill forthwith to the House so amended.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, and upon the previous question I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the previous question, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], on that motion, demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fifty-four gentlemen have risen; not a sufficient number.

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that is more than one-fifth of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but it requires one-fifth of those present to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. But I submit the Chair does not know how many are present without counting.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman demands the other side the Chair will order it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that without ordering the other side one-fifth of a quorum is sufficient to order the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The invariable practice is to take the last vote as an indication of those present, and, counting the last vote, it would take 64 members to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the other side. All opposed to ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-nine gentlemen have risen. On this vote the ayes are 54 and the noes are 189. One fifth having risen, the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If the previous question shall not prevail, would it then be in order to offer to amend the instructions by an amendment providing for parcel post?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is voted down, then any germane amendment to this motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LENROOT. Would an amendment providing for a parcel post be germane?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not called upon to pass upon the germaneness of any amendment until it is offered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 145, answered "present" 4, not voting 65, as follows:

Mr. KINDRED with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

For the session:

Mr. HOBSON with Mr. FAIRCHILD.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 206.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the amended bill pass?

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 227, noes 5.

So the bill as amended was passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4476. An act to provide for purchase of site, construction of wharf and buildings, and the necessary equipment for a depot for the sixth lighthouse district; and

S. 1337. An act authorizing the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Lloyd L. R. Krebs, late a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, a major in the Medical Corps on the retired list, and increasing the retired list by one for the purposes of this act.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4476. An act to provide for purchase of site, construction of wharf and buildings, and the necessary equipment for a depot for the sixth lighthouse district; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 1337. An act authorizing the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Lloyd L. R. Krebs, late a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, a major in the Medical Corps on the retired list, and increasing the retired list by one for the purposes of this act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LLOYD, Mr. ADAMSON, and Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 24023.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] rise?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent to make some remarks concerning this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The vote has not been announced.

Mr. ADAMSON. My understanding was that I was to be recognized, and I want to have a little conversation with the Speaker and the House about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state what the parliamentary situation was. By consent the House put the Panama Canal bill in the same status as an appropriation bill, with an agreement that general debate should run two days, and one day under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. There was no agreement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will withdraw that remark. The Speaker was not in the chair when the matter came up. So the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] is a privileged motion, and that would have made the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] also a privileged motion.

Now, if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] wants to make a remark, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better have the regular order. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

Mr. MANN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. I suppose that is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. ADAMSON. All I want to say is——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object to any statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make this statement on his own motion: That after this legislative bill is disposed of he will recognize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] to make his motion in preference to any other appropriation bills.

Mr. ADAMSON. If I could be permitted——

Mr. MANN. We have the regular order. We have rules to go by, and I would like to have them observed. It is not debatable.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Pending the announcement of the result of the vote I would like to see if we can come to some agreement as to general debate.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from South Carolina any proposition to make?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that when the committee rises this afternoon general debate be closed——

Mr. ADAMSON. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina (continuing). And that the time be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. I demanded the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has already objected, and that settles it.

The ayes have it, and the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in the chair.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to know if the statement of the Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. Has not the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry before the House goes into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The House has already resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is sustained. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will take the chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD took the chair amid general applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 24023—the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill—which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. BARTLETT. Not to be taken out of my time, however.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] is recognized for half a minute.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I had announced to several Members of the House that at this time I would ask for the consideration of the conference report on House joint resolution 39, providing for the election of Senators by direct vote of the people. I have just received a telegram from Mr. OLMSTED, one of the conferees, in which he says he can not be here to-day. Therefore I want to announce now that I shall not call up the matter until Saturday, but shall do it on Saturday immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, among the great questions that confront this Congress for solution in their capacity as representatives of a great people there is none, in my estimation, that should give us greater concern and that calls for wiser counsel than the immigration problem.

At this time I purpose for a few minutes to discuss in a limited way some phases of the question. What I shall say will be remarks addressed in advocacy of the bill on this subject recently reported to this House by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] being the chairman.

That the House may have before it the feature of the bill that I deem of prime importance I shall read so much of same as is necessary to have a fair understanding of the questions involved. The bill reads as follows:

That after four months from the approval of this act in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit: All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or the language or dialect of some other country, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted or any citizen of the United States may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relatives shall be permitted to land.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read or not the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with copies of uniform slips, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plain type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip.

SEC. 3. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of this act, to wit: (a) All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; (b) all aliens in transit through the United States; (c) all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

Mr. Chairman, it might be interesting to note the history of legislation on this subject.

From the year 1819 to 1882 immigration was practically unfiltered and there were very few, if any, restrictive laws against it.

There was good reason for this. The class of immigrants coming to us as late as 1880 came in the main from England, Scotland, Ireland, Germany, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark.

These people represented the strongest types of citizenship. They have proven themselves to be honest, conscientious, and industrious.

The illiteracy among them was of a far less percentage than among the immigrant class coming to-day, as I shall show by tables later on.

It is my pleasure to have in my district quite a number of German, Irish, Norwegian, and other such types of the earlier immigration period.

They abandoned the places of their nativity to cast their lot in a country of greater opportunities.

They have become naturalized citizens. They have purchased homes and are leading citizens in their respective communities.

The sturdy Irish, the industrious German and Norwegian and other like races are among our best farmers. Their farms are models, their homes attractive, and their lively interest in the welfare of their respective communities is not excelled by those of native birth.

We show our faith in them by honoring them with official positions, and they do not betray the trust.

They are our leading merchants and bankers and among our most honored and respected citizens.

They take a pride in our schools and willingly support and maintain them.

They are seldom hauled before our courts for infraction of the criminal law.

To this class of people, Mr. Chairman, we should always extend our open-hearted welcome. They are easily assimilable.

As late as 1880, 64.5 per cent of the immigrants to this country came of such stock.

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that this, being the type of immigrants settling among us, is why we find very little restrictive legislation on the subject until comparatively recent date.

In the main, then, our earlier immigration came from northern and western Europe.

Their Governments, as a rule, were of monarchical form. They loved law and order. They easily adjusted themselves to our system of government and had the intelligence to understand our institutions.

Our customs soon became theirs. Their children entered our schools and our language became their source of communication.

When taking the oath of allegiance to our Government, they once and for all abandoned allegiance to the countries of their birth.

In other words, they have willingly become Americanized.

Mr. Chairman, in recent years the conditions have changed, and a new state of affairs now confronts us.

The class of immigrants now coming to our shores is entirely different from that of the earlier period.

During the last 25 or 30 years the source of our immigration has largely shifted to southern and eastern Europe.

I can not do better, Mr. Chairman, to get a clear understanding of this feature of the subject that I am now discussing, than to read a brief statement from the report of the Immigration Commission.

The part I desire to read is as follows:

The old immigration movement was essentially one of permanent settlers. The new immigration is very largely one of individuals, a considerable proportion of whom apparently have no intention of permanently changing their residence, their only purpose in coming to America being to temporarily take advantage of the greater wages paid for industrial labor in this country. This, of course, is not true of all the new immigrants, but the practice is sufficiently common to warrant referring to it as a characteristic of them as a class. From all data that are available it appears that at least 40 per cent of the new immigration movement returns to Europe and at least 39 per cent remains there. This percentage does not mean that 30 per cent of the immigrants have acquired a competence and returned to live on it. Among the immigrants who return permanently are those who have failed, as well as those who have succeeded. Thousands of those returning have, under unusual conditions of climate, work, and food, contracted tuberculosis and other diseases; others are injured in our industries; still others are the widows and children of aliens dying here. These, with the aged and temperamentally unfit, make up a large part of the aliens who return to their former homes to remain.

The old immigration came to the United States during a period of general development and was an important factor in that development, while the new immigration has come during a period of great industrial expansion and has furnished a practically unlimited supply of labor to that expansion.

As a class the new immigrants are largely unskilled laborers coming from countries where their highest wage is small compared with the lowest wage in the United States. Nearly 75 per cent of them are males. About 83 per cent are between the ages of 14 and 45 years, and consequently are producers rather than dependents. They bring little money into the country and send or take a considerable part of their earnings out. More than 35 per cent are illiterate, as compared with less than 3 per cent of the old immigrant class.

Mr. Chairman, looking a little deeper into the change of source of immigration and investigating the class that is coming, we find an alarming state of affairs.

From a speech recently delivered in the other end of the Capitol by one of the Senators from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], I find this statement:

The percentage of illiteracy among the old immigrants—that is, those who antedated 1883—was only 2.7 per cent, far below that of our native population. The rate of illiteracy among the new immigrants, that which has been coming here since 1883, is on an average about 36 per cent, and the bulk of this immigration, the most undesirable portion of it, is of a much higher degree of illiteracy than the general average. Of the 1,500,000 south Italians that came to America from 1899 to 1909, over 800,000, or 54 per cent, could neither read nor write; 54 per cent of the Syrians who came during that period could neither read nor write; 35 per cent of the Poles who came during that period could neither read nor write; 68 per cent of the Portuguese, 38 per cent of the Ruthenians, 51 per cent of the Russians, 58 per cent of the Turks, 27 per cent of the Greeks, and 41 per cent of the Bulgarians and Servians and Montenegrins could neither read nor write.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I dislike not to yield, but I have but a limited time in which to make my remarks. After I have finished I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

This statement of the situation is indeed astounding. These people have no knowledge of our Government and but little, if any, understanding of that from which they came.

They do not know what responsibility should attach to citizenship. Our civilization is not theirs. From the very nature of their environments and the civilization from which they come they are unfitted to ever have cast upon them the responsibilities that go with a free and representative form of government. In fact, they do not come to us having any benign purpose of entering into the spirit of government and helping to bear her burdens.

The old immigrant came to become a part and parcel of our fabric. The new immigration come to gather together such a part of our American dollars as they may for the purpose of carrying it with them on their return or to send it back while yet they remain to gather more.

They are sending and taking two hundred and fifty to three hundred millions of dollars out of our country each year, to be planted in lands foreign to ours, and thus they are depleting our financial resources and taking from the real American laborer that which is his.

This is not all, Mr. Chairman. The facts are, with this unlimited horde coming to our shores from year to year and increasing in numbers with alarming rapidity, the future of the real American laborer is problematical indeed.

I have here a table showing the occupations of immigrants coming to this country during 1911. That year 1,030,300 aliens entered, and of that enormous number only 13,496 were farmers; 160,000 were farm laborers in their own country, but they did not seek farm employment here; 175,000 were common laborers; 122,000 were servants; 246,000 had no occupation at all, making in that year 735,000, or three-fourths of the entire immigration, who found their homes either in the slums of the great cities or were employed not upon the farms but in the industries of the country in congested centers.

In this connection I desire to read a page from Dr. Jenks's book with reference to the effect of this kind of competition upon the sanitary and safe conditions of the places where the employees of this country are employed:

Relative to the effect of recent immigration upon native American and older immigrant wage earners in the United States, it may be stated, in the first place, that the lack of industrial training and experience of the recent immigrant before coming to the United States, together with his illiteracy and inability to speak English, has had the effect of exposing the original employees to unsafe and insanitary working conditions, or has led to the imposition of conditions of employment which the native American or older immigrant employees have considered unsatisfactory and in some cases unbearable. When the older employees have found dangerous and unhealthy conditions prevailing in the mines and manufacturing establishments and have protested, the recent immigrant employees, usually through ignorance of mining or other working methods, have manifested a willingness to accept the alleged unsatisfactory conditions. In a large number of cases the lack of training and experience of the southern and eastern European affects only his own safety. On the other hand, his ignorant acquiescence in dangerous and insanitary working conditions may make the continuance of such conditions possible and become a menace to a part or to the whole of an operating force of an industrial establishment. In mining, the presence of an untrained employee may constitute an element of danger to the entire body of workmen. There seems to be a direct casual relation between the extensive employment of recent immigrants in American mines and the extraordinary increase within recent years in the number of mining accidents. It is an undisputed fact that the greatest number of accidents in bituminous coal mines arise from two causes: (1) The recklessness and (2) the ignorance and inexperience of employees. When the lack of training of the recent immigrant abroad is considered in connection with the fact that he becomes a workman in the mines immediately upon his arrival in this country and when it is recalled that a large proportion of the new arrivals are not only illiterate and unable to read any precautionary notices posted in the mines, but also unable to speak English, and consequently without ability to comprehend instructions intelligently, the inference is plain that the employment of recent immigrants has caused a deterioration in working conditions.

Those people are used to a lower standard of living to that enjoyed by the American laborer. Their highest wage scale in the countries from which they came does not equal our lowest wage scale.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Not just at this time. If I have time before my time is up, I will yield to the gentleman with great pleasure.

The result is these people band themselves together and live in cheap quarters in our great cities and congested centers, and go into the factories and the mines at a low wage scale that would not support an average American workman living according to American customs and surrounded by American conveniences.

This on-coming horde has driven the old immigrant from the factories and the mines to mines in the Central Western States or in altogether different line of work.

On the Republican side of the Chamber, in recent tariff discussions, we heard much of the dire distress that would befall the American laborer if the Democratic idea of tariff for revenue only was enacted into law. Yet, Mr. Chairman, an investigation of the immigration question shows that it is not tariff reduction that should and is alarming the American wage earner, but it is the unjust competition of the class of immigrants who are now displacing him in factory and in mine. [Applause.]

At this point I want to read, as bearing on this question, the following article from the North American. The author says:

Under the plea that the standard of living in the United States is higher than in any other country in the world, that the class of labor itself is better and that therefore greater wages must be paid, the manufacturers of textile products have succeeded for many years in buttressing themselves about with a tariff that is not only protective but exorbitant.

They have held the threat over the country that should the tariff be made lower the present high standard of living made possible by the lucrative wages now being paid must be lowered also. Quite a reverse picture is revealed by the situation at Lawrence.

We find upon investigation that the textile manufacturers have at these mills as squalid labor as can be found in the four corners of the earth. They pared down the wages of these people, not to meet the standard of living in the United States, but to the barest possible margin of existence.

In one miserable tenement building I found 54 persons living. Twenty-two of them worked in the mills at an average pay of $6.67 per week. This is $2.75 per week with which to buy food, clothes, light, and fuel, and pay rent for each one of the 54. These are luxuries which the mill laborers enjoy under the rich picking of a high protective tariff.

This is the condition of affairs our American laborer is up against, and from his real American soul comes the plaintive cry to protect him, his wife, and children from this immigrant horde.

There are thousands of evil consequences permeating every nook and corner of our country incident to these undesirables amongst us.

A look into the great hospitals and insane asylums of New York and other congested centers presents a picture of disease and insanity that is astounding.

That great city, the very gateway through which these people pass, is groaning under the great financial burdens incident to the proper upkeep of these institutions, filled to overflowing with the foreign element who ought to be wards of their native lands.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, there is neither let nor hindrance to stop the ever-increasing tide.

For the year 1910 the immigration was 1,041,570, of whom 223,453 were from Italy alone.

Most of these new immigrants come through Ellis Island, N. Y. Commissioner Williams, of Ellis Island, in an interview in the New York Herald of April 13, said:

The immigration this month has passed the high-water mark. In April last year, which was a big month and taxed the capacity of the department, 85,575 immigrants arrived at Ellis Island. In April of this year the total is expected to be more than 100,000 immigrants, which will be the record for the department.

* * * * * * * *

In March of this year 83,654 immigrants arrived, as against 75,306 of last year.

With the inadequate facilities for examination of these vast numbers, who come in during the spring months especially, thousands of diseased, feeble-minded, and otherwise undesirable immigrants are coming in every year. Commenting on the conditions referred to, the Herald in the same article says:

Recently the Herald published statistics showing that more than 60 per cent of the occupants of charitable institutions and insane asylums in New York were foreign born. * * * From the plague-ridden districts of eastern and southern Europe thousands of immigrants are coming here every week. There is no question that many of them are suffering with diseases characteristic of their country, and not a few are in the early stages of consumption.

The New York Times of March 28, 1912, says:

INSANE ALIENS.

The Times is informed by Secretary McGarr, of the State Commission in Lunacy, that, of the 31,432 insane patients under treatment in the 14 State hospitals on February 10 last, 13,163, or 41.9 per cent, were aliens. Foreign-born patients have increased since the Federal census of December 31, 1903, by 1,552, or 13.4 per cent. In the two State hospitals for the criminal insane there were 1,230 patients on February 10, of whom nearly 44.4 per cent were of alien birth; the Federal census of 1910 showed a percentage of aliens to total population in this State of 29.9 per cent.

The prevalence of insanity among immigrants is evidently much greater than among the native born. Of the 5,700 patients admitted to the civil hospitals for the year ending September 30, 1911, 2,737, or 48 per cent, were aliens, and 1,481, or 26 per cent, were of alien parentage, while only 1,224, less than 26 per cent, were of native stock. Of the whole number, the nativity of but 218, which is 3.8 per cent, was not ascertainable. Insanity among the foreign peoples of this city occurs in a still larger percentage of cases. Of the first admissions to the hospitals 2,006 out of 3,221 residents of the city were of foreign birth; that is, 64.1 per cent, although the foreign-born population is but 40.4 per cent of the whole.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I regret I can not. I had only 30 minutes allowed me. If I have time when I have finished I will yield to the gentleman.

From the record, as best I can judge it, Mr. Chairman, the great steamship and transportation companies, and it is believed great factory and mining interests, all bent on personal gain, are united in one great effort to induce these undesirables to flock to our shores.

Agents of these steamship companies, with much attractive advertisement, are industriously circulating through the countries of southern and eastern Europe and gathering together this ignorant horde, like the ranchman of our Texas prairies gathers his herd in the season of spring.

Their motive, financial gain.

Commission to agents, large transportation charges to the steamship lines, and cheap labor to the factory and the mine. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, this course of conduct is an unpardonable sin against American traditions and the American people.

Already the congested centers are feeling the heavy burdens incident to the present system, and are beginning to cast about for a plan to distribute the ever-increasing population throughout other sections of the country.

I speak for my people in the great fruit and agricultural belt of Texas. We do not want this ignorant class of citizenship to mar and contaminate our present happy conditions.

Some one has well said that probably the most potential force is represented by agriculture. Yet on this question all the farmers' organizations, the Grange, the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, having over 3,000,000 members, and the various labor organizations all over this country are passing resolutions unqualifiedly indorsing this bill, and demanding of Congress that this country of ours be no longer the dumping ground for the illiterate and criminal element that has, through the past 25 years, had such freedom of access to our shores.

The Immigration Commissioners, appointed in pursuance to act of Congress in 1907, have given most comprehensive consideration to all phases of this question.

Experts have gone into every detail of the problem. One million dollars has been spent by this commission in this detailed investigation, and 42 volumes of information have been gathered together covering the various questions involved. This commission with practical unanimity recommends the enactment of the literacy test found in this bill.

I have discussed the measure largely from an economic standpoint. But a more important phase presents itself—the perpetuity of our free institutions is involved.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said by some writer on political economy that an ignorant voter, with a ballot in his hand, is a greater menace to our Government than a mercenary legislator.

In a large measure this is true, for it is to the superstition, prejudice, and ignorance of such voters that a corrupt legislator must appeal with any hope of success, and it is by the use of such ballots in the main that demagogues are too often given responsible official positions. Our greatest safeguards for the perpetuity of our representative system of government is an educated and enlightened citizenship.

This is recognized as an axiomatic truth, and is firmly attested by the great interest our people are taking in every section of our beloved country in advancing our public and private school systems in every community in the land.

Where is there a State in this Union that has not a public-school system supported by taxes voluntarily levied and willingly paid by the suffragens themselves? What State of this Union is without a great university as a capstone to its educational system? Then, too, your normal colleges and schools for technical training too numerous to mention.

All these, Mr. Chairman, supported by tribute from the people, that our boys may become educated suffragens and our girls, by proper training of mind and heart, may demonstrate the truth of the old adage, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world."

I might remark in passing that motherhood's duty is well done when she trains in the home her sons and her daughters for the duties of the hour, and she is the uncrowned queen to whom I bow in reverence, and the personal exercise of the ballot by her can add nothing to her glory in my estimation. [Applause.]

Hundreds of millions of dollars are spent annually for the support and maintenance of this great school system. We love our children and count not the cost. We reverence our Government and want it to live. We prepare our own flesh and blood to intelligently guide the old ship of state, and to them we shall transmit this Republic that has been successfully launched and inherited from our fathers. [Applause.]

That it may survive, an intelligent and educated citizenship must be the custodian of its affairs.

I am American through and through. I honor the traditions and history of our country. I believe in her institutions. For her future I have the most sanguine hopes, notwithstanding the socialistic cry and the constant pratings of the self-righteous demagogues. Ours is the duty of the hour. Let foreigners who desire better conditions, who are tired of their systems of government, and who are real men desiring to become a part of the warp and woof of our structure, have such enlightenment as to become real responsible citizens and let this illiteracy test be enacted into law for our protection. [Applause.]

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, aliens who have proper motives and desiring citizenship among us should yield unreservedly in mind and heart to our theories of government. It has been established by the blood of our fathers and safeguarded through the years by the wisdom of our statesmen and supported by the honest yeomanry of our country. [Applause.]

She stands to-day a giant among the nations of earth—guaranteeing liberty of speech, thought, and action, and when her blessings are sought by those of alien birth they should yield to her requirements, obey her laws. They must be Americanized or else we shall become foreignized. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman used?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five minutes. There are five minutes yet remaining.

Mr. BARTLETT. I reserve that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have 20 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 30 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I yield so much of the 30 minutes as he may desire to my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I received a petition, with resolutions in it, that were adopted by the State Prohibition Convention in the State of Mississippi, with the request that I present them to this House. In those resolutions, after several recitations, I notice this language:

> The issuance of Federal revenue licenses, although a revenue measure, can not be viewed otherwise than as bringing our Government into partnership and complicity with the traffic. What the Government would lose in revenue would, as the Supreme Court of the United States has said, be compensated for a thousandfold in the peace, prosperity, and happiness of our people. However, if licenses are to be issued, the Federal statutes should be so amended as to give them no validity, and make them no protection when business thereunder is carried on in dry territory.

Mr. Chairman, the Prohibition State convention in Mississippi was evidently laboring under the erroneous impression, which is very popular in this country, that the Federal Government issues licenses to retail liquor dealers. That is not true. The Federal Government has not issued licenses to retail liquor dealers for nearly 50 years; and under the old law, when licenses were issued, there was always a provision in the law which met exactly the contention of the Prohibition convention, that those licenses should have no validity and give no protection when business thereunder was carried on in dry territory.

The act of 1794 was the very first excise act that carried a tax on retail liquor dealers and provided for licenses, but in that law there was this proviso:

> Provided always, That no license shall be granted to any person to sell wines or foreign distilled spirituous liquors who is prohibited to sell the same by the laws of any State.

That act was repealed in 1802, but during the War of 1812 a similar act was passed, which also required a license, that contained this proviso:

> Provided always, That no license shall be granted to any person to sell wine, distilled spirituous liquors, or merchandise, as aforesaid, who is prohibited to sell the same by any State.

That act was repealed in 1817.

In 1862, in the course of the Civil War, Congress again passed a similar excise law, this, too, like its predecessors, providing for licenses; but that act contained the proviso:

> That no license hereinbefore provided for, if granted, shall be construed to authorize the commencement or continuing of any trade, business, occupation, or employment therein mentioned within any State or Territory outside of the United States which shall be specially prohibited by the laws thereof or in violation of the laws of any State or Territory.

In 1864 the act of 1862 was amended, but exactly the same proviso was carried.

In the License cases, which are reported in Fifth Wallace, page 462, and which arose under the act of 1864, the court said:

> This series of propositions and the conclusion in which it terminates depend on the postulate that a license necessarily confers an authority to carry on the licensed business. But do the licenses required by the acts of Congress for selling liquor and lottery tickets confer any authority whatever?
>
> It is not doubted that where Congress possesses constitutional power to regulate trade or intercourse it may regulate by means of licenses as well as in other modes, and in case of such regulation a license will give to the licensee authority to do whatever is authorized by its terms.
>
> But very different considerations apply to the internal commerce or domestic trade of the States. Over this commerce and trade Congress has no power of regulation nor any direct control. This power belongs exclusively to the States.
>
> But it is not necessary to regard these laws as giving such authority. So far as they relate to trade within State limits, they give none and can give none. * * * The granting of a license, therefore, must be regarded as nothing more than a mere form of imposing a tax. * * * But, as we have already said, these licenses give no authority; they are mere receipts for taxes.

And so, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly clear that even under the old statutes, when the word "license" was used, no right, power, or authority was given, or attempted to be given, by Congress to those who were so "licensed" to pursue the business of selling liquor in any State contrary to the laws of such State. By an express proviso in every act, from the first one, in 1794, down to and including the last act in which the word "license" appears, which was the act of 1864, Congress expressly provided that the license should not authorize the licensee to sell liquor in any State contrary to the local law; and in the License cases the Supreme Court of the United States declared that Congress had no power to do so if it so desired.

In 1866, however, Congress struck out the word "license" and inserted in the place thereof the words "special tax," and since that time the Government has issued no license and has attempted to give to nobody any authority in any State to sell liquor contrary to the laws of the State, or in conformity with the laws of the State, for that matter.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. What has been the difference in the actual, practical operation since the change of the name from "license" to "tax," so far as the Government is concerned?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If I catch the point of the gentleman's question, when this tax was called a license it was insisted that in view of the fact that the Federal Government had no constitutional power to license a business of that sort in a State, therefore the Federal Government had no right to collect the tax. That contention was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, and in the cases usually called the License cases, which I have just cited, the court held that it was not a license at all in any such sense, but was a tax that parties in the States who were engaged in the business of retail liquor dealing were required to pay.

In order, I suppose, that nobody might be further misled, Congress in 1866, as I was about to explain, reenacted practically the excise laws that had existed theretofore, but struck out that provision of the statute which required—> that all persons hereafter who shall engage in any of the enumerated businesses shall take out a license—

And in lieu of that inserted—> shall pay a special tax—

So that no man might be deceived thereafter by believing that he had received a license.

Now, since that time, nearly 50 years ago, the Government has issued no license which could be misconstrued as giving anybody any authority to go into the States, or any protection, if they sold liquor in a State where it was forbidden by the laws of that State.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I suggest to the gentleman that that same act, or a similar act, contained a provision that the tax should not authorize a man to sell liquor in a prohibition State?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have read that; that proviso is in every statute that has been enacted since 1794. Do I answer the question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY]?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Yes; quite fully, and I quite agree with the gentleman as to the technical distinction. It was a revenue measure, in the first instance, and called a license. To meet certain decisions of the Supreme Court, as well as to enable the Government to continue the collection of the revenue and yet not be in conflict with the decisions of the Supreme Court, it was changed in name from "license" into "special tax," as it is now called, but carried with it no express permission to sell liquor.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The court held that it never had been a license that would carry any authority with it. Although it was called a license, as a matter of fact, it was simply a tax, and Congress subsequently struck out the word "license" and inserted the words "special tax."

Mr. RODDENBERY. And therefore it is as much of a license now as it had ever been.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It never had been a license in fact, and is not now.

Mr. RODDENBERY. In reference to the petition which the gentleman presents from the Prohibitionists in Mississippi, the use of the word "Government licenses" is technically erroneous; but to all intents and purposes it is as correct now as it ever would have been to have called it a license.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; it is not. It is technically and absolutely wrong now. It was technically correct prior to the act of 1866, because prior to that act the Government did issue a license. Since then they have not issued licenses. It is true the license issued was decided by the court not to be such a license as would give authority to any person to sell liquor contrary to State law. Since then no license whatever has been issued by name or otherwise.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the tax levied and collected now protect the holder against any proceeding by the Government just as much as it did when it was called a license?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Every bit; but it never did and does not now afford any protection against proceedings by the State.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. KENDALL. The certificate or receipt which the Government issues now to a retail liquor dealer is substantially what it was when the business was first organized.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In the form of the receipt?

Mr. KENDALL. It was never intended to afford to a local liquor dealer any immunity against prosecution for violating local law?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Never.

Mr. KENDALL. All it was designed to do was to evidence the fact that he had paid the tax imposed by the Government upon the operation of the right to do the business.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is all.

Mr. KENDALL. I have introduced a bill which is intended to have the Government abandon the business of issuing revenue licenses or collecting revenue taxes in prohibition communities, but I have not been able to get any action on it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In the Fifty-eighth Congress I introduced a similar bill, but I was soon convinced that I was following the wrong route. The Government of the United States does not render any assistance to any man who goes into a State and sells liquor in contravention of State law. On the contrary, the Government assists the State, as the law stands to-day, in running down such violators and bringing them to justice, and it does it in this way.

Under the old law the States passed statutes, as they had the right to do, making the issuance of these tax receipts prima facie evidence of a violation of the State law, and the State authorities called upon the internal-revenue collector to furnish them with the evidence, which he refused to do. The court thereupon held that he would have to show his records, because no specific order had been issued by the Treasury Department forbidding him to do so. That case was decided in the Seventy-fourth Federal Reporter, page 928, in the case entitled In re Hirsch. Then the Internal Revenue Commissioner issued this order:

> Collectors are hereby prohibited from giving out any special-tax records or any copies thereof to private persons or to local officers, or to produce such records or copies thereof in a State court, whether in answer to subpœnas duces tecum or otherwise. Whenever such subpœnas shall have been served upon them they will appear in court and answer thereto, and respectfully decline to produce the records called for, on the ground of being prohibited therefrom by the regulations of this department.

Mr. KENDALL. There is an order subsequent to that, is there not?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There is an order subsequent to that; I think issued last year. The Internal Revenue Commissioner was called upon to go into court and give these records subsequent to this order, which he refused to do, and that proposition finally got into court. The court upheld him in that. That case went up from Arkansas, and the style of the case was In re Lamberton, decided in One hundred and twenty-fourth Federal Reporter. Judge Rogers decided the case, and he upheld the right of the Internal Revenue Commissioner to refuse to give these records to the State court. An effort was made then in Congress to correct that situation.

The particular bill which passed was the one which I myself had introduced, and it required the internal-revenue collector to open these records to inspection by State authorities and to give proper certificates. An Executive order, I understand, has since been issued compelling him to do the same thing. So that now the fact is that when a person in a State where the sale of liquor is forbidden by law pays this special tax the record of that is kept, and that record is made public and is turned over to the State authorities upon request, and in many instances is made prima facie evidence of guilt. So that as the law stands to-day, instead of the Federal Government assisting the illicit retailer, it does exactly the contrary. The Federal Government lends its assistance to the State, so that when the tax is paid the record of that fact is at once available under the law and must be turned over to the State authorities, and then the State authorities, acting upon that, can and do in a number of States proceed with the prosecution, having in their possession this prima facie evidence of guilt.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman at that point?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In one moment. I have gotten very far away from the purpose for which I took the floor. My purpose was simply to say that, so far as the law is concerned, so far as Congress has been able to act at all, it has in every statute enacted since 1794 expressly provided that the authority granted by the internal-revenue license, when it was a license, should not protect the seller in a State where he violated the State laws by the sale, and in 1866, about the time of the decision in the License cases, Congress, in order that no man might be deceived by the mere term "license," struck that out of the statute books, and then provided:

> The payment of any tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws for carrying on any trade or business shall not be held to exempt any person from any penalty or punishment provided by the laws of any State for carrying on the same within such State, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such trade or business contrary to the laws of such State, or in places prohibited by municipal law; nor shall the payment of any such tax be held to prohibit any State from placing a duty or tax on the same trade or business for State or other purposes.

That is now section 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the weakness of the situation in regard to affording information. It is provided that the information may be afforded on request, but these taxes are paid from time to time, and one never knows when they are going to be paid. They are not paid all at one time. They are paid at irregular intervals, and if the prosecuting attorney or the judge desire to be adequately informed they would have to write every day to know whether in that county or locality any of these taxes had been paid. Collectors charge a fee before they furnish this information, so that really the law at present is not aiding very much the prosecution in these cases. If you would provide that the moment the tax is paid the collector shall immediately forward information of that fact to the prosecuting attorney and the judge of the appropriate locality, then you would meet the situation. But as it is, it is imperfectly and inadequately met.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will agree to that, but I do not agree to the last statement at all.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What is that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is has amounted to very little assistance——

Mr. SAUNDERS. I come from a community where there is as much——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will permit me for a moment—I also come from that kind of a community, and I expect that everybody in this House comes from that kind of a community. In my State the law requires the peace officer—the sheriff—to ascertain from the internal-revenue collector's office of that district the names of all those who have paid these taxes and publish them in the newspapers, and the courts meet every six months——

Mr. SAUNDERS. He gets that information to-day of what anybody has paid, but the very next day there may be a half a dozen who pay, and that information is not afforded.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman understands if a man pays the tax to-morrow he is just as guilty as if he did it day before yesterday.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Absolutely.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And the tax is for a year when it is paid, and if the sheriff gets a list every six months, which is required in my State, when the grand jury meets, whether the court meets once in six months or once in three months, it is there to be acted upon, and it has done a tremendous good, in my opinion.

Mr. KENDALL. I desire to say to the gentleman that the law in Iowa provides that the list of retail dealers shall be furnished to the county attorneys of the different counties, and the fact that a man holds a retail liquor receipt is presumptive evidence of guilt. I am very glad to say in this presence that that statute has been of very effective value in the State of Iowa in the enforcement of the laws against the illegal traffic in intoxicating liquors, and we have not encountered the difficulty there suggested by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Well, I am very glad to hear that. It has certainly done tremendous good in the State of Mississippi, and now when a man pays the tax he is informed upon at once. If he fails to pay it, he has two sovereignties after him, the State and the Federal Government. Now, Mr. Chairman, I had no notion of taking up this much of the time of the House, because I have gotten very far from what I had intended to call to your attention. Congress has gone a long way in my opinion. Congress has kept pretty well abreast of public sentiment on the liquor question so far as its legislation is concerned, and if the Prohibitionists throughout the country would direct their activities first against the State legislatures, and then upon the peace officers in their own communities, and assist them in executing the law, they would accomplish very much more than by depending upon further legislation along these lines by Congress. Congress has kept up with the States in this character of legislation, and the failure, where there is a failure, in the execution of prohibition laws is not chargeable, in my opinion, to Congress, but is chargeable to the lack of vigilance or the defects of the laws in the States themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. KENDALL. And to the local officers, nine-tenths of them.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, on the first day of the present session of this Congress I introduced a bill to abolish the Commerce Court and to amend the existing law so as to limit the issuance of preliminary injunctions in suits brought against the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The bill I introduced was reported favorably by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the 29th of March, 1912, and I now read same for the information of the House:

A bill to abolish the Commerce Court, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc. That an act entitled "An act to create a Commerce Court, and to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910, be amended by striking out sections 1 to 6, inclusive, and paragraph 12 of section 13 thereof, and inserting in lieu of said sections 1 to 6, inclusive, and said paragraph 12 the following:

"SECTION 1. That on and after the passage of this act the jurisdiction vested in the Commerce Court in and by said act of June 18, 1910, shall be transferred to and vested in the district courts of the United States.

"Any suit brought to invoke such jurisdiction shall be brought in the circuit of the United States where one of the common carriers who is a party to said suit has its principal operating office, unless said office is in the District of Columbia, in which case said suit shall be brought in the circuit where such carrier has its principal office, and the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to expedite the hearing and determination of suits in equity pending or hereafter brought under the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, or any other acts having a like purpose that may be hereafter enacted, approved February 11, 1903,' shall apply to any and all such suits.

"SEC. 2. That a final judgment or decree of a district court in any such suit may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States if appeal to the Supreme Court be taken by an aggrieved party within 60 days after the entry of such final judgment or decree. Such appeal may be taken in like manner as appeals from a district court of the United States to the Supreme Court are now taken in other suits. The Supreme Court may affirm, reverse, or modify such final judgment or decree, as the case may require. Such appeal, however, shall in no case operate to supersede or stay the judgment or decree appealed from.

"An appeal may also be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from an interlocutory order or decree of a district court granting or continuing an injunction restraining, staying, or suspending enforcement of an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, provided such appeal be taken within 30 days after the entry of such order or decree.

"Appeals to the Supreme Court under this section shall have priority in hearing and determination over all other causes except criminal causes in that court.

"SEC. 3. That any suit brought to enforce, or to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, except orders for the payment of money, shall be brought in the name of the commission, or against the commission by name, as the case may be. The pendency of such suit shall not of itself stay or suspend the operation of the order of the commission, but the court may suspend, in whole or in part, the operation of the commission's order pending final hearing and determination of the suit if the court entertains grave doubt concerning the validity of the order and is of the opinion that irreparable injury to the party or parties against whom the order is made will ensue if such order of suspension is not granted. No preliminary injunction, restraining order, or stay order so suspending the operation of an order of the commission shall be made by the court otherwise than as above and on hearing after not less than 5 days' notice to the commission, and no order of the court so suspending the operation of an order of the commission shall continue in force for more than 90 days. In case the court shall so suspend the operation of an order of the commission, the court shall state in its order of suspension the particular or particulars wherein it entertains such doubt concerning the validity of the commission's order, and point to the evidence upon which it bases its opinion that irreparable injury to the party or parties against whom the order is made will ensue if such order of suspension is not granted, and state the nature of the injury.

"SEC. 4. That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall appoint a solicitor, who shall receive an annual salary of $10,000, payable out of the appropriation for the commission in the same manner that salaries fixed by the commission are paid.

"Said solicitor shall, under the direction of the commission, have full charge and control, on behalf of the commission, in the courts of the United States, including the Supreme Court, of any and all suits brought to enforce, or to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend, any order or orders of the commission, except orders for the payment of money, and of any and all other suits instituted in court by or against the commission, and the commission may from time to time employ such attorneys as it may deem necessary to assist said solicitor in the conduct of such suits, and fix the compensation to be paid to such attorneys, which compensation shall be paid out of the appropriation for the commission: Provided, That any party interested in any order involved in any such suit may intervene in and become a party to said suit and be represented by his, its, or their own counsel therein under such rules, regulations, and practices as are now in effect in equity courts of the United States.

"Any and all costs taxed against the commission, and any expense incurred on behalf of the commission, in any suit instituted in court as aforesaid, shall be paid out of the appropriation for the commission.

"SEC. 5. That all cases pending in the Commerce Court at the date of passage of this act shall be transferred forthwith to said district courts. Each of said cases shall be transferred to the district court wherein it might have been filed at the time it was filed in the Commerce Court if this act had then been in effect, and if it might have been filed in any one of two or more district courts it shall be transferred to that one of said district courts which may be designated by the petitioner or petitioners in said case, or, upon failure of said petitioners to act in the premises within 10 days after the passage of this act, to such one of said district courts as may be designated by the judges of the Commerce Court.

"SEC. 6. That if any carrier fails or neglects to obey any order of the commission other than for the payment of money while the same is in effect, the Interstate Commerce Commission may apply to any district court of the United States, in the circuit wherein such carrier has its principal operating office, unless such office is in the District of Columbia, in which case such application shall be to the district court in the circuit wherein the carrier has its principal office, for the enforcement of such order. If after hearing that court determines that the order was regularly made and duly served, and that the carrier is in disobedience of the same, the court shall enforce obedience to such order by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such carrier, its officers, agents, or representatives from further disobedience of such order, or to enjoin upon it or them obedience to the same.

"SEC. 7. That any act or parts of any act in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage, except that the judges of the Commerce Court shall have authority to make any and all orders and to take any other action necessary to transfer as aforesaid the cases then pending in the Commerce Court to said district courts."

Mr. Chairman, this bill repeals the first six sections and paragraph 12 of section 13 of the act of June 18, 1910, establishing a Commerce Court. Those sections created that court, specified its duties and methods of procedure, and defined its jurisdiction. Stated somewhat more in detail, the provisions of the various sections were as follows:

Section 1 creates the Commerce Court, defines its jurisdiction, provides for the appointment of its judges and other officers, specifies the localities in which and the methods by which proceedings before this court shall be conducted.

Section 2 provides for an appeal from a final judgment or decree of the Commerce Court to the Supreme Court of the United States, and also an appeal from an interlocutory order of the Commerce Court granting a temporary injunction.

Section 3 directs that suits brought to enjoin the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be against the United States.

Treats of the granting of temporary injunctions and restraining orders, both by the court and by an individual member of the court.

Section 4 provides that all proceedings which have hitherto been brought in the name of or against the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be brought henceforth in the name of or against the United States, and that the United States may intervene in suits then pending by or against the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Section 5 provides that the Attorney General shall have charge of all suits brought to enforce the act to regulate commerce, and also of all suits brought to enjoin an order of the commission, but gives to the commission itself the right to intervene in proceedings attacking its orders, and also permits interested parties, whether individuals, associations, or communities, to be heard in those proceedings.

Section 6 provides for the transfer of cases pending in the various circuit courts to the Commerce Court.

Also requires common carriers to appoint agents resident in the city of Washington, upon whom service can be made.

Paragraph 12 of section 13 provides that the Attorney General may, in case the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission is not complied with, apply to the proper district court for a mandatory process to compel such obedience.

The general purpose of this bill is to restore matters to the status which they occupied previous to the passage of the Commerce Court act in so far as that act provided for a Commerce Court. The sections in this bill in detail are as follows:

Section 1 transfers the jurisdiction of the Commerce Court to the district courts of the United States. It will be borne in mind that the district courts now exercise the functions discharged by the circuit courts when the Commerce Court was created.

States the venue in which suits attacking orders of the commission shall be laid and provides that the expediting acts shall apply to these suits.

Section 2 provides for an appeal from the district court to the Supreme Court within 60 days from the entry of a final judgment or decree, and that the Supreme Court may affirm, reverse, or modify such final judgment or decree.

Also provides for an appeal to the Supreme Court from any interlocutory order or decree of the district court granting or continuing a temporary injunction.

Provides that appeals to the Supreme Court shall have priority over all other causes except criminal causes.

Section 3 provides that any suit brought to enforce or set aside an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, except orders for the payment of money, shall be brought in the name of the commission or against the commission.

The district court is allowed to grant a temporary injunction or restraining order only in case that court entertains grave doubt concerning the validity of the order and is of the opinion that irreparable injury to the party or parties against whom the order is made will ensue if such order of suspension is not granted.

The district court is required to state in its order temporarily enjoining the order of the commission the particular or particulars in which it entertains such doubt, and to point out the evidence upon which it bases its opinion that irreparable injury will ensue.

Section 4 creates the office of solicitor of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who shall have charge of the litigation of the commission both in the district courts and before the Supreme Court.

Further provides for the employment of attorneys by the commission to assist its solicitor in the conduct of its litigation.

There is a further provision that any interested party may intervene in any suit brought to set aside the commission's order.

Costs taxed against the commission and all expenses incurred by the commission in the course of this litigation are paid from the appropriation of the commission.

Section 5 transfers all cases pending in the Commerce Court at the date of the passage of the act to the several district courts. Each case is to be transferred to that district court in which it might have been brought at the time it was filed in the Commerce Court. In case it might have been brought in one or two or more districts, it shall be transferred to that one which may be designated by the petitioners. If the petitioners do not so designate within 10 days from the passage of this act, then the judges of the Commerce Court shall designate the district court.

Section 6 provides that if a carrier fails or neglects to obey an order of the commission, the commission may make application to a district court in the district where the carrier has its principal operating office, and requires the court, if the order has been regularly made and duly served, to enforce the same by mandatory process.

Section 7 repeals acts in conflict with the provisions of this bill.

Section 8 provides that this act shall take effect from its passage, except that the judges of the Commerce Court shall have the necessary authority to make orders transferring to the appropriate district courts the cases pending in the Commerce Court at the time of the passage of the act.

If this bill is passed, the law will stand, in the main, as it did before the act creating the Commerce Court, with, however, two substantial exceptions, namely, temporary injunctions and the conduct of the litigation of the commission.

The act of 1906 gave to the circuit courts authority to grant an injunction restraining the operation of the order of the commission temporarily, pending litigation before the circuit court. This bill allows the granting of such a temporary injunction only in case where the court "entertains grave doubt concerning the validity of the order and is of the opinion that irreparable injury to the party or parties against whom the order is made will ensue if such order of suspension is not granted."

It seems evident that when a case has been deliberately heard and decided, the order of the commission should not be lightly, or as a matter of course, set aside. Up to the time that order is made the public has practically no relief from the unlawful rate or practice. If the order is enjoined, the public in most cases can obtain no complete relief against what happens pending the litigation in court.

In a case where one of two parties must suffer it seems but reasonable that the decision of the tribunal appointed to determine the question shall prevail, pending an appeal to the courts.

This bill attempts to reach that end by inhibiting courts from issuing these temporary restraining orders except in cases of "grave doubt."

Congress can without doubt enact that such temporary injunctions shall only continue for a certain time, provided that that time is a reasonable one within which to dispose of the matter upon its merits. It has always seemed to many people that the only effective restraint which can be put upon the power of the court in the granting of these temporary injunctions was to limit the life of the injunction itself. This bill does that by providing that no temporary order shall continue in effect for more than 90 days. This length of time is sufficient in which to try all questions presented to the district courts upon their merits, and the effect of it will be to expedite in the only sure way by which that can be done—the disposition of these questions in the district courts whenever a temporary injunction is granted.

This bill also provides that the court in issuing its temporary injunction shall state the reasons upon which it proceeds, and this is an important provision.

Contrary to the general equity rule, the commission is allowed by the terms of this bill to appeal from an interlocutory order of the district court granting a temporary injunction. It is plain that such an interlocutory order might be granted as a simple exercise of discretion, or it might be granted for some substantial reason. The court might find some defect in the order of the commission or in the proceedings which led up to that order which would invalidate the order, but which could be readily remedied by the commission in some subsequent proceeding. If, now, the court is required to state the ground upon which it acts in the granting of the temporary injunction the commission can determine, first, whether it will stand upon its present order and, second, whether if it elects to do so the substantial question involved can be presented by an appeal from the interlocutory order of the district court.

Mr. Chairman, it was somewhat doubtful under the law as it stood previous to June 18, 1910, to what extent the Interstate Commerce Commission could participate in the conduct of litigation to which it was a party. While the commission was habitually represented by its own attorneys in these proceedings, it is probable that a strict interpretation of the statute would have placed authority over this litigation in the Department of Justice. The act creating a Commerce Court did this in express terms. The present bill vests in the commission exclusive authority over all litigation to which it is a party either as a complainant or a defendant.

The commission is not a part of the executive branch of this Government, but is really the arm of Congress. The Supreme Court has said that the fixing of an interstate rate or practice is a legislative function. Congress might, by direct enactment, discharge that duty, or it may, as it has done, commit it to some tribunal. The commission reports directly to Congress and not to the President.

Questions with which the commission deals are not law questions; they are rate questions, to the proper solution of which a knowledge of law is but little helpful. To present these questions to the courts it is necessary first of all to have a competent understanding of the facts. The commission knows what it intended to accomplish in a particular instance and how it intended to accomplish that purpose. It can explain the connection of one decision with another and the effect of its decisions upon general commercial and transportation conditions. It is almost essential that the attorney who manages these matters in court shall be in close touch with the commission and in full accord with its purposes and efforts.

This has always been recognized in the past, and until the present Attorney General took office the commission has always, at the request of the Department of Justice, managed, in the main, its own legal matters, either by attorneys regularly employed by it or by special counsel engaged for that purpose. This bill proposes to give the commission authority to do what it has always done in fact up to the last three or four years and what it must do in some form if its litigation is to be properly conducted.

The present system, which permits the Attorney General to virtually overrule the orders of this commission when they are objected to by the carrier, is an apparent absurdity.

The first section of this bill makes the various expediting acts applicable to suits brought in the district courts to enjoin the orders of the commission. The expediting act provides that the Attorney General shall file with the clerk of the district court in which the proceeding is pending a certificate requiring that it be expedited. In the past the Attorney General has been a party to these proceedings. If this bill is adopted he will no longer be such party and will have no interest or knowledge in the premises. It is provided, therefore, that the expediting acts shall apply as a matter of course and without the certificate of the Attorney General.

If a Commerce Court is necessary, a mere saving of expense would be no sufficient reason for abolishing it, but if it is unnecessary the Government ought not to throw away money in its maintenance. It is therefore a question of some importance to inquire whether the present system or the system proposed by this bill would be the more economical. It is evident that the maintenance of the Commerce Court involves a large additional outlay in the following particulars:

There is, first, the appropriation covering the items of rent, the salaries of the officers of the court other than its judges, and all the incidental expenses, aside from the salaries of the judges themselves. What this amounts to can be determined by looking into the estimates for the coming year.

There is, in the second place, the item of the salaries of the judges themselves.

Under the present system five judges are employed almost continuously in Washington. The act provides that the judges of the Commerce Court may be assigned to work upon their respective circuits, and to a very limited extent this has been done, but only to a limited extent.

Under the method proposed by this bill cases now coming before the Commerce Court will be heard by three circuit or district judges in the circuit where the cause is pending. It is a perfectly conservative estimate to say that one-half of the time of the five judges who now constitute the Commerce Court will be saved, and that therefore there will be a saving of at least one-half the salaries paid these judges.

It must be remembered that every circuit for which one of these judges was appointed now needs the continual service of an additional circuit judge for the proper disposition of its business.

There is, in the third place, a very material saving in the expense of conducting the litigation of the commission under the plan proposed by this bill as compared with the present plan.

To-day the work of handling these cases is virtually duplicated. The commission has the right to intervene, and it has in all cases intervened. The commission has not felt that its cases would be properly presented to the court unless it did appear by its own attorneys. It is believed that the Commerce Court judges themselves would bear witness that the substantial burden of this litigation has been sustained by the commission.

The commission employs at the present time a solicitor at a salary of $5,000 per year and an attorney at a salary of $3,900 per year, and these two individuals have represented it in all cases before the Commerce Court and the Supreme Court, with the exception of one or two instances, where special counsel were employed, for the reason that the attorney had formerly been an employee of the commission and was especially familiar with that particular case.

The Department of Justice devotes to this work an Assistant Attorney General and two subordinates, and maintains an expensive suite of offices for the accommodation of these lawyers.

Mr. Chairman, whether greater expedition in disposing of cases would be obtained under the Commerce Court system or under the system proposed by this bill is fairly doubtful. It is evident that when the case once reaches the Supreme Court of the United States, where, as a practical matter, all these cases finally go, it makes no difference whether it comes from the Commerce Court or from the district court. The real question, therefore, is which court below will most expedite the business.

The Commerce Court has nothing to do but to try these cases, and ought to be able to give them great expedition. In point of fact, this has not always been done. One important case was submitted nearly a year before an opinion was handed down by the Commerce Court, and in several instances months between the hearing and the decision have intervened.

It must be evident that if Interstate Commerce Commission cases took their ordinary course before the district courts, as they did prior to the adoption of the expediting acts, great delay would necessarily occur in those courts, but under this bill the expediting act applies which requires that the case shall be heard by three judges and shall be given precedence over other matters.

This practice is almost exactly like that which prevailed previous to the creation of the Commerce Court. Experience under that method of procedure shows that circuit courts did ordinarily obey the mandate of the statute, lay aside other matters, and give actual precedence to these cases. Under that practice fully as prompt a decision was obtained from the circuit court as has been obtained from the Commerce Court. In cases where there was no trial upon the facts decisions were promptly reached from which appeals could be taken to the Supreme Court. Where the case was heard upon the facts by a master there was necessarily the same delay in the circuit court that there has been in the Commerce Court.

If the expediting act is applied in good faith by the district courts, it is believed that matters would be as expeditiously handled under the plan proposed by this bill as under the Commerce Court act.

The Commerce Court, though composed of circuit judges, has no jurisdiction of any kind or character except suits instituted for the enforcing, enjoining, setting aside, annulling, or suspending orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Very few suits have been brought, or ever will be brought, in that court to enforce orders of the commission. On the contrary, nearly all suits brought in that court are, and will continue to be, suits against the enforcement of the commission's orders. All these suits are in fact attacks upon the commission. In all these cases the commission stands as the real defendant. These suits may be many and the charges multitudinous, but all the while there will be but one material defendant. The Commerce Court, year in and year out, must for all time, if it be continued so long, hear a never-ending volume of criticism and denunciation of the commission regarding the discharge of its functions and duties. Practically every invocation of the jurisdiction of this court will be adverse to the commission. Is it possible for any five judges to remain unbiased under such conditions? To expect otherwise is too much for weak human nature. In this connection it is interesting to note, as shown by the last annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that out of 27 cases passed on by the Commerce Court since its creation, February 15, 1911, to December 4, the date of said report, that preliminary restraining orders or final decrees have been issued in favor of the railroads in all but 7 cases, and that only 3 of the 7 were of any magnitude; that in but 3 cases of any consequence where the commission and the shippers have been opposed to the railroads have the orders of the commission been sustained even temporarily by the refusal to grant a temporary restraining order.

Is it possible to regard such a record of the Commerce Court as otherwise than destructive of the usefulness of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the instrumentality of Congress by and through which the rates and practices of the common carriers of the country are to be controlled and regulated?

The Supreme Court has declared that the making of a rate for the future is a legislative and not a judicial function. It has further declared that this function may be exercised by Congress through a commission acting under prescribed rules. The rate thus fixed by a commission is as much a legislative act as if made by Congress itself.

The discretionary power involved in reaching a conclusion that a particular rate is or is not reasonable for the future is, in the very nature of things, a legislative discretion which can not and ought not to be reviewed by the courts; nor can its legislative character be changed even though there is no dispute about the facts in many cases where such discretion and judgment must be exercised. The only questions that can arise for the determination of a court in such cases are two:

First. Did the commission have the power under the law to make the order?

Second. Is the order confiscatory?

The first of these questions involves the construction by the court of the acts of Congress by which the powers of the commission are delegated to it, which is a pure question of law in nowise dependent upon the facts of any given case. The second question is one of fact as to whether the rate fixed by the commission is so low that the carrier can not, in connection with all its other sources of income, earn enough money to enable it to maintain its property and pay operating expenses.

Do either of these questions demand or require special expert knowledge on the part of judges of any court? Do not all courts, both State and Federal, have to construe the statutes of legislative bodies? Does it require unusual legal attainments for judges of one particular Federal court to enable it to properly construe the acts of Congress conferring powers on the Interstate Commerce Commission? Are not the acts of Congress conferring such powers as simple and as easily understood as any other acts?

Is it necessary that the judges of an inferior court, from all of whose decisions a direct appeal lies to the Supreme Court, should be experts, when the judges of the court of last resort are not experts? If experts are needed as judges of the Commerce Court, why should there not be a court of experts to pass on all questions arising out of the application of the fourteenth amendment regarding the acts of the legislatures of the several States and as to the acts of the State railroad commissions? The questions of law and fact in cases arising under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution are exactly of a kind and character as are those arising under the fifth amendment and requires no different qualifications for judges passing on such questions than is required of the judges of the Commerce Court.

As shown by the latest report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the State of Illinois has 11,875 miles of railroads; Pennsylvania, 11,083 miles; Texas, 14,243 miles; Iowa, 9,733 miles; Kansas, 9,006 miles; Michigan, 8,985 miles; Minnesota, 8,668 miles; Missouri, 8,077 miles; Ohio, 9,128 miles. All these States have railroad commissions vested with legislative powers in varying degrees regarding rates and practices of railroads, but not one of these great States, with thousands upon thousands of miles of railroads within their respective borders, has any special State court to pass on the validity of the acts of the legislatures of these States or of the orders of the railroad commissions of any of them. Then why should the United States be burdened with the expense of maintaining a special court to pass on questions of law and fact respecting the powers and orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

To ask this question is to answer it. There is nothing unusual or out of ordinary court procedure in passing on any facts that may be presented or that is necessary to be considered in determining whether or not a certain rate of fares and charges is or will be confiscatory. The testimony of expert witnesses in such cases must be weighed and considered, but it does not require an expert court of first instances to consider expert testimony any more than it does for a court of last resort.

It appears from several cases determined by the Commerce Court that where there is no conflict of testimony before the commission or where the facts are undisputed that the court holds it has a right to substitute its conclusions of fact from such undisputed testimony for and instead of the conclusions of fact found by the commission and to determine for itself whether or not the rate of fares and charges fixed by the commission for the future is reasonable.

As a great majority of cases wherein the orders of the commission are assailed are based upon undisputed facts, such a holding of the Commerce Court will permit it to review upon the facts the orders of the commission in the same manner as in a court of appellate jurisdiction where causes coming to it by appeal are tried de novo. As the Interstate Commerce Commission is the highest authority on the effect of such holdings by the Commerce Court on the orders of the commission, the following statement of the commission in its last annual report in commenting on the decision of the Commerce Court in the Pacific Coast Switching cases, is entitled to great weight:

> But while it happened to be otherwise in this particular case, it is true of the great majority of the cases heard before this commission that the facts are not in dispute. It is the conclusion to be drawn from those facts which is doubtful. Do the facts, not usually open to question, justify the further conclusion of fact that the rate or the practice under consideration is unjust and unreasonable? It is this inference of fact which the commission must of necessity draw whenever it reaches a conclusion upon any question involving the reasonableness of a rate or the undueness of a discrimination. If the Commerce Court is correct in stating that where the facts are admitted it is for that court to determine whether the rate is unreasonable or the discrimination undue, then ninety-nine one-hundredths of the orders of this commission can be reviewed upon the question of fact by the courts.

Mr. Chairman, it is alleged by the Attorney General that it is unnecessary for the Interstate Commerce Commission to be represented in suits in the courts wherein its orders are attacked, and further that it ought not to be represented in such proceedings by its own counsel.

This contention is based upon the fact that the commission as a tribunal has decided something which is in issue in the court, and it is argued that you might as well have a district judge directing his counsel to appear before the Supreme Court to argue in support of his opinion or decision.

There is no such analogy between a United States district court and its judicial functions and duties and the Interstate Commerce Commission and its administrative functions and duties as to make pertinent the comparison referred to. The district court is strictly a judicial tribunal, trying issues between parties at interest in which they alone are affected. The review of its decisions by the supreme or appellate court is upon appeal, and the only parties interested or affected by the decision are heard upon the record as they have made it. The Interstate Commerce Commission, on the other hand, is not a judicial tribunal, is not a court, and renders no judgments; therefore, there can be no appeal on a judgment to a court. It is authorized and required by law generally to enforce the provisions of the act to regulate commerce, and specifically to enter orders against carriers to cease and desist from the exaction and enforcement of rates, regulations, and practices, and to establish in lieu thereof other rates, regulations, and practices, when, in its opinion, after full hearing upon complaint filed or a proceeding of inquiry instituted on its own initiative, it shall conclude that any rate, regulation, or practice complained of, or involved in an inquiry instituted by itself, is unjust and unreasonable, or unduly discriminatory, and therefore unlawful under the various provisions of the act.

Every rate, regulation, or practice of a common carrier, both directly and indirectly, affects the interests of many persons; therefore every such question is a public question, whether the complaint be instituted by an individual or association or by the commission itself. The administration of this law, therefore, should be uniform in the application of the principles to be applied in the consideration of the varying facts, circumstances, and conditions respecting the questions of reasonableness and of discrimination.

By reason of the ever-changing facts, circumstances, and conditions upon which a question of reasonableness or of discrimination must be determined in each case, it has been deemed impracticable by judicial procedure in the courts to secure and enforce proper regulations, partly because of the necessity for the establishment of rules, regulations, and practices for the future, which is in the nature of a legislative function. In the very nature of the case the question of reasonableness or of discrimination must be determined upon many considerations; one pertinent fact may be of much less consequence in one case than in another, because of countervailing facts, circumstances, and conditions present in one case and not in another. So no specific formula or rule uniformly applicable to all cases can be prescribed for the determination of these questions, no more than a verdict of a jury can be rendered on the basis of a formula or specific rule.

This being so and the commission being appointed with a view to the special qualifications of its members as experts, dealing continually and exclusively with questions of this kind, constantly accumulating, in which the facts, circumstances, and conditions as developed in its investigations from day to day are all available in bringing its expert knowledge to the determination of questions in each case, how can it be possible that any other department, or representative of any other department, can know the reasons and the theory of the commission's action in making a specific order, as well as the commission's own representative, who is continually engaged with it in connection with controversies growing out of its orders? The commission may be in error, and if so, it is for the courts to refuse to enforce its orders; but it is impossible that any other than its own representative could so well present to the court its reasons and the facts upon which it has felt justified under the law in making the particular order at issue.

It has not, as a court, tried a case between John Doe and Richard Roe, in which no one else is interested, but it has, in the performance of an administrative duty, as an expert body upon full hearing and in obedience to the law, entered an order, which, unless the carriers can secure an injunction against it, will become effective. It is not, therefore, merely the interest of John Doe or Richard Roe that is involved in the enforcement of the order of the commission, but it is a public question affecting many people and many interests, those of others as well as the carriers. For this reason it seems to the committee that the comparison between the commission in endeavoring to show in court the reasons for the order it has made on the one hand and the appearance of a representative of an inferior before a court of appeals, merely to sustain the decision of the judge in a controversy between two individuals, both of whom are represented in the court of appeal as well as before the lower court on the other hand is wholly out of place. The question is an eminently practical one, and it seems too obvious for argument that the representatives of the commission, whether it has made a proper order or not, can better know and present to the court the reasons for its action than anyone else.

If the commission is to be excluded from justifying its orders before the courts, and is to be under the direction and control of the head of another department, it may turn out that the latter may be wholly unfamiliar with the reasons which actuated the commission, or being familiar with these reasons for action, may disagree with it as to the conclusions reached, and therefore be unfavorable to the enforcement of its order.

In either event, the court hearing the controversy must be deprived of the theory and reasons which govern the administrative body charged with the enforcement of the law and the application of its provisions to these controversies, involving not merely private but public interest. If another department is to determine whether the order of the commission should be upheld or not, and the commission is not to be heard, then it would seem consistent that the proposed orders of the commission should be submitted for the approval of the other department before they are entered. This would hardly seem to be compatible with the plainly manifest theory of this legislation, which is that the commission should be as absolutely independent as possible in its action, to the end that it may be perfectly impartial, as indicated in the manner of its establishment.

It is required that not more than a majority of its members shall be of the same political party, that in the ordinary course the term of not more than one member of the commission should expire at the same time, and that it shall report directly to Congress. All of these provisions were intended to make it free of possible political or other influence from any source. Expert knowledge and experience was sought to be secured by the somewhat long term of office of seven years without change in the personnel of more than one commissioner at a time.

The orders which the commission enters are the culmination of its investigations and the application of its expert knowledge to the facts, circumstances, and conditions disclosed in each case. It is its orders which give effect to the provisions of the law. When the validity of these orders is on trial, conceding that they will sometimes be found to be erroneous, how can it be possible that any other than a direct representative of the commission can present as well as he the commission's reasons in justification of its action? What possible impropriety can there be in the appearance of the commission's representative to aid the court in an accurate and correct understanding of the commission's action and its reasons therefor?

The representatives of the complainants and of the defendant carriers will conduct the contest in court mainly from the standpoint of their respective interests and not from the impartial standpoint of the public interest. If the commission is to be kept independent, to the end that it may act with the utmost freedom and impartiality, without restraint, and is to be responsible for the orders it makes, in all fairness to it and to the public it should be permitted to present through its own representative the justifying reasons for its action.

Mr. Chairman, when we reach that part of the bill now under consideration, providing for the abolishing of the Commerce Court, under the five-minute rule, I hope to have some extension of time, when I expect to comment on the small amount of business the Commerce Court will have after the first year or two of its existence and what a heavy burden it is to keep up this unnecessary and very expensive court.

The remarks I am making at this time bear upon the bill which I introduced and which was reported favorably by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, rather than on that part of this bill abolishing the Commerce Court.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

FREE MEATS AND CEREALS.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, upon the repassage of the old wool bill we were informed there would be no more predigested tariff legislation this term.

The member of the Ways and Means Committee from New York [Mr. HARRISON] paused recently in his defense of a chemical schedule, which he was revising upward, to forecast an early introduction of the agricultural schedule. In this connection he said (p. 2202 of the RECORD):

> The furthest I am willing to go in the doctrine of free raw material is that I am unwilling to lay a tax upon any so-called raw material, the imposition of which will increase the cost of the necessaries of life.

The exigencies of two presidential campaigns in this House have created a little caution and shattered a number of predictions—among others, the early incoming of an agricultural schedule.

I might have waited until that schedule came in, but its character is settled. Instead of taking advantage of this "open season" for all kinds of debate I might have taken leave to print. I am personally as prejudiced against stillborn speeches as I am against caucus-canned legislation. Frankly, a speech that is not good enough for this body to hear is not good enough for my constituents to read. [Applause.] Still, a speech, however lacking, which has been rehearsed before this body may properly be read by a most exacting constituency.

Last April the majority forced through this House, over the opposition of the Northwest, the Canadian pact. That agreement opened our ports to Canadian agricultural products and at the same time opened Canadian ports to our products. We thought the exchange was unfair to the farmer of the Northwest. Thorough debate in each House of Congress demonstrated the justice of our objections. Actual experience during the period between adoption by the United States and rejection by Canada in the lowering of our prices and the early rise after Canadian rejection confirmed those objections, and no man in that part of our country will advocate reviving the pact under any circumstances. When it opened our ports it took away our shield. When it opened Canadian ports it gave; however inadequate, a sword.

The first concrete legislative declaration against the Northwest came from the Democratic caucus in its so-called "farmers' free-list bill." That bill provided that a few articles, such as salt, lumber, leather goods, and machinery, should be admitted at our ports free of duty. These were used to support the name "farmers' free list," while in the middle of the bill was couched the joker, "meats and cereals," which represent nearly all the finished products of the northwestern soil and toil. Salt, lumber, and leather goods were but the gilding of the counterfeit which the Ways and Means Committee handed to the Northwest. The average rate of duty now on these articles conceded to the farmer averaged about the same as the duty upon farm products whether in the form of finished meats and cereals or in the coarser condition.

It is one of the large facts of commerce concerning which statistics are eloquent that grain shipments are relatively decreasing, while the same material in meal, flour, and so forth, are relatively increasing in international changes. The same is true in meats. Shipments of meat on foot have decreased in international shipment.

So the farmer was offered a free nickel for a silver piece varying from a quarter to a dollar. Because it is a matter of common knowledge that the farmer of the Northwest who is making money has from 5 to 20 times as much meats and cereals to sell as he has salt, lumber, and leather goods to buy. And the farmer who has no more than 5 times as much of the former to sell as he has to buy of the latter is on a mad gallop to bankruptcy or the poor house. The farmers of the Northwest resented the insult to their intelligence more than the vain effort to remove the tariff. They had no reason to expect the one, but had been warned against the latter. No farmer ever suggested such a freak of legislation, and few fail to see its fallacy. One farmer in my district, having examined the bill, said, "That bunch must have taken a pointer from old man Jones." You know Newcomb married his daughter and, as a wedding present, he deeded a house and lot worth $1,000 to the young couple. The pair accepted it, learning a short time thereafter that the deed contained the following clause: "Subject to a mortgage of $5,000, which the grantees herein assume and agree to pay." [Laughter.] Never did Get-rich-quick Wallingford ever hand a victim a more deceptive package.

To test the sincerity of the Ways and Means Committee in their gift to the farmers, western Congressmen introduced separate bills providing for the removal of duties on lumber, salt, leather goods, and so forth, and challenged the committee's attention thereto, but to no avail. They did not propose the farmer should have a favor without inflicting a tenfold burden.

You will recall the bill went to a Republican Senate where they do deliberate on tariff bills. The "Meats and cereals" were removed.

Upon return of the bill to the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], August 17, 1911, speaking from his coigne of vantage as chairman of the Appropriation Committee, said:

Coming from the section of the country I do I am vitally interested in having meat and bread and flour coming in free of duty from all the world. (See p. 4025, RECORD.)

To this the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. UNDERWOOD] responded:

I will say that there is no man in this House more interested in having meat and flour admitted free than I am.

He further and later said:

There is no clause in this bill that is of more interest to my own constituency than the question of free bread and free meat.

To further commit Democratic leadership to this antifarmer policy, Mr. UNDERWOOD, on page 4073 of the RECORD, said:

No; I do not rise to object, but I would like to ask the question if my friend [Mr. HILL of Connecticut] disputes for a moment that every Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee during the consideration of the Payne bill was in favor of free meats?

He thus challenged the country's attention to the then stand of our distinguished Speaker [Mr. CLARK], who was the ranking member of the then minority.

Gov. Eugene N. Foss, the latest convert to Democracy, now in the presidential class, said on the floor of this House on the 21st of May, 1910:

Now, consider all the duties on food products which the people are also demanding shall be removed, the duties especially on grains, cattle, meats, fish, fruits, and vegetables, * * * what reasonable objection can there be from any source to the removal of duties on food products?

By the holy fins of the sacred codfish, does not that presidential candidate know there is a Northwest? [Laughter.]

Not content with committing the present leadership of their party to this antagonistic doctrine, they seek to commit a hoped-for Democratic administration to the same adverse policy. Chairman FITZGERALD, of New York, on August 17, 1911, at page 4082 of the RECORD, said, referring to the amended "Free list":

While this bill would be far preferable to me if it had free meat and free bread from all the world, realizing that such provisions can not be had with a recalcitrant Republican Senate, and knowing that it will be vetoed in any event by a Republican President, I favor its passage in the hope that the people will realize that it is essential that a Democratic victory be had in 1912 in order to give the people the full measure of relief that they demand.

And this, says the RECORD, was followed by "applause on the Democratic side."

What does all this mean? "Coming from the section I do." The immediate section represented in part by the other gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] who forecasted the early incoming of an agricultural schedule.

The immediate section is represented in part by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], member of the Ways and Means Committee, who on June 15, 1911, at page 2112, could see nothing unsound in the taxing policies of Henry George, which would place all taxation upon land and make it unprofitable to own real estate. He would have the finished products of the farm put in open competition with the world, and the expenses of the Government to be collected out of the land. Farmers may pay taxes direct and indirect, and if they have been prosperous pay an excise tax; but the grain and live stock grown and raised abroad, reduced to forms of easy shipment, shall enter our ports without bowing to the American flag at the harbor or saying "By your leave" at the customhouse.

Such studied word of authority and formal act set forth the policy of the Democratic majority of this House against the Northwest. "Meats and cereals from all the world"—a brief phrase true; but carried into effect, a severe sentence. To that portion of our country lying north of the Ohio River and west of the upper Mississippi, meats and cereals are directly or indirectly the source of a large per cent of their annual wealth; a large per cent of the meats and cereals of the United States is there produced. Then, to reach the great cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore must be carried on an average of about 1,200 miles over land and across one or more mountain ranges.

The seaboard States have a large per cent of the urban population of the country. These States contain largely the mills and factories of the land where millions toil at good wages. The multiplied millions of their products find their best paying, best priced, nearest free market among the farmers of the Northwest. To protect these mills and factories every line of their output is by design or incident protected by tariff placed there by Republican or Democratic Congresses. These meats and cereals are produced on high-priced land with high-priced machinery conducted by high-priced labor.

It is proposed to bring into our ports free of duty meats and cereals "from all the world." To be more specific, the products of Canada, Mexico, Argentina, Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay, Australia, and New Zealand are bidden to come to glut and despoil the home markets. In this they take away our shield, and, refusing to open other markets to us, they deny us a sword.

The coast line of the United States is 4,300 miles. The collective coast lines of these other countries named is 25,468 miles. So that the average distance from field to shipping port in these countries is not more than two-thirds what it is from field to principal points of consumption within the United States. So that when the high rates of land transportation and the low rates upon water are considered, with the Panama Canal finished, the South American and Australasian shippers can lay down their products in New York and Boston at less cost than can the grain and meat producers west of the Mississippi River. This can be readily seen from the following coast-line table of the United States compared with the other countries considered, the rule being that distance to port varies inversely with the length of the coast line.

Area and coast line.

	Area, square miles.	Coast line, nautical miles.
United States	2,974,159	4,300
Brazil	3,291,416	3,700
Argentina	1,139,196	2,140
Chile	292,743	3,043
Uruguay	72,172	330
Paraguay	97,722	None.
Australia	2,974,580	7,800
New Zealand	104,750	2,270
Mexico	767,323	3,160
Canada	3,729,665	3,025
Total outside of United States	12,469,567	25,468

This gives to the United States 692 square miles of area to each nautical mile of coast line, while the average of the other countries is 489 square miles to each nautical mile of coast line. Considering the above and the varying form of coast lines, the distance to port in the United States would be approximately one and one-half times what it averages in these other countries.

The lands of all these countries are cheap. Vast areas in each are Government or State owned, and large stretches are held by speculators. These lands are largely uninclosed, so that pasturage can be had almost for the taking. Brazil's grazing land varies from 11 to 21 cents per acre in the Province of Para. Argentina's grazing lands range from $2 upward, averaging about $11 per acre. Paraguay's grazing land from 4 cents to 24 cents per acre, while its arable land can be purchased for 50 cents per acre. Uruguay's lands vary from $5 upward, averaging about $20.

Taking in account the relative productivity, nearness to seaport, and other considerations, land values in the various countries considered will not average more than from one-tenth to one-fifth of similar lands in the United States. Moreover, the Governments of each country encourage immigration by the establishment of homesteads and the sale of lands on easy terms. To this numerous other advantages and inducements are added. Paraguay not only gives a homestead but pays part of the immigrant's passage, furnishes seed for the first year's crop, exempts personal property from duty at the ports, and exempts his property from local taxation for 10 years.

"Chile of To-day" says, on page 75, that 75,000,000 acres of land fit for grazing are yet untaken, and can be bought for from $2 to $3 per acre, and each acre will graze three to four head of cattle.

Australia has liberal land laws for lease, homestead, or Crown purchase. Team of horses is furnished settlers and cash advanced for necessary improvements. Canada for years has been granting homesteads upon three-year settlement.

WAGES.

The meat and cereal producer of the United States is obliged to pay in wages and maintenance a much higher wage than the average in these competing countries.

The American farmer and cattleman must pay his employee from $20 to $50 per month and furnish him with expensive board, washing, and other privileges. He is entitled to it. From the ranks of the American farm hand has come millions of our best citizens and a large percentage of our soldiers in time of war. He works; he saves. He is strong and healthy. He marries into the families of the community. He rents the land. He then buys his own farm and ultimately pays for it.

All along this course traveled by so many he performs his duties as a citizen, and in his later life we find him the ideal capitalist—the owner of a farm, out of debt, and with something in the bank. He appreciates what he has, because he knows how it was earned. He respects and supports the Government that secured him his opportunity. He has a right and does object to being reduced to the wage and treatment of his competitors in these other countries which run about as follows:

Farmer and herdsmen's wages.

	Per month.
Argentina	$12 to $15
Brazil	12 to 14
Chile	8 to 12
Paraguay	7 to 14

It will be remembered that the maintenance of these countries of the employee is much less than that usually required for the farm hand in the United States.

That these conditions favoring the development of the meat and cereal competition in these other countries as a matter of theory is supported by the crushing facts of commerce is no longer debatable.

RESULT OF FOREGOING CONDITIONS.

I submit table showing cereal production of the United States and competing countries:

It will be noted that United States exports of cereals show a decrease in the last 10 years of 69 per cent. At the same rate in four years we will be upon an importing basis. Mind you, the Panama Canal will be in full operation by that time.

During the same 10 years Argentina increased its exports 104 per cent.

During the same 10 years Chile increased its exports 271 per cent.

During the same 10 years Canada increased its exports 88 per cent.

During the same 10 years all other countries discussed increased their exports 95 per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLOAN. If it is a short question.

Mr. MADDEN. To what does the gentleman attribute the falling off of exports of cereals by the United States? Is it because of the increase of population, decrease of the output, or because of the increased exports from other countries of those commodities?

Mr. SLOAN. Those are three factors which contribute to it—our decrease and their increase—and I have submitted a number of tables which will be found useful and instructive in arriving at that conclusion, as I shall proceed to discuss.

And whereas the exports from the United States of cereals in 1900 (448,303,186 bushels) was three times what it was from all these other countries combined (150,681,623 bushels), in 1910 the United States exports (138,778,137 bushels) are less than one-half of these combined countries (294,024,487 bushels).

So within a short time the United States will be furnishing just about what it needs, and will be up against the proposition of the Democratic party opening up the ports of this country to a flood from these vast increasing fields of the South and North.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman include flour in cereal exports?

Mr. SLOAN. Certainly; and I discuss that later on in one of these tables. Flour, meat, and so on, mean simply cereals ground. The coarse-grains shipments are decreasing, as the table will show, from year to year from all these countries and the ground product is relatively increasing, just as meats are relatively increasing and live-stock shipments are decreasing.

Argentine alone has outstripped us, exporting 50,000,000 more bushels than the United States. The significance of this situation appears in the further facts that the profitable grain area of the United States has reached its limit while Argentina has reduced to cultivation only 1 acre out of an available 7, and Chile 1 acre out of 5. Again the Bulletin of Agricultural Statistics published at Rome for March shows that Argentina increased its winter-wheat area for the 1911–12 year over the 1910–11, 39 per cent, while Chile increased hers 47 per cent. On the other hand the same authority shows the United States to have decreased its area 1¾ per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman any figures to show the cost of raising wheat or other cereals in Argentina and Chile as compared with the cost in the United States?

Mr. SLOAN. I have only this. I have given the wages and the prices of land. Those are the two large factors. The other factors, of course, are machinery and the transportation, but I cover the matter of the transportation in this—namely, that they are relatively nearer to the ports than we are, and the nearer they are to the ports the nearer they are to the cheap shipment.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman anything to show a comparison in the wheat-raising territory of Argentina and Chile?

Mr. SLOAN. I have not the acreage given, but that could be readily deduced from the fact that one has but one-seventh of its available land and the other one-fifth, while we have about reached our limit. Theirs, of course, do not quite come up in yield to ours as one of the factors to be considered.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Do I understand the gentleman correctly when I understand him to state that the rate of wheat production in Canada has decreased?

Mr. SLOAN. This year over last year it has decreased 3 per cent. Of course, that is small, but the point I wanted to make was that these countries down South have increased very largely and that we have apparently reached the limit and have really decreased the last year.

Mr. NORRIS. This decrease in Canada, if the gentleman will permit, is exceptional and not general?

Mr. SLOAN. It is this particular year. I was not claiming that to be true generally of Canada.

Mr. MADDEN. I think as to Canada, her potential wheat fields are vastly in excess of the fields she is cultivating, but in one particular year, for various reasons, there was a decrease. The gentleman does not want to convey the impression, I presume, that Canada has in any way reached her limit so far as acreage is concerned in the production of wheat?

Mr. SLOAN. No; Canada is one of the countries that may increase her acreage and probably become a more formidable competitor later on.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman any information which will enable him to say that the price received by the Argentine people for their wheat in the European market is equal to that received by the United States?

Mr. SLOAN. Quality for quality in the European market it meets ours——

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the fact as to whether there may not be a loss to the shipper of Argentine wheat on account of the fact that they have no boards of trade in which they have the opportunity to hedge against the possible loss that might be caused in the reduction of the price from the day of shipment and the day of arrival in the port on the other side?

Mr. SLOAN. I presume that is true, and I am glad that the gentleman, who lives near to the greatest board of trade in which wheat is handled on earth reminds me of the fact.

To those who opposed the Canadian pact, and I am one of you, let me say in the light of these comparisons and the fact that the exports of Argentina and Chile are three and one-half times the Canadian exports, if you feared and felt the sting of the reciprocity whip, be warned and dread the bite of the "free-list" scorpion. [Applause.]

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. Are the climatic and soil conditions better for the raising of wheat and cereals in the Argentine and in Chile than in Canada?

Mr. SLOAN. In some excepted places.

Mr. LOBECK. Better than the United States?

Mr. SLOAN. No; generally I do not think they are. You can not tempt me to say that any place on earth for any purpose is better than the United States or that men are as good, and that is why I want to render the favors unto Americans and keep the handicap on the foreigner. [Applause.]

Mr. LOBECK. I am glad to hear that the gentleman stands by America.

MEATS.

Mr. SLOAN. Every reason for a fair measure of protection upon our cereals applies to our meats, with these additions—the stockman must wait an average of nearly two years while the granger must wait but one for reproduction and turning his money. Again, grain raising operates to deplete the soil, while live stock renews and fertilizes it.

There was a time when tariff distinctions as between live stock on hoof and dressed meats were important. That was before artificial ice making enabled us to ignore both altitude and latitude. By the establishment of packing plants, great and small, through the countries I have discussed in South America and Australasia, with the sea highways of transportation, meats have meant simply the finished products of the farmer's toil.

Export of live stock from the United States decreased in 10 years 31 per cent, while in meats only 24 per cent. Shipments of live stock from Argentina, Australia, Canada, and Mexico, collectively, decreased from 1,207,324 in 1900 to 442,954 in 1910, or 61 per cent. The same group in the same time in meats increased from $41,486,000 to $62,510,183, or 50 per cent. I do not include Uruguay, for the reason that its shipments are simply across the Argentine line for slaughter, thence to be shipped to the consuming markets of the world.

This answers the gentleman's question about the relative shipment of live stock and grains and cereals.

I submit the following table showing the number of live stock convertible into meats:

Meat-producing live stock, 1910.

CATTLE, SHEEP, AND HOGS.

United States	174,078,000
Brazil (estimate)	27,182,000
Argentina	97,912,462
Chile (1908)	6,744,285
Uruguay (1908)	35,120,000
Paraguay (1908)	5,737,960
Australia (1909)	103,466,909
New Zealand	25,499,125
Mexico (1902)	9,283,026
Canada	12,657,119
Total, except United States	323,602,886

I submit also statistics of population for the same countries:

Population, 1910.

United States	91,272,266
Brazil (1908)	21,461,100
Argentina	6,980,000
Chile (1908)	3,302,204
Uruguay	1,094,688
Paraguay (1909)	716,000
Australia	4,374,138
New Zealand (1906)	888,678
Mexico	15,063,207
Canada (1909)	7,185,000
Total, outside of the United States	61,065,015

That while the United States has 30,207,251 more people than the countries discussed, it has less live stock than they. And the other countries have approximately four times as many sheep as the United States. In this connection it may be recalled that when our present agricultural schedule was passed great herds of cattle in South America and sheep in Australia were allowed to run their course of life in one case to be slaughtered for their hides and horns, while in the other they lived to old age, yielding up their annual tribute of wool, then died of old age, their carcasses at death becoming carrion.

I here submit a table of exports of packing-house products of beef, pork, mutton, and veal.

Meats.

PACKING-HOUSE PRODUCTS.

Exported from—	1900	1905	1910
United States	$179,898,782	$170,308,231	$135,959,373

Mexico			125,298
Canada	13,288,000	16,247,000	8,974,716

Argentina has eight freezing plants and three great packing plants.
Chile has two freezing plants.
Uruguay has 1 cold storage and 33 dried, jerked, and beef extract plants.
Brazil has eight dried beef and extract plants.
Paraguay has one dried beef and one extract plant.

It will be noted that in the last 10 years the exports of the United States have decreased 24 per cent, Canadian exports have decreased 33 per cent, while their three leading competitors have shown an increase as follows:

	Per cent.
Argentina	184
New Zealand	51
Australia	22

Assuming that the same rate of decrease will continue until 1920, and a corresponding increase shall continue in Argentina, then would the latter have equaled the United States in export of meats as it has in the past decade surpassed the United States in cereal exports. That the United States has not already fallen behind Argentina in meat exports is due to our large hog products, in which our southern neighbors thus far have not been able to so successfully compete, although corn and alfalfa, the best pork-making ration, thrive in Argentina. That the Argentina pace is keeping up on beef and we are giving way will be seen from the following table:

Exports to the United Kingdom.

	United States.	Argentina.
	Cwt.	Cwt.
1911	174,350	6,176,503
1910	477,147	5,041,180
1909	856,216	4,336,179
1908	1,432,142	3,706,245
1907	2,417,604	2,756,965
1906	2,426,644	2,811,493
1905	2,232,206	2,580,152

That this outcome of our export business may be further certainly forecasted will be seen in the table of areas and population which follows:

Area and population.

	Area, square miles.	1910

New Zealand, 8.5 persons per square mile.
Mexico, 19.5 persons per square mile.
Canada, 1.9 persons per square mile.
All other countries discussed average 4.9 persons per square mile.

I submit the following table, showing the areas and population, the number of live stock convertible into meat, and the relation of meat-producing live stock to area and population:

[1]1908. [2]1909. [3]1906

Mr. MADDEN. Argentina beef is not as high in price or as high in standard, is it?

Mr. SLOAN. There is nothing raised anywhere, I will say to the gentleman, that equals the American product, whether it is beef, cereals, or men, and I am in favor of taking care of all three of them. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. And the Argentina product has a wider sale in Europe, because it is sold at a lower price?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes. They sell it at a lower price, because they can produce it and carry it more cheaply.

Mr. MADDEN. And another reason why they can sell it at a lower price is that there is no system of inspection in Argentina, and they are not required to adhere to the same standard of meats there that we have here.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; and that is just another reason why the people of America, who are in favor of pure food, do not want to have an influx of impure products from all those countries pouring into this country, they not having been inspected.

Brazil was the last monarchy on the continent to become a Republic. It is now and will continue to be an empire of wealth, and in the evolution of tariffs and commerce will become one of the largest factors with which our country must deal. It is passing strange that of this nation of rich area, boundless pampas, fertile valleys, mighty rivers, impenetrable forests, rich mineral wealth, and its centuries of civilized history, so meager up-to-date data are available; but from all to which I have had access, including the Congressional Library, Bureau of Statistics, and especially from the Pan American Union, I am convinced that Brazil is one of our most potential commercial rivals.

The great packers of America and the world have looked upon Brazil, called it good, and are making ready to exploit it. The most recent colossal venture of this kind, started by American capitalists, whom I shall not further designate than to say there are financial dragons among them, after whom knights LINDBERGH and HENRY are now in full pursuit. They have a grant of over 5,000,000 acres of land on very easy terms from the Government. Arrangements have been made for high-bred cattle to be shipped there to improve the local breed. Many thousands we understand already roam over this vast ranch with annual food immediately at hand and no shelter required. Their own railways now under construction will lead to the sea, where the products of their own shambles and packing plants in their own ships may be carried whither they will, preferably to American ports if our duties should be removed. To supervise this great undertaking, Murdo McKenzie, the great stockman of the Northwest and until recently the president of the American Live Stock Association, was employed at a salary equal to a king's ransom. While yet he wielded the gavel of his association, in December he spoke, in part, as follows:

The imposition of an import duty on anything produced in this country in effect gives a protection or advantage to the home producers of such commodities by the amount of the tax. Our position is that we want the favors or burdens of this system equitably distributed, and that so long as the present system of raising money for the support of the Government by means of customs duties continues in effect the live-stock industry should receive its share of the favors; that the labor on the farm or ranch is entitled to the same measure of protection as the labor in the factory.

This association also opposed the farmers' free-list bill. * * * That bill placed on the free list meats, cereals and flour, and some manufactured articles, such as agricultural implements, cotton bagging, boots and shoes, certain kinds of leather, and some classes of lumber. The advocates of this bill claimed that it was designed to compensate the farmer for what he might lose by reason of the passage of the Canadian reciprocity bill. Instead of being a remedy, it simply added to the burdens and preferences sought to be placed on the farmers and stockmen. By this bill the important products of the farm and range were placed on the free list. We were compelled to surrender 100 per cent and secure in return free trade in only a few of the manufactured articles we use. Stated in round figures, this bill would cause the farmers and stockmen to lose $100 for every $5 they might gain as compensatory damages. A very good trade for the other fellow! Another reason advanced by the politician for the passage of the free-list bill was that the free admission of meats would serve as a blow to the so-called Packers' Trust. When you consider that the big packers practically control the meat industry in South America, you can form your own opinion as to how much they would be hurt by the free admission of the products they handle.

This question of free meats from Argentina, free cattle from Canada and Mexico, is the most important question that has ever confronted the live-stock industry. I believe this association should at once take proper steps to see that every stockman and farmer throughout the West is fully informed of the disastrous effect that the free admission of meats from South America would have on home prices. * * *

Please remember I am telling this to you as your president. It will be a dead loss to you if the American Congress passes a law admitting free meats from South America. When I leave these shores the chances are I may be on the other side, but so long as I am your president I feel it my duty to inform you of the danger with which you are confronted. If the ports of this country are open to free meat, you can look for prices to be lower here for your live stock. * * *

It is little wonder that the great packers of the United States and their foreign allies have seen a great field for cheap production. They are alive to the cheapened water paths of commerce and have known the American market as the best in the world, where more people eat meat oftener, with better wages with which to pay for it, than any people on earth. But they find that a former Republican Congress, in sympathy with America's producing toilers, saw with the coming years this condition and provided a reasonable protective tariff amounting on the average to a cent and a half per pound on fresh meats and a higher duty on prepared meats. This means that cattle raised and grazed on free or cheap lands, bought perhaps with money advanced by the foreign government, exempt from taxation, tended and slaughtered by cheap labor, shipped by cheap water transportation to our great seaports, shall bow to the American flag, pay its first burden of taxation to the American Government, and that sufficient to make up in part the difference of our high-priced land and well-paid labor over that of the foreign producer. Where, then, will the exploiters of the South American meat and cereal industries go? They will look over the following tariff table of the nations:

Import duties on meats and cereals.

Country.	Fresh meat per pound (about).	Cured or simply prepared meats per pound (about).	Average of cereals per bushel (about).
Austria-Hungary	$0.03	$0.03	$0.211
France	.024	.032	.177
Germany	.035	.039	.245
Belgium	.019	Free.	Free.

Argentina	Free.	.109	.195
Brazil	.028	.192	.177
Australia	.040	.060	.194

If the ships carrying their meats and cereals should anchor at a port of Spain, they find the aristocrats of Aragon and Castile, with a pride in and not a contempt for agriculture, demand payment of an average of 2 cents per pound for meat and 22 cents per bushel for cereals.

If their cargoes go to the ports of the second greatest Republic, they will find a French barrier there, to be lifted only on the payment of 2½ cents per pound for meats and 18 cents per bushel for cereals.

Should they seek the cities of the dual kingdom and ask leave to sell to the citizens of Vienna, Budapest, and Prague, they will be informed that the first duty is to the farmers of Austria-Hungary and Bohemia, whom we count among the best farmers of Europe. "If you would sell to our cities, pay first for every pound of meat 3 cents and every bushel of grain 21 cents."

Should they direct their craft to Hamburg or Bremen, they will meet the demand—for every pound of meat you bring in to compete with the German farmer pay 3½ cents, and for every bushel of grain 24½ cents. The government of the Kaiser, where scientific agriculture has reached a high grade, where the importance of home production of foods in time of war as well as peace is recognized, there is no grudge there against the farmer or the herdsman. They would rather favor the toiler of the Fatherland than the descendants of ticket-of-leave men and native women of Australasia.

Should their heavily laden craft bear into the Scandinavian harbors, they will find that progressive and industrious people saying: "You can pass our customhouse upon paying 1 cent per pound for meats and 20 cents per bushel for cereals. If we have any favors to grant they will go to our own industrious sons, who in the short season wrest from a reluctant earth the food for our people. Our favors will be withheld from the Joses, Miguels, and Pedros of South America."

They know, of course, that the ports of the United Kingdom are open, because 78 per cent of their population is urban and a large percentage of the remainder suburban. But the United Kingdom is just one large widely scattered city, and the suburban portions can not feed the citizens. But I note that no British colony which produces meats or cereals as an established industry has free trade therein. Canada has 2½ cents duty per pound on meats and 10 cents per bushel on cereals.

Australia has an average duty on meat of 5 cents per pound and 19 cents per bushel on cereals. So Mother Britain herself, while she has free trade in her own insular isolation, does not even recommend it to her colonies of continental proportions. With longing eyes they look to the American markets; but friends are yet on guard, and the only hope for them is in the change of guard. That proposed guard would surrender to the common commercial enemy. That surrender would mean to the granger the equivalent of a blight which would reduce his wheat yield from 20 to 16 bushels per acre, or to the live-stock man a pestilence carrying away one-fifth of his herd. This proposed policy is one which says: "If we have any favors to extend, we prefer to give them to the Patagonian nomads rather than the United States farm hand, and prefer the Mexican greaser to the American granger." [Applause.]

But more than this, the rising flood of exports from Australasia and South America is already leaping over the tariff wall; and as the floods of the Mississippi recently rose and broke the levee with immense damage, so if our levee were broken vast and desolating effects would follow. Our imports of meats for 1911 amounted to $1,062,777, and the revenue paid the Government amounted to $234,155. Our imports of cereals for 1911 were in value $1,470,006 and the revenue paid $345,916, the total revenue for meats and cereals being $580,071. What reason the majority will give for throwing away this revenue I am waiting to hear.

Coming from the State I do, having no mineral wealth, little fuel, forestry, or water power, I appreciate the gravity of the situation should this declaration of war against the farmers be carried into effect. If this occurs, we will be as helpless against the influx of foreign products as a Colorado Congressman in a Democratic caucus. [Laughter.] The markets of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore will be controlled by South America and Australasia, as London, Liverpool, and Edinburgh are to a large extent now.

To the Northwest now and to the country at large soon this is the largest tariff problem for consideration. Two reasons are assigned for this adverse policy by its supporters:

First. It will not harm the farmer.

Second. The consumer should be favored over the producer.

The first answers itself. The demand of New York City and Birmingham, Ala., for the removal of duties is to reduce the cost to their citizens. If it reduces the cost to the consumer, the producer will have to stand that reduction.

As to the second proposition—"the consumer should be favored." Permit me to ask since when in American history has the man who rises before the dawn, subdues the forest and the sod, risks all against the chance of drought, flood, frost, or pestilence; who through long day, under burning sun, in drenching rain and blinding storm, become entitled to less consideration than the man whose hours are short, shelter is sure, and periodical payment certain in mill or factory?

Why this special concern about the consumer above the producer? I have listened to all the tariff debates of the Sixty-second Congress, and from that side of the House I have failed to hear any utterance receive the approval of that side for the producers of this country; but practically every speech has had for its burden the special benefits which would come from Democratic policies to the consumer. It has sounded as if some great sanctity hallowed the man who eats or otherwise enjoys, paying little regard to the man who toils and produces.

Out in our country Republican and Democrat alike regard it as honorable to produce and creditable to toil. "Everybody works but father"—he is a consumer and the special subject of Democratic solicitude.

When a boy on the farm, under scorching sun, cultivating corn, as the tiring team followed the long rows, their sweat would attract the gadfly, which would press his free-trade proboscis into the tingling skin. I would use my whip with some force and precision, being a protectionist and a producer. My blow was aimed, not alone to stimulate the producing horse but to stop that consumer, the gadfly. Perhaps, like a great many boys, even at that age, I dreamed of a seat with the mighty. To reach it I thought best to stay with the horse. Little did I think that when I did arrive I should find a majority here standing up for the gadfly. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Of course, among men we like to see consumer and producer in one. But if the world goes forward, its directing and controlling forces must produce more than they consume. Still those who produce less than they consume, or none at all, seem to be the subject of the majority's special concern. Along the highways of the land walk the "American gentlemen," care free and dominion unlimited, the American tramp. The beau ideals of their class. They toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed just like one of these. This American gentleman is the ultra typical consumer for whom our friends across the aisle are so much concerned and who multiplies so rapidly in Democratic times.

I saw a man the other day who had built up a colossal fortune. I saw, too, his daughter with her diseased duke, whom she had bought at a European bargain counter in preference to a cancerous count. They were spending with lavish hand. Now, strange as it may appear, my prejudice was not in favor of those consumers. She was one of those free traders who liked the foreign article and bought it. She will probably regret rejecting the home-grown article of worth.

Capt. John Smith was one of the first real protectionists. When the aristocratic young gentlemen came to the Virginia colony and announced themselves as consumers and entitled to the special consideration of old Capt. John, he announced good doctrine, "That he who will not work may not eat." His first consideration was toil and production which might be followed by food and enjoyment. After all, the American people have made the greatest strides in the development of their country, and the multiplication of its wealth and its fair distribution among its citizens when its first concern has been to encourage the toiler and producer that they may not only live for the day but that they shall have plenty for the morrow, which plenty shall constantly grow for the use and enjoyment of the generations to come.

To further exalt the consumer, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in his speech on the sugar schedule, elevated the word "belly" to the parliamentary dignity that Jonah gave the same word in the cetacean chapter of Scripture. His proposition is, "He who eats is nobler than he who toils." The paraphrase, I understand, is—they favor a "bulging belly to a bending back." [Laughter.] That may explain why the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] do not always agree. The latter has frequently dared protest against caucus action and speak and vote in the interest of the producing Northwest.

I certainly have no objection to a neat-fitting belt. It gives certain gentlemen on either side of the House that "of earth earthy appearance." An expansion at the equator and a slight flattening at the poles.

I like to see working Americans well fed, well clad, well housed, with such creature comforts, which might, as their industry warranted, be called luxuries for their æsthetic and physical enjoyment. But I know that none of these can or ought to precede toil of hand or brain. I hope to be pardoned if my interest is first for the straining shoulder and fashioning hand rather than the tickled palate which merely enjoys; rather the brain that studies and conceives than the one which reads and listens to be entertained. If there is to be any rank or aristocracy in this country, let the Lord of Taste be subject to the King of Toil.

Why, then, the majority's attitude toward the granger and herdsman? It may be found in two magic statements: "Coming from the section I do" (FITZGERALD, p. 4025, RECORD), and "There is no clause in this bill that is of more interest to my own constituency" (UNDERWOOD). Of these men, one controls the main gate for revenue outlet, and the other the main door for its inlet. They speak the voice of New York and Birmingham, Tammany and Dixie, Wall Street and Steel. They have each mistaken the "rumble of his burg for the murmur of the world." More than that, they seem to have impressed that belief on the majority of this House. That belief has been crystallized into caucus action, and we have learned that the dicta of the caucus is the last word to the House. [Applause.]

How was this done? There are Democratic Members from the Northwest. Why did they submit and let this party policy say, "The farmer is entitled to less consideration than the manufacturers; the stockmen shall be reduced to the same basis as the foreign herdsman"? It was the rumble of Birmingham. Its Representative is chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. That committee named every chairman of the House. These chairmen, seated at the head of their great committees, control legislation through the report or suppression of all bills. Therefore the political life of each Member of the majority was more or less at stake.

I looked at the map and noted the latitude and longitude of Birmingham and New York. I then noted latitude and longitude of the 35 leading committee chairmen. I found that 3 were from the section of the gentleman from New York, 31 from the Birmingham section—Missouri, for obvious political reasons, included in this section—and only 1, SHERWOOD, on Pensions [applause], from the great Northwest, where the meats and cereals are largely produced. I looked over this portion of our country and find that out of the 35 ranking Republican Members on these committees 16 came from the meats and cereal section. A new application for the old, once declared sacred, ratio of 16 to 1. We know that on all revenue matters the minority during the Sixty-second Congress has been excluded from the committee room in the make-up of the tariff bills. Does anyone think if those 16 ranking Members had been chairmen instead there would have been brought in a bill so directly levied at the farmers' interests?

This assault was made in the name of the people—pronounced "pee-pul." I was curious to see how much they represented the people. I found, upon investigation, that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, according to the returns of 1910, represented a district polling 10,114 votes. The district of Mr. PAYNE, ranking minority member, polled 39,938 votes. This led me to further investigate, and the following table will show at once the location of the various members of the legislative cabinet which holds in its hands the fate of our industries, the electorate they represent, and corresponding facts about the ranking minority members:

It will be seen that the average electorate represented by the chairman is 16,236; average represented by the ranking minority member, 35,329; and yet legislation has been enacted day after day in the name of the people. In that name a political fighting machine was formed, the most neatly fitting, close connected, remorseless, and apparently invulnerable since the organization of the old Macedonian Phalanx, directed by the gentleman from Alabama—urbane, admiration-compelling UNDERWOOD. He moves like a form of vitalized steel encased in an armor of velvet. He has earned the sobriquet "Velvet Boss" from his adherents, who are many, and admirers, including all of us. [General applause.]

It will be recalled that the Macedonian Phalanx was invincible so long as its fighting was on a selected plain, but when mountain, river, or forest intervened the joints under charge were broken and it fell into disorder. The separate units became in each other's way. Defeat followed. This political phalanx, selecting its own battle ground, has been powerful, but is now placed upon the rugged, broken ground of concrete action. Its weakness is already apparent and it will go to pieces in the November battle, because levying a tariff war against a great section, where the voters are also the toilers, and where that great industry is the basis of our Nation's life, will not meet the approval of the American electorate.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTLETON], on the 18th of March, at page 4060 of the RECORD, in a matchless peroration, said:

> There has been an effort to array the West against the East and the East against the West. * * * There should be industrial peace between the East and the West. They should mutually cooperate here and elsewhere for the equalization of the burdens of taxation to be borne by the whole country.

The Northwest has not designed to array the West against the East, but, on the contrary, for years we have paid golden tribute to the upbuilding of the East, content with the development of our common country and the indirect benefits accruing to the new and developing West. But we shall insist that if you persist in reversing a policy which has been beneficial to you for decades, you will, I trust, pay us the poor compliment of knowing when our interests are assailed and of having the courage to politically fight for them. I have not suggested any sectionalism. I have merely examined and discussed the location, with pertinent attending facts, to which the two great leaders of the majority in this House made reference and plea.

We take a pardonable pride in the great cities of our east and southern coasts. But we know that a great city is a great evil, and that the constant drift of millions of our best blood from the farms to these cities is not well for those who drift, nor is it well for the country at large. We believe that any step taken to lure the young man or woman from farms to cities is unwise for the Nation. Moreover, the man or men, the faction or party, who, by lowering the commercial standing of the farms below that of other industries, and those who would say to the toilers in shop and mill and factory, we will protect you against equality with foreign labor, but to the farmer, we place you on an equality with the Patagonian nomad or Australian, and thereby render less attractive farm life and opportunity, is no friend of his countrymen. Our fields are simply open-air factories; the farmer must be an engineer to run his machinery; a scientist to properly seed, cultivate, and garner; and an economist to sell and purchase. This is the people against whom you would discriminate; the people who both vote and work, and in their districts the vote and population have a uniform relation.

On April 17 1912, page 4952 of the RECORD, Hon. ALBERT S. BURLESON, of Texas, chairman of the Democratic caucus, whose district presents an electorate of 10,111 votes, asked leave of the House to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered by the Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, of New York, delivered recently before the New York State Democratic convention, the purpose being to make a campaign document of it. Said Mr. BURLESON:

I assure the gentlemen that this particular speech will not be buried in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, for it is our purpose to circulate it in certain of the United States where the people are in need of enlightenment.

In his speech the gentleman from New York, on page 4953, declared the price of "meats and cereals," among other articles, to have been placed upon unjustifiably high levels. On the same page he says "the free-list bill" was sent to the President slightly modified from the form in which it passed the House. It will be recalled that the slight modification was the removal by the Senate of "meats and cereals."

They tell of a man who went to the river. The next day they found his clothes on the bank and took them to his disconsolate widow, saying, "Here is your husband slightly modified." Thus lightly does the majority in this House treat the almost total product of the farmer's toil.

But we have recently heard that the record of this Congress for constructive legislation would be the platform of this majority in the coming campaign. Nearly all we have been doing has been a practical reenactment of legislation passed by the last House except tariff legislation. In tariff legislation there are two classes: First, modification metals, wool, cotton, chemicals, varying from considerable reduction to cheese paring reduction or increase; second, removal of duties, meats and cerals—sugar. This latter class affects the farmer.

In striking contrast with the majority's attitude, comes the statement of ex-President Roosevelt on March 6, at Minneapolis:

There must be no discrimination against the farmer, no effort to make him pay the entire burden of reduction. His interests must be considered with the same care that is given to the interests of other American citizens. The welfare of the farmer like the welfare of the wageworker is vital to our general welfare, and no tariff system is proper that does not recognize as a fundamental necessity the need of caring for the welfare of both wageworker and farmer.

[Applause.]

This tariff attitude of the Democratic Party explains two insistent public inquiries:

First. Why did the Democratic House change front on the Tariff Board? Second. Why was Baltimore selected as a convention city?

In Congress and out of Congress, up to the time of the January, 1911, banquet at Baltimore, the Tariff Board was approved and supported. Up to that time it was expected to treat all industries on the same basis. It is well known that a Tariff Board can be useful only in determining facts when the raising or lowering of duties are contemplated. If removal of duty is contemplated, the board is useless. Since the large tariff changes from that time contemplated removal of duties from practically all the northwestern products, it was thought to be embarrassing and useless to have a board collecting and collating facts which would show the American farmer and cattleman subject to foreign competition like other lines of industry. Therefore they oppose the further existence of the Tariff Board.

Second. It does not come in the utterance of recognized party authority, but from those within the ranks and who insist upon the right to speak and let well-known facts be their corroboration, telling why the claims of St. Louis and Chicago were rejected for Baltimore. It was because they would rather tempt Providence at Baltimore, that old port where their craft parted midships in 1860, that fatal strand where the repaired wreck foundered under the pilotage of Horace Greeley in 1872, than risk the presence and wrath of a great people against whom they had levied relentless tariff war.

Such is the constructive statesmanship upon which appeal is to be made to the country. Free meats, free cereals, like free silver and other seductive-sounding slogans, will have a summer song's existence soon to be repudiated and forgotten.

The American people, in accepting or rejecting political slogans, will remember the respective party tests: Democracy asks, "How does it sound?" Republicans demand, "Is it sound?" [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERWOOD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to be understood that the great spirits who framed the Federal Constitution and set the young Republic on its career never intended that the Supreme Court should have power to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional. It was twice proposed in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 to give the Supreme Court this power and it was twice voted down, only two States voting for the proposition. Had this power been given the Supreme Court, the Federal Constitution would never have been ratified. The Constitutional Convention met in secret and the journal of proceedings was kept secret, but a vote to destroy the journal failed. Mr. Madison's copy of the proceedings of that remarkable body was only published nearly a half century after the dissolution of the convention. Virginia was represented in that convention by James Madison, jr., and John Blair. Thomas Jefferson, very unfortunately for this country, was abroad as our minister to France. At no time during the sessions of this convention were more than 12 States represented, and one of these States withdrew from the deliberations. While Pennsylvania had eight representatives in this convention, the State of New York had but one—Alexander Hamilton, who was a dominating force and was largely responsible for the undemocratic features of the Constitution. Hamilton declared for the English form of government, with a hereditary President and a House of Lords. While he failed, he did succeed in incorporating the provisions for a Federal judiciary appointed for life. Jefferson, upon his return from France, took strong ground against a Federal judiciary not elected by the people and beyond the recall of the people.

JEFFERSON'S PREDICTION AND PRESENT CONDITIONS.

Jefferson, conceded to be the greatest constructive statesman of either the eighteenth or nineteenth century, said—I quote from Jefferson:

It has long been my opinion, and I have never shrunk from its expression, that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is in the judiciary, an irresponsible body working like gravity by day and night, gaining a little to-day and gaining a little to-morrow, and advancing its noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisdiction until all shall be usurped.

Are there not signs everywhere, in the almost universal criticisms of our Federal judges, that the remarkable prophecy of Thomas Jefferson is in grave danger of realization. The present unrest among the people, the general discontent of the industrial classes, and the disposition among the struggling masses to embrace extreme measures and to applaud the noisy agitators of impossible reforms are ominous signs that we must read aright and heed. What is wrong with our courts and judges that an ex-President of the United States, conceded to be one of the most adroit politicians of his generation, is now appealing to the masses for upsetting our whole judicial system? What is wrong with our Federal judges, that a candidate for President for a third term, and the foremost rabble rouser of either the nineteenth or twentieth centuries, is exploiting the startling doctrine of the recall of judicial decisions and of submitting the alternate decision to the people en masse as a court of final resort, and by that shibboleth carrying four of the great States in the Union? Surely this is a lurid danger signal that we must heed.

Let us inquire earnestly, and with an unselfish patriotism, what is the matter with the country? What has caused this all-pervading unrest that is sapping the virile spirit of institutions and sysems grounded in centuries of experience and regarded as sacred and hoary?

It is a condition—an alarming condition—that confronts us. There is a cause for the people's lack of confidence in our Federal judiciary, and it is my purpose to show the basis of this lack of confidence and of this threatening unrest among the masses.

EXPRESSIONS FROM PROMINENT PUBLICATIONS.

In that very conservative periodical, the Bankers Magazine, for March, I find the following editorial, which expresses current opinion. I quote:

The evils of our law courts are every day becoming more and more pronounced. Business men are awakening to the circumstances and the need of radical reform measures. It is an absurd situation when one realizes that cases on file that might be settled with little or no trouble or time can be postponed almost indefinitely, and when we can not even then trust the decisions of our carefully selected judges.

The Toledo Blade of April 30, 1912, the leading Republican journal of northern Ohio, in discussing the recent sentence of an Ohio legislator, says editorially:

Their warped ideas as to justice, their habit of being lenient with the rich man and giving the poor man the limit of the law, their apparent blindness of the contempt they invite, have brought into being one of the biggest issues with which the country has ever dealt. Who would ever have thought of the recall of judges if judges had not indicated the need of such a policy?

In Collier's Weekly for February Carl Snyder gives a very concise and forcible review of one of the most remarkable cases in the entire history of our jurisprudence. So far as I can learn there has been no case presenting so many glaring judicial inconsistencies:

Five of the six judges constituting the supreme court of the State of Ohio in 1909 disbarred Charles A. Thatcher, an attorney of the city of Toledo.

He was charged with scattering among the voters a seditious libel upon judges running for reelection, among them two of the supreme court judges who afterwards disbarred him.

Their honors held his disbarment necessary "in order to protect themselves from scandal and the public from prejudice."

In 1910 they unanimously refused to reinstate him.

In 1911 Federal Judge Killits, of Toledo, one of President Taft's most recent appointees, for the same reason expelled Mr. Thatcher from the bar of his court. He held the attorney guilty of "such a libel as is made a crime under the law of Ohio."

THE THATCHER CASE.

Let me say here that I have no personal or political interest in Lawyer Thatcher or his case. I have not been asked by Mr. Thatcher, either by voice or letter, directly or indirectly, to speak in his behalf. Were Thatcher charged with being a horse thief, a counterfeiter, or a highway robber, he would be entitled to a trial before an unprejudiced court of competent jurisdiction. I am a friend of Judge Morris, a competent and honest judge, whom Thatcher criticized and opposed. I refer to this case solely in order to show the absolute necessity for courts and judges to observe their own limitations of power, under the Constitution and laws. If courts and judges expect to command the respect and confidence of the people, their official proceedings and judicial edicts must be fair and regular. Lawyer Thatcher's entire life has been a combat. He thus developed very aggressive fighting qualities. From boyhood he had supported himself. By his own efforts he put himself through college and prepared for admission to the bar, where, by 20 years of hard work, he acquired a large and lucrative practice. Thatcher early became identified with the prosecution, rather than with the defense of suits brought by those whom the juggernaut of modern industry had maimed or disabled. Mr. Thatcher was a Republican, but experience led him, finally, to think that corporate interests were actually intrenched in some of the courts, and could not be dislodged without evicting some of the judges. In 1908 he decided to appeal to the people.

Among the judges running for reelection in that year upon the Republican ticket were Messrs. Shauck and Price of the supreme court, and Judge Morris of the local court of common pleas. The latter's friends staked his fortunes upon a drastic sentence which he had just imposed upon the members of a local "trust." This proved him, they said, a fearless, independent, "people's judge," and an enemy of corporate arrogance. His Democratic opponent, who was indorsed by two independent organizations, was advertised, on the other hand, as the nominee of the breweries and the trusts and as the abject creature of a political "boss." Mr. Thatcher opposed the reelection of all the three judges above named. To aid in the campaign against Judges Shauck and Price, of the supreme court, Thatcher circulated a pamphlet, which he called "The Judicial Reform Bulletin." He also reprinted a pamphlet of the Ohio Federation of Labor, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and other railroad labor organizations, rehearsing numerous votes by Supreme Court Judges Shauck and Price in favor of corporate litigants.

I quote a paragraph from this circular:

The various decisions of the Supreme Court have caused the judges of the lower courts to hesitate in rendering decisions favorable to the common people, feeling that their decisions will be reversed when reaching the supreme court of the State.

The "Judicial Reform Bulletin" saw the light about 10 days before election. After the election an informer showed the circular to Judges Shauck and Price and their associates in the antechamber of the Supreme Court of Ohio. These august judges pretended to believe that this informer was acting on behalf of the bar of Lucas County, the home of Lawyer Thatcher. Out of hand the court appointed a committee to prepare and file charges based on the offending publication. Not all the active Republican politicians of Toledo were placed on the committee; neither were all Thatcher's personal enemies appointed. But every member of the committee belonged to one or more of these classes. They sat for six weeks behind closed doors while their zealous brethren brought in sensational "copy" about Thatcher. Thus assisted, the committee finally produced a remarkable document. Curiously enough, the very words and phrases of the old sedition law were dug up to express the enormity of Thatcher's offense. Sedition was droned in over 20 variations, which covered about 84 pages, all loaded with allopathic doses of malignant erudition.

Thus armed, the purifiers of the bar prepared to retaliate upon the vilifier of the bench. Thatcher asked to be tried before a disinterested circuit or common pleas court, in Toledo, and to be spared the hardship and expense of attending over a hundred and twenty-five miles from home, with a suite of witnesses. About 100 Toledo attorneys petitioned the supreme court to transfer the case to a Toledo court. Two of the supreme court judges favored it, for the court was more than two years behind its legitimate work, and the Thatcher case was certain to take, as it did, a week to try. Moreover the State constitution gave that court no power to try disbarment cases. It is strictly an appellate or reviewing court, and it had never before assumed to exercise this jurisdiction and had repeatedly refused to do so. True, there is a statute purported to confer the power, but Thatcher was charged with a criminal libel, and the statute in question sanctioned disbarment for crime only after the accused had been tried and convicted by a jury. And I need not add here that if Thatcher had libeled a judge or judges that the Ohio law of libel was available to adequately punish him, either by fine or imprisonment, or both. He is financially responsible. Instead, the prosecuting interest against Thatcher fled from the remedies provided by law to redress and punish the abuses of free speech, and invoked a revenge not authorized by any law. And that by a prejudiced court without original jurisdiction. The votes of two other judges, with those of Shauck and Price, made a bare majority for holding the case. Against the constitution and the statute both, the court set its own "inherent prerogative"—and, of course, prerogative won.

I quote an inherent prerogative from this prejudiced and capricious bunch of Ohio supreme court judges:

They said:

Considering the unsettled state of the law in this State and the peculiar circumstances of this case, we are entirely warranted in exercising jurisdiction without being in any way under obligation to do so in every case which may be brought to our notice.

Thus, inherent prerogative relentlessly scorched Thatcher, while it mercifully screened its scorching rays from others far more culpable. A Republican State senator, a personal friend of one of the judges, and a lawyer, was accused of participating in the loot of a poor man's little patrimony. The local judge (it would seem) was disqualified from disbarring him, inasmuch as the judge later was sentenced to the penitentiary as an accessory. But the Ohio Supreme Court spurned this complaint. The same extenuation could not be pleaded in favor of another small group of lawyers from Mr. Thatcher's home city. They were charged with precisely the same misconduct for which Thatcher was presently to answer. In 1906, in an anonymous campaign sheet, "The Independent Citizen," they had libeled and cartooned a judge, who was then a candidate, as a cringing slave, with an iron collar about his neck, led by an iron chain, and made to bow before a bloated potentate, throned upon a pyramid of money bags. In this case the court shut and bolted the door of its antechamber in the face of the complainants. It refused to permit the accusation even to be filed. It has been claimed that the supreme judges were above all suspicion of partiality in the Thatcher case. They say so themselves. I quote from the court's inadequate pretense:

We have entertained the present case with the intention to be absolutely fair to the judiciary and the public interest on the one side and the respondent on the other, and we believe we have not failed in that regard.

Marvelous judges. They confess taking it for granted from the start that the "judiciary" and the "public interest" were the real adversaries of Charles A. Thatcher. Where else, since the time of Jeffreys, shall we look for judges so impartial as to sit by proxy at the prosecutor's table and in person upon the bench. And where else, since the day of Jeffreys, has inherent prerogative been so vehemently championed.

So Thatcher was brought to face "the judiciary" in its double capacity, including its poor relation, "the public interest." He fled to the sanctuary of the Constitution. He laid hold of the horns of the altar, but all in vain. There stood inherent prerogative, "the guardian of the law as it is," and dragged him out, baited him for six days, then disbarred him for life. One judge voted for a temporary suspension. This would have been the sentence, but Shauck and Price, the two members of the bench whom Thatcher had criticized, were on guard, jealously watching out for "the immaculate judiciary" and "the public interest." They turned the scale in favor of permanent disbarment.

EXERCISED THE RIGHT OF AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

Because Thatcher had exercised the right of every American citizen, the right of free speech, he was summarily deprived of his right to earn his living in his chosen profession. Here I quote again from the court:

> The question is not whether his offense might be punished as a contempt or by prosecution for libel, nor in what capacity he was acting. It is whether he has shown himself by lack of appreciation of ethical standards and by unworthy conduct to be no longer worthy of being recognized as an officer of the courts.

Thus under government by inherent prerogative it makes no difference whether criticism of judges be true or false, whether it be libelous or not. The court is justifiable in disbarring a lawyer if his ethical standards are not up to the ideas of the "inherent prerogatives" of a court acting both as judges and prosecutor.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the gentleman will yield right on that point. I understood the gentleman to say that the court had no jurisdiction in that case.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I said so.

Mr. MURDOCK. Was it not possible for Mr. Thatcher to appeal to some higher court?

Mr. SHERWOOD. There is no higher court in Ohio than the supreme court of that State.

Mr. MURDOCK. I understood that this was an intermediate court.

Mr. SHERWOOD. No, it was the Supreme Court of Ohio. He was up to the highest court in the State.

In April, 1911, the Legislature of Ohio, after careful investigation, by an almost unanimous vote of both houses, declared Thatcher professionally and morally fit to practice law, and directed the court of the State to receive him as an attorney. Representative Smith, a prominent lawyer and member of the house judiciary committee, in discussing the Thatcher bill, declared on the floor of the Ohio House of Representatives that a messenger from the supreme court had requested the members of the committee to wait upon that honorable body for the purpose of discussing that bill and another bill requiring the judges to report the grounds of their decisions. The judiciary committee sent word back that they would give the judges a hearing in the committee room as they would any other citizen. Think of the judges of the supreme court of the great State of Ohio assuming original jurisdiction of a disbarment case of a local attorney, who had criticized said judges in a political campaign. Think of these judges sitting in a case in which they were necessarily full of animosity toward the unfortunate victim of their ultrajudicial indignation.

Mr. PROUTY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. PROUTY. I have some curiosity to know what became of that act of the legislature restoring Thatcher to his right to practice.

Mr. SHERWOOD. It was declared unconstitutional.

Mr. PROUTY. I anticipated that.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I will get to that a little later. As I remarked in opening, this is the most remarkable case in the entire history of jurisprudence in Ohio, including over a century of political life. I doubt if there is a case of like import in the political history of the United States. There is nothing to compare with it in the entire jurisprudence of England. In England to-day, the bar, composed of the barristers, is governed by the general council of the bar. The solicitors are under the discipline of the statutory committee of the Incorporated Law Society. These two bodies occasionally exchange views in matters concerning the relations of the two branches of the profession. Upon complaint against a barrister, the general council of the bar reports its findings with recommendations, perhaps of disbarment in exceptionally serious cases, to the Benchers of the Barrister's Inn, who alone have the power to act, and nearly always follow the recommendation. Disbarment is inflicted only for moral turpitude, amounting usually to crime. The only case in English practice approximating the Thatcher case occurred in Colonial New York 178 years ago.

In 1734 the royal judges of the Province of New York indicted a New York newspaper publisher, Peter Zenger, for libel in criticizing the court. They disbarred his New York attorneys who started in to show the publication was true, and they threatened to disbar any lawyer of New York Province who might venture to defend him. The former student of Gray's Inn, England, although an old man, journeyed to Albany and actually got Zenger acquitted by a jury under the very noses of the royal court. The fame of his achievement spread not only through the colonies but the mother country as well. From this famous case arose the expression "That's a case for a Philadelphia lawyer." Since then there have been no recorded cases like that of Peter Zenger, or approximating it in royal prerogatives, until the unfortunate Thatcher, of Toledo, Ohio, was arraigned before the Supreme Court of Ohio and disbarred. But this is not all that has happened to Thatcher. The next move to ruin Thatcher was to disbar him from practice in the Federal courts.

I quote briefly from a valuable paper in Collier's Weekly entitled "Judicial Tyranny and Judicial Ethics," by Carl Snyder:

JUDICIAL TYRANNY AND JUDICIAL ETHICS.

I opened a late number of the Federal Reporter, and my eye caught the title: "In re Thatcher—Disbarment for Libel." The opinion was by Justice John M. Killits, recently elevated to the Federal bench for the northern district of Ohio by President Taft. It reviewed the case at length, giving the reasons why Charles A. Thatcher, a lawyer of Toledo, should be barred from practice in the Federal courts, as he had already been barred from practice in the State of Ohio. I read through the 46 closely printed pages of this extraordinary document. When I finished I rubbed my eyes and said:

"Am I living in a Republic or in Russia?"

It was not in the least a judicial opinion, but from end to end an insidious ex parte special plea, endeavoring to bolster up what Judge Killits only too plainly believed to be a very weak case as it had been handled by the Ohio Supreme Court. In his attack on the supreme court justices Thatcher had reprinted a carefully drawn and itemized criticism of these two judges which was being disseminated by the Ohio Federation of Labor in cooperation with the Brotherhood of Trainmen and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. These charges recited case after case decided by these two judges, invariably in favor of the corporations and against the poor defendants, and declared these judges to be unfit for office. It was a presidential year, and the combined attack of Thatcher and the federation failed of its intended effect. Shauck and Price were reelected. But the actions of the Supreme Court of Ohio are not a tenth part as important as the action of Federal Judge Killits. The Ohio Supreme Court is chosen, nominally at least, by the people, and in due course is subject to their wrath. Judge Killits was not chosen by the people but by the President. This judge holds his office for life and is subject to no recall except by a laborious impeachment by the Congress of the United States. Where, gentle reader, do you imagine that this Federal court, "free," as Judge Killits says, "from bias or local prejudice," resided?

Shall you be astonished to open the almanac and read under the list of Federal judges:

For the northern district of Ohio, John M. Killits; address, Toledo, Ohio.

It happens there are two Federal judges for this northern district. Why was not the case brought before Judge Day, who did not live in Toledo, and who, presumably, would have had no interest in putting Thatcher under the ground?

Without going further into the case I wish to point out the four facts which emerge from this effort judicially to dynamite this Toledo insurrecto:

1. There was no move to disbar Thatcher, and apparently no suggestion to disbar him, before his campaign against Morris and the supreme court judges.

2. Neither the Ohio Supreme Court nor the Federal court decision goes so far as to suggest that the libel alone was sufficient ground for disbarment.

3. It is perfectly clear from the opinion of Judge Spear of the Ohio Supreme Court that the other charges trumped up against Thatcher after his assault on the courts afforded no sufficient ground for disbarment. If every collection transaction of attorneys which had been questioned by client or adversary is a sufficient ground for disbarment, how many lawyers would there be left practicing law?

4. It is perfectly clear that if Thatcher had never assailed these judges there would have been no disbarment proceedings.

I leave it to Mr. Hapgood's philosophical pen to moralize upon the effect of proceedings of this sort on the part of bench and bar on a public which is asked to respect our courts.

So much and much more Carl Snyder wrote in Collier's Weekly about this remarkable case. Judge Killits appointed on a new investigating committee three gentlemen of highly respectable character and unimpeachable political orthodoxy, only two of whom were personally hostile to Thatcher. The old charges were there, and then some more. Thatcher's attorney suggested that the gentlemen interested in prosecuting him had contributed money to obtain affidavits against him. The judge, at first, was indignant, but when it developed by the admission of a prosecuting witness that he, with others, had contributed to such a fund, the judge changed his view to the extent that he commended his conduct and refused to permit any inquiry as to whether other witnesses for the committee had done the same. Thatcher, after a trial before Judge Killits and a long and agonizing wait, was disbarred from practice in the Federal courts. It was charged that the influence which secured the recent appointment of Judge Killits were all hostile to Thatcher, and that Judge Killits was prejudiced against him from the start. It was also charged that Judge Killits had decided the case against Thatcher before the hearing occurred, and that he held his decision for months in abeyance in order to prepare plausible arguments and find some mummified precedents to fortify his opinions. Whether these reports are true or groundless I have no basis for an intelligent opinion. It is a delicate and difficult task to give, offhand, the mental and moral status of the average Federal judge. I prefer to let this case rest on the facts as stated by Carl Snyder in Collier's Weekly. He is a disinterested critic.

But this is not all that has happened to Thatcher. The law of the Ohio Legislature restoring Thatcher to the practice of his profession was, on February 12, 1912, declared unconstitutional by a bench of four common pleas judges, sitting in Toledo, one judge (Curtis Johnson) dissenting. This on the ground that the law of the Legislature of Ohio was legislative usurpation of judicial power.

But this decision has no bearing on the merits of the Thatcher case. It does not touch the question as to Thatcher's lack of ethical ideals as involved in the decision of the Ohio Supreme Court.

Judge Chittenden, one of the common pleas judges in this case, who concurred with the majority, says:

It should be distinctly understood that we are trying no question of the fitness or unfitness of Mr. Thatcher to practice law.

A majority of the judges held against Thatcher on three propositions:

First. The disbarment of Thatcher by the supreme court was a judicial act.

Second. The legislature that passed the law restoring Thatcher exercised judicial functions which belong exclusively to the courts.

Third. In the disbarment of Thatcher the court exercised an inherent function, or a natural attribute of all courts; a function or power not subject to review by the legislature.

In dissenting from these propositions, Judge Johnson claimed:

First. That the supreme court had no jurisdiction in this case, and he proved it by quoting from the constitution of Ohio as follows:

The supreme court possesses original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, procedendo, and such other appellate jurisdiction as may be provided by law.

ONE JUDGE DISSENTING.

Judge Johnson dissenting, denied the existence of inherent power in a court created by the Constitution and subject to such legislation as the supreme law-making power may enact.

Let me ask where does the supreme court obtain its inherent prerogatives or inherent power? It does not take a Philadelphia lawyer to understand that whatever power is given this court by the legislature is not inherent power. The claim that the legislature exercised judicial functions in passing a law relieving Thatcher from the unjust decrees of a court that was without jurisdiction in the case, is lacking the element of either equity or justice. As Judge Johnson says:

The legislature may contribute power to the court and may enlarge its jurisdiction.

Hence it necessarily follows that the authority to contribute power to this court must include the right to limit or restrain the power of the court, especially when the court wantonly violates both the letter and spirit of the constitution in assuming jurisdiction of a case, outside and beyond the limitations imposed by the constitution. Judge Johnson held that if the disbarment of Thatcher was an inherent power lodged in the supreme court for its protection, this inherent power could not legally be extended to disbar Thatcher from practice in any other court. To hold that the supreme court can extend its own inherent power to all the other courts of the State is to claim that the supreme court can legislate, by inherent power. This doctrine is odious to law and equity and common sense. [Applause.]

I quote from Judge Johnson:

Each court is a separate and entirely distinct entity. Each is independent and has its sphere of action and existence. Hence the inference is plain that the judgment of the supreme court, acting by virtue of its inherent power, can not control the judgment of the courts of common pleas as to the exercise of their inherent power.

Judge Johnson gives the law in this case as it is, and as it should be, and as it must be, if we are to have a Government where the laws of the supreme lawmaking power are inviolate from the encroachments and usurpations of prejudiced and venal courts.

When the Supreme Court of Ohio assumes jurisdiction in a case inhibited by the constitution, as in the Thatcher case, where is the remedy to correct the outrage, unless it be lodged in the supreme lawmaking power, or the power that the constitution of Ohio lodges in the legislature?

All the judges who decided this case are able, experienced, and honest, and I believe they were without prejudice. But the majority evidently gave too much consideration to "inherent prerogative," and judicial comity, and the exaggerated ego of the supreme court judges.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT CASE.

I refer to another case of continent-wide notoriety that has caused more criticism and aroused more feeling among the industrial classes than any case in the entire history of the Federal jurisprudence of the United States. On December 23, 1908, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor; Frank Morrison, secretary; and John Mitchell, president of the Mine Workers' Union were sentenced to imprisonment by Justice Wright of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for contempt of court, upon the charge that they violated the terms of an injunction granted on petition of the Bucks Stove and Range Co. of St. Louis. As this case involves such rank injustice and so much judicial outrage, I propose a brief review of some of its salient judicial atrocities. In pronouncing sentence upon these labor leaders Justice Wright exhibited such a malignant spirit and used such violent language, and showed such alarming symptoms of pathognomonic hysteria that even as cautious and conservative a journal as the New York Evening Post referred to him editorially as exhibiting "an excess of heat, and indulging in turbid rhetoric." The Outlook magazine (this was before the Colonel took charge of the contributing editor's easy chair) assumed a startled attitude, deprecating his lack of judicial poise, remarking "the dignity of language was all manifested by the supposed criminals," referring to Messrs. Gompers, Mitchell, and Morrison.

This ill-tempered judicial harangue occupied two hours and twenty minutes and only ceased when the real culprit on the bench had exhausted his vocabulary of invective; then he emitted the following: "It is the judgment of the court that you, Frank Morrison, be imprisoned in the jail of the District of Columbia for a term of 6 months; you, John Mitchell, for a term of 9 months; you, Samuel Gompers, for a term of 12 months."

HONORED MEN JUDICIALLY PERSECUTED.

These three conservative, honored, and honorable officials of the industrial workers of the United States, all law-abiding, liberty-loving, large-hearted leaders in the uplift movement of the men and women who are doing the world's work, left the presence of this cruel and unjust judge in silence. Samuel Gompers is the ablest and most conservative labor leader in either the United States or Europe. [Applause.] For 30 times he has been elected president of the American Federation of Labor, covering a period of 30 years. All this time he has been constantly in the limelight, and during all these years of his wearing work for the weary workers there has never been even a suspicion against his honesty or his fidelity among the workers. He has always stood for law and order. He has opposed strikes, and has, for the past decade, favored peaceful arbitration. He has opposed arraying labor against capital. He has devoted the best part of his robust life to every humane movement for the moral and physical betterment of his fellow workers. And his broad humanitarianism, his true Christian temper, while under this cruel and unjust sentence is well illustrated in his calm and dignified review of the case. I quote from Samuel Gompers:

The questions involved in this decision are fundamental questions of constitutional liberty. The sentences imposed upon the defendants sink into insignificance when compared with the court's denial of the right of free speech and freedom of the press. If Justice Wright were at all familiar with the history of the labor movement, if he understood its purposes or its ideals, he would have hesitated before exhausting his vocabulary in denouncing those whom he is pleased to characterize as "the throng" and "the rabble." Our much-maligned labor movement is, in the language of Gladstone, "the bulwark of democracy." It has done more than any other agency to raise to a higher standard of life the working people of our country; it has protected the weak and the helpless against the strong and avaricious; it has taken the child from the mine and the mill and the factory; it has liberated the woman from the garret, the sweatshop, and the hovel; it stands for education, for religion, and for morality; it has restrained the impetuous and stayed the violent; it has given courage to the timid and hope to the despondent; it has stood for construction and improvement and against destruction and debasement; it reaches out the right-hand of fellowship to the fair and humane employer; it has stood like a rock against the inconsiderate, the grasping, and the inhumane employer; it stands for law and order, it opposes anarchy and turbulence; it stands for progress, for moderation, and for liberty; it stands for self-respect, for decency, and dignity.

These condemned labor leaders had committed no offense; they had violated no law. They had not even violated the unjust edict of a servile court. Justice Wright gave the sum and substance of this notorious case when he said:

No defense is offered save these: That the injunction, first, infringed the constitutional guaranty of freedom of the press; second, infringed the constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech.

This is all we need to fittingly illustrate the wrong and outrage of the prison sentence of Justice Wright. Let every patriotic citizen contrast the malignant spirit exhibited by this ill-tempered judge with the dignity and courage and fidelity to the best ideals of true Christian citizenship of Samuel Gompers and his associates.

And did Justice Wright give us the law in this case? No. Did he give us the facts? No. He did neither.

The first amendment to the Constitution reads as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the rights of the people peacefully to assemble to petition the Government for redress of grievances.

THE JUDGE AND THE CONSTITUTION.

In commenting on this section Justice Wright said:

So, with respect to the inhibition against abridging the freedom of speech and of the press, the Constitution nowhere confers a right to speak, to print, or to publish; it guarantees only that, in so far as the Federal Government is concerned, its Congress shall not abridge it, and leaves the subject to the regulation of the several States, where it belongs.

In other words, this judge holds that a sacred right, guaranteed by the Constitution, that the supreme lawmaking power of the United States has no right to even abridge or modify, can be annulled by an inferior Federal judge. He asserts that the guaranteed rights of a citizen, that the supreme lawmaking power has no right to even abridge, "is subject to the regulation of the several States where it belongs," and further, this limber-minded judicial pettifogger says "the Constitution nowhere confers a right to speak, to print, or to publish." It strikes me that any mature citizen with as much gray matter in his cerebrum as a gray goose will understand that when the Constitution inhibits the abridgment of free speech that, by clear implication, it confers a right to speak, to print, or to publish. Justice Wright held in this case that a judge may do by injunction what Congress is prohibited from doing by legislation. Can there be any doctrine more dangerous to individual rights and personal liberty than this? It is an infamous doctrine, and a Federal judge holding such views is, in my judgment, unfit to hold any judicial office. [Applause.]

A leading labor leader, in a well-poised article in the American Federationist, well says:

Apparently with deliberate design to assist in insidiously undermining constitutional rights by judicial usurpation, Justice Wright says that this injunction only "incidentally" prohibits the exercise of free speech and freedom of the press. How can it be "incidental" when the prohibition is absolute and permanent? Unless constitutional rights are secure from "incidental" as well as every other sort of invasion they are not secure at all. If an injunction may be issued prohibiting freedom of speech and of the press for the purpose of protecting an employer's alleged "property rights" in labor, then there is no limit beyond which our judges may not go in destroying the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech.

Holding that a Federal judge, without a hearing under the forms of law, may, by a judicial edict, deprive a citizen of his rights "incidentally," is a convincing proof that Justice Wright has no adequate conception of the constitutional rights of an American citizen, and is therefore a judicial ignoramus; or else he is so full of prejudice and animosity against the labor leaders that he is utterly unfitted to administer impartial justice. Let us now examine the facts. When we learn that neither Samuel Gompers, nor John Mitchell, nor Frank Morrison violated the spirit or purpose of the injunction we get a better understanding of the injustice perpetrated by Justice Wright in his imprisonment sentence. First, let me say the judicially condemned officials of the American Federation of Labor did not initiate the boycott against the Bucks Co. It simply approved the action of one of its affiliated bodies. Hence, if a boycott against a nonunion concern is a crime, the court's action should have been instituted against the union that inaugurated the boycott. Crime by proxy is a new element in our so-called jurisprudence. Take the case against John Mitchell. He was sentenced by Justice Wright because he signed, with full knowledge of its contents, the "urgent appeal" which accompanied the twenty-seven and odd thousand circular letters to the various secretaries, counseling their distribution. This "urgent appeal" and accompanying circular for financial aid to defend this case in court is presumed to have originated in the Norfolk convention of the American Federation of Labor, which was held in November, 1907. The facts are that Mr. Mitchell was not present at the Norfolk convention, did not attend any session of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, either then or at any subsequent meeting at which the "urgent appeal" was under consideration. Mr. Mitchell did not sign or have knowledge of the preparation or the circulation of the "urgent appeal." Justice Wright knew all these facts and circumstances when he sentenced John Mitchell to imprisonment. He knew that John Mitchell was absolutely innocent of even any attempt to discredit the court's injunction.

Take the case against Samuel Gompers. As soon as the injunction became operative he took the name of the Bucks Range Co. from the "Don't patronize list" in his newspaper organ, and from that time until this the name of the company has not appeared thereon. It is equally true that Secretary Frank Morrison, either by word or deed, in public voice or public print, never violated the injunction. Any lawyer who examines the record of proceedings in this case will become thoroughly convinced that Justice Wright did not sentence Messrs. Gompers, Mitchell, and Morrison to prison because they had violated the injunction, but because they had defended their constitutional rights as American citizens and the rights of the great body of workers whom they represent. In doing this they were compelled to criticize a judge who not only flagrantly violated the Constitution but consigned to a culprit's prison three law-abiding American citizens, innocent of any violation of this drastic order of a prejudiced court.

But there is another phase of this case. Upon appeal to the higher courts the sentences of Justice Wright upon Messrs. Gompers, Mitchell, and Morrison were reversed. The court held that he imposed a criminal sentence in an injunction suit for civil relief. The highest court, after administering Justice Wright a severe rebuke for the course he had pursued and finding an easy way to let him out of his difficulty, intimated that he might, if he thought the dignity of his court had been hurt, begin proceedings on his own initiative. Before the ink on the higher court's order was dry, he appointed a so-called committee to make an investigation as to whether there was reasonable cause to believe that Messrs. Gompers, Mitchell, and Morrison were guilty of contempt of court. And whom did he appoint as this committee to perform the judicial function of ascertaining whether there were good grounds to believe these men guilty of contempt of court? Why, the very attorneys who were the prosecutors in the first case.

The defendants were again haled before Justice Wright, and to give his unwarranted procedure the appearance of regularity, he "invited" the other justices of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to sit with him upon the final argument. During the taking of testimony Justice Wright acted in the dual capacity of prosecutor and judge. As examiner he reserved for the full court objections which counsel for the defendants made, and then as judge he peremptorily decided objections made by his prosecuting committee. He was either examiner or court. He certainly could not act in the two capacities at the same time.

The arguments in this case closed March 15, yet Justice Wright up to this hour has not rendered his decision. Under what practice, under what considerations of decency and a fair regard for the honor, the dignity, and the rights of these labor leaders, Gompers, Mitchell, and Morrison, has this modern Jeffereys (without his brains) withheld his decision nearly seven weeks? It is an outrage, a travesty upon justice and fair dealing.

The encroachments of the Federal judiciary, masquerading as the oracles of immutable law, upon time-honored rights guaranteed by organic law, is responsible for a large part of the popular agitation and unrest among the workers. In milder form these outrageous edicts of some of our Federal judges, notoriously Justice Wright, are patterned after the infamous Jeffreys, who voiced the aggressions of the Stuarts, which led to the uprising of the Round Heads under Oliver Cromwell.

Call it evolution or revolution, or what you will, a better and broader estimate of civil rights and duties has taken possession of the American people. It is the revolution of intelligence, based upon the assumption that they who toil and till should share in the harvest; that the workers in mines and mills, in steel and wool and cotton, should have a living wage, and a living wage means more than a living wage for the day. It means a sufficient wage for the men and women who do the world's work and who produce all our wealth and prosperity, to lay by something for the infirmities of age. We have no old-age pension for the workers as they have in the German Empire. In this great Continental Republic we take small interest in the welfare of the worker when his working days are over.

SOME VALUABLE OPINIONS.

I am glad I am not alone in sounding a danger signal on the many and glaring usurpations of our Federal judges. These numerous and drastic injunctions against the workers have aroused much popular indignation and called forth severe criticism from lawyers, jurists, and students of sociology. I quote a few specimens. In October of 1907 Justice Moody, late of the Supreme Court of the United States, said:

I believe in recent years the courts of the United States, as well as the courts of our own Commonwealth (Massachusetts), have gone to the very verge of danger in applying the process of the writ of injunction in disputes between labor and capital.

Hon. Thomas M. Cooley, president of the American Bar Association, said:

Courts with their injunctions, if they heed the fundamental law of the land, can no more hold men to involuntary servitude, for even a single hour, than can overseers with a whip.

Judge M. F. Tuley, of the appellate court of Illinois, used these words:

Such use of injunction by the courts is judicial tyranny, which endangers not only the right of trial by jury, but all the rights and liberties of the citizens.

Gov. Sadler, of Nevada, said:

The tendency at present is to have the courts enforce law by injunction methods, which are subversive of good government and the liberties of the people.

Prof. F. J. Stimson, of Harvard University, one of the greatest legal authorities, in his new work on Federal and State constitutions, after citing many authorities, says:

These are sufficient to establish the general principle that the injunction process and contempt in chancery procedure, as well as chancery jurisdiction itself, is looked on with a logical jealousy in Anglo-Saxon countries as being in derogation of the common law, * * * taking away the jurisdiction of the common-law courts, and depriving the accused of his trial by jury.

Judge John Gibbons, of the circuit court of Illinois, declared that—

In their efforts to regulate or restrain strikes by injunction, they (the courts) are sowing dragons' teeth and blazing the path of revolution.

Why is it that far more consideration is given in England to the rights of the wageworkers than in the United States? Let me quote from a recent law of the British Parliament:

Be it enacted by the King's most excellent majesty and with the consent of the Lords, spiritual and temporal, and the Commons in Parliament assembled by the authority of the same: It shall be lawful for one or more persons, acting on their own behalf, or in behalf of a trades union in contemplation of a trade dispute, to attend peacefully and in a reasonable manner at or near a house or place where a person works or carries on business, if he attend for the purpose of persuading any person to work or to abstain from working.

This in the land of King George, the hereditary successor of George the Third.

How do the patriotic Sons of the American Revolution like the comparison between the English "trade-dispute law" just quoted and the injunction record of our Federal courts, denying even the liberty of free speech to the American worker?

Shall the workers of the United States be compelled to turn for light and hope from democracy under an elective President to democracy across the Atlantic under a hereditary king?

I am not here to condemn all Federal judges, or even a small minority. I am only giving a few terrible examples of unjust and cruel usurpations, where the most vital constitutional guaranties have been ruthlessly invaded.

What recourse have any people, even under a Constitution guaranteeing civil rights to all alike, when they find themselves in the clutches of judges appointed for life, who are deaf to popular appeals for justice and whose official edicts, however cruel and unjust, can not be even modified by the supreme lawmaking power.

Talk about contempt of court of such a court as that presided over by Justice Wright. The only contempt due in this instance is the contempt of all justice-loving citizens for the atrocious edicts of such a court. Since Runnymeade, when the rude farmers of England invested King John in his castle until they had wrested from his grip the great Magna Charta, the safeguard of personal liberty in every land has been the alertness of the common people, jealous of their inborn rights.

I am not for the recall of judicial decisions. That is revolution. I am for evolution and progress, under proper legal remedies, as provided in the Constitution.

Article 3 section 1 of the Constitution reads as follows:

The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior.

The question of good behavior is an ethical question and not a legal question. And I am willing to submit that question, not to the idlers in the courthouse yard, but to the sober judgment of all the people.

In conclusion I repeat what I had the temerity to say on this floor on January 25, 1911.

The best thought of the best thinkers is that in a republic with a written constitution, guaranteeing to every citizen a free expression of opinion on all current topics, there should be no public official—executive, legislative, or judicial—who is above removal or recall of the people. The remedy (and it is far more important and vital than the election of United States Senators) is an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of all judges by the people, with limited terms of service. This is our supreme patriotic duty, as it involves the perpetuity and safety of our cherished free institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I feel somewhat modest in venturing to say a word about the bill itself and to keep this vast audience here at this late hour, but I suppose I ought to express the fact that the minority does not concur in all the provisions of this bill. I am happy to say, however, as to the chairman of the subcommittee having charge of the bill for the first time [Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina] that while there are many features of the bill to which I disagree, the gentleman from South Carolina has brought to the consideration of it prodigious industry, unfailing patience, and courtesy, and I have no question that in all his tedious investigations he has ever had before him the purpose of improving the administration of the Government. My only criticism is that I do not think the results correspond entirely with his wishes. He has had, and the committee have had, it seems to me, such a rage for economy that they have fallen into parsimony. I think they have gone too far in cutting down the force here in Washington and in absolutely refusing to make increases either in force or in salaries; but I do not desire to discuss the important features of the bill now.

There is the question of the Commerce Court, the Bureau of Manufactures, the tenure of office of civil employees, all matters of great importance, in which I differ from the opinions of the majority.

But the chairman has indicated that when these matters come up liberal allowance will be given under the five-minute rule, and I much prefer to discuss them then, when the audience which will vote on them is present. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I will occupy no more time now. I simply wanted to indicate my position on the bill that there might be no understanding that the committee was unanimous.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit some remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I do not ask the gentleman to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire recognition?

Mr. MANN. I do some time, but I want a quorum here when I speak.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman want a quorum now?

Mr. MANN. I do if I talk now, but I should prefer to speak to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee having charge of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, upon investigation found that in 1898 that bill carried $21,714,566. The amount carried in this bill increased regularly each year, until the present year the appropriation is $36,157,209. If the expenses of the Government were to increase during the next 10 years as they have during the last 10 years, it would be necessary to appropriate $2,000,000,000 a year instead of $2,000,000,000 for each Congress.

The committee believed that the time had come to call a halt. With tremendous momentum it requires an effort to stop. I think that this committee deserves some credit for resisting the importunities that were made upon it to increase the bill over that of the present year.

I wish to say for the minority of the committee who participated in making up the bill that our action was pleasant and harmonious. There are very few items in the bill upon which there was serious difference of opinion. There is only one item in all the bill, perhaps, that can be considered of a partisan character.

Mr. Chairman, a court of equity holds a trustee personally and pecuniarily responsible for any improper use of public funds. We are trustees; we are dealing with the public funds; and while there is no court of chancery before which we can be called upon to account for an unwise or an improper expenditure of the public money, each one of us ought to be honest enough with himself and honest enough with the country to set up in his own bosom a court of conscience, before which questions of the expenditure of public money could be tried.

The newspapers have indicated that the committee have cut remorselessly and mercilessly the salaries of the Government employees. There has been practically no cutting of salaries. I believe that less than a dozen salaries have been cut in this bill out of the 15,000 people that are provided for.

I believe that every salary that has been cut, save one, was cut at the instance of the department in which the salary is paid.

The total appropriations made for the fiscal year 1912 for the objects provided for in the accompanying bill amount to $36,157,209.85, which sum includes $500,000 for the Thirteenth Census, appropriated at the present session in the urgent deficiency act, and also $225,665, the amount expended at the mints during the fiscal year 1911 out of the permanent appropriation for parting and refining bullion, which sum is used by the Treasury in approximating the total appropriations for mints and assay offices for the fiscal year 1912. The permanent appropriation in question is repealed, to take effect at the close of the current fiscal year, and therefore specific appropriations are necessarily made in this bill in its stead for the next year.

The accompanying bill appropriates $33,519,194.06 and makes specific appropriations for 14,877 salaries.

Comparing it with the appropriations for the current year and with the estimates submitted to Congress for the ensuing fiscal year, the following results are shown, namely:

It appropriates $2,638,015.79 less than was appropriated for the same service for the current year.

It appropriates $2,165,153.34 less than was submitted to Congress in the estimates of the departments.

It provides for 406 fewer specific salaries than are appropriated for this year.

It provides for 706 fewer salaries than were recommended in the estimates, or 603 less than were specifically estimated for after deducting the 103 now payable from a general appropriation in the Supervising Architect's office, whose status as to mode of payment is not changed by the bill.

It should also be added that the bill provides for no increase in salaries or rates of compensation for the next fiscal year over those being paid during this fiscal year, except in the one case of a janitor, whose pay was inadvertently reduced the current year to $750 and is now recommended to be restored to $840.

Appropriations for fuel for the Capitol power plant, amounting to $83,000, are omitted from this bill with the purpose of considering and providing for the same in the sundry civil bill, where other expenses of the power plant are provided for. Taking this transferred sum into account, the apparent reduction of the accompanying bill under appropriations is $2,554,615.79.

In addition to the considerable reductions that are specifically recommended in the salary roll of the Government, a general provision, quoted at length at another point in this report, is recommended in the bill, that will prevent the filling of vacancies, except by promotion, occurring in the classified service at Washington during the ensuing fiscal year.

There is also recommended, as quoted elsewhere in this report, a provision requiring the Secretary of War to reorganize the classified service of the War Department, as provided for in the bill, so as to reduce the whole number of the force not less than 10 per cent, the salaries of all places embraced in such reduction to lapse and be covered into the Treasury.

TREASURY REDUCTIONS.

It should be stated, in justice to the Treasury Department, that of the total decrease of 406 existing specific employments proposed by this bill in all of the executive departments 164 of them are in the Treasury Department alone, and practically all of that reduction is made on its initiative in submitting the estimates to Congress at the beginning of this session. It is interesting and important also in this connection to state that during the last Congress, in providing for the Treasury Department for the fiscal years 1911 and 1912, a total reduction was made of 342 salaried places, with annual compensation amounting to $294,140; added to the number diminished in this bill, the total reduction in places in the Treasury Department for the three fiscal years 1911, 1912, and 1913 amounts to 506 specific employments, with annual pay amounting to $501,480.

This represents a reduction for the three years of 14 per cent in the total number of persons employed in the Treasury during the fiscal year 1910, and almost, if not quite, as large a per cent of reduction in the aggregate of salaries paid that year.

As a set-off to this large reduction in annual expenditures for salaries, for the three years there has been appropriated, including amounts in this bill, the sum of $58,970 for labor-saving devices, the use of which will continue over an indefinite period of years, and for material and rental of machines an annual expense is provided for of $76,800. The latter is wholly for the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, in which office alone there have been and will be abolished during the three fiscal years 176 places, with total annual salaries amounting to $208,860.

USE OF FIGURES IN EXPRESSING SUMS OF MONEY.

The bill as printed proposes innovations in appropriation legislation by expressing all sums of money in figures instead of spelling them out at length as heretofore, and by grouping, as nearly as possible, all offices or employments by titles or designations and appropriating for them by numbers and rates of compensation, thus avoiding much needless repetition.

The committee have given careful consideration to both of these rather radical departures from long-established custom in methods of legislation, and have taken counsel concerning the same with the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Public Printer, and other officials whose duties bring them into intimate relation with the matter of appropriations and expenditures or who are familiar with the art of printing, and are therefore competent to advise as to the possibility of error in thus expressing the appropriation of money, and have found a general concurrence in the opinion that the proposed changes will facilitate ready comprehension of items in the bill in the course of its detailed consideration in the House; that it will not increase the possibility of errors in engrossment and enrollment; and that it will materially reduce the present great volume of appropriation legislation—an end much to be desired in view of the large bulk and increasing number of volumes required in publishing the laws after the adjournment of each Congress. These innovations, if found practicable and meet with approval by the House and Senate, will, if applied to all appropriation bills, materially reduce the unwieldy bulk of the session laws.

CHANGES IN SPECIFIC EMPLOYMENTS.

The specific changes in the numbers or grades of officers or employees of the Government and their rates of compensation, as compared with the present law and without reference to transfers from one bureau to another, recommended in the bill are as follows:

SENATE.

The bill appropriates for officers, clerks, and other employees in the service of the Senate in the same terms as the law for the current year, except that for certain employees the usual reduction is made growing out of the shorter term of their employment during the ensuing session as compared with the present longer session of Congress; a reduction is made, in accordance with the estimates, of 5 clerks at $2,000 each and 10 stenographers at $1,200 each to Senators who are not chairmen of committees; and a reduction is also recommended of 10 policemen in the Senate Office Building, providing for the same number for that service as is provided for in the House Office Building.

The appropriations of $18,480 for miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building, and $3,600 for rent of the warehouse for the storage of public documents for the Senate, are also omitted.

The judges of the Commerce Court shall have authority, and are hereby directed, to make any and all orders and to take any other action necessary to transfer as aforesaid the cases then pending in the Commerce Court to said district courts."

This bill contains some important legislative provisions. I believe that when we reach these provisions in the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule we ought to have liberal debate. Believing that there will be fair debate on these propositions under the five-minute rule, I shall not detain the House at this late hour in discussing them, except to say a few words on the section dealing with the classified service.

The section touching this matter, incorporated in the bill, is clearly subject to the point of order, but it was put in the bill because the committee realized the we were coming to the parting of the ways. There is a great lobby in Washington engaged in the work of endeavoring to induce Congress to pass a civil pension bill.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. HAMILL. I have introduced a civil-service pension bill, and I wish to say to him I know of no lobby working for it, except an intense, compelling public sentiment that is largely making itself felt on Members of the Legislature.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I supposed the gentleman was one of the champions of this extraordinary doctrine, and that he was aware of the fact that a distinguished statesman from Ohio is at the head of a committee which raised $30,000, according to the Washington newspapers.

Mr. HAMILL. May I make this suggestion, not wishing of course to unduly abuse the privilege the gentleman has given me to make an interruption——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILL. That the condition is extraordinary, perhaps, in the sense that it has never before received serious consideration from Congress, but it is not extraordinary in the sense it was in any degree unjust or unfair or that Congress will not in the exercise of its wisdom and intelligence in the near future act upon it, and so I take the liberty of taking direct issue with the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the gentleman's privilege, of course. We have incorporated in this bill a provision that requires people who are appointed to the Government service to be appointed for a specified period of time and they may be reappointed without further examination. But as long as people are appointed to office for life—and there is a propaganda going on that they are treated like slaves and that the Government is acting as if it were a government of barbarous people in not providing for them—I think it would be very well to change our method of appointing people and appoint them for a specified period of time. Let them know that at the end of their term their reappointment depends upon their service and I think we would hear less of our bad treatment.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. If the rule is a good one to apply to the District of Columbia, why is it not equally a good rule to apply to post-office employees and other employees throughout the United States? Understand I do not say I approve the rule, but I wondered why the committee in establishing such a rule for the District of Columbia only did not go further and make the same rule apply to all Government employees.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that, so far as I know, the Government employees outside of the District of Columbia have not been so persistent in their demand for a civil-service pension.

Mr. HILL. Oh, I think the gentleman is mistaken about that—entirely mistaken about it. I think the demand is not only as strong but stronger, and sustained by local influences besides, at home through all branches of the postal service and the other services, and I am not sure I am not in favor of it; I am rather inclined to think I am, rather than have passed drastic measures at this time. Gentlemen, I remember distinctly, if the gentleman will pardon me, in 1895, just before Mr. Cleveland went out of office, with the departments filled with gentlemen of his political faith, they were swept in by thousands under the civil-service law without examination, making them employees for life or during good behavior. It was discussed on the floor here, and I had a resolution drawn at that time requiring that they should take the civil-service examination, an examination which I believed in; but after full consideration and thinking that possibly it might be considered as partisanship, that resolution was not offered, and every one of those thousands of Democratic employees were swept by a Democratic President for life into the Government service. Now, this is directly and radically the opposite to that action. You say that every one of these Republican employees who have been appointed during the last 16 years shall end their terms in July or October of this year. Is not that rather a drastic proposition, in view of the precedent your own President set for you?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; the term of office will expire July 1, 1914.

Mr. HILL. Very well; whenever it is, it is in the near future.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They can be reappointed without reexamination.

Mr. HILL. If they are less than 65 years old.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to have the 65-year age limit stricken out. The committee has no desire to limit the age to any particular number of years. I am willing for any age limit to be stricken out and let a man be reappointed until he is a hundred years old if he is still efficient. This is to bring it to the attention of the House.

Mr. HILL. Well, I think the gentleman has succeeded in that.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. As I understand, one of the objects of the civil-service law is to get these appointments out of politics.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Has the gentleman considered in the preparation of his bill the possibility and the probability that by making appointments for five-year periods the very purpose of the civil-service law would thereby be defeated? What does the gentleman think about the possibility of the operation of the law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not think it would be defeated, because a man would not come in and go out during the same administration, and at the expiration of the period of five or seven years, whatever the period may be, if we adopt any, if the man at the head of the department should refuse to reappoint he could not have any possible knowledge as to who the successor would be, because he would have to get him through the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. LEVY. Does the gentleman seriously mean to throw these people on the world at the age of 65 years, with no provision for them whatever, and to do that in this age of advancement, when every business corporation and firm is providing for its employees in some way? Does the gentleman mean seriously to throw these people on the world at 65 years of age?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I was not aware that every corporation and business firm so provided.

Mr. LEVY. The business firms, nearly all of them, nowadays are providing for their clerks. If they retire them, they retire them with a pension, but here you propose to throw these people absolutely on the charity of the world at 65 years of age. Is that the idea of the bill? I do not think the people of the United States will indorse it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The idea is to bring this matter to the attention of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I belong to a school of people who believe that when the service of a civil employee of the Government ceases his pay should stop. What I say about this bill can not be based upon any ill will toward any human being in the service of the Government. So far as I know them, my relations with them have been pleasant. My feelings for them are of the kindliest, and I wish them well.

My objection, Mr. Chairman, is not personal, but to my mind there is involved in this legislation a fundamental principle. If the Congress is ready to embark on that wide and unfathomed sea, well and good; but I believe that every feature of this question ought to be thoroughly discussed before we undertake such a system.

A bill that is now pending provides for the retirement of the departmental clerks at the ages of 65 and 70 years. I want to say to the members of this committee that if you pass a law that allows the clerks of the departments here in Washington to retire on a pension, there is no argument that can be made in their behalf that can not be made for other employees of the Government. When you shall have provided that the departmental clerks may retire upon annuities, what will you do with the men who belong to the Life-Saving Service, whose lives are endangered in an effort to save human life, when they knock at the doors of Congress and ask for similar treatment? When you shall have heard the men of the Life-Saving Service and have provided for them in their old age, because of the splendid and meritorious services that they perform, then will come another powerful and worthy class—the railroad postal clerks. They number 17,000 men, who, next to the engineer and fireman, are on the most dangerous part of the train; who, when they go out from their homes for a run, after kissing their wives and children good-by, do not know whether they will come back alive or dead. I say, Mr. Chairman, that if we enter upon this benevolent scheme of taking care of Government employees in their old age, there is no argument that you can make against placing the railway postal clerks on a civil pension list. I undertake to say that if you enter upon the scheme of civil pensions there is not a Congress that can refuse the request of these men.

When you shall have provided for them there will come up from the customhouses of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and San Francisco, and all over the country, a plea that no man can resist: "You have provided for the Government clerks in Washington; you have provided for the Life-Saving Service; you have provided for the railway postal clerks; we have worn out our lives in the service of the Government in these offices." What argument can you make against placing the man who works in the customhouse of New York, or Boston, or San Francisco, or Chicago upon a pension roll after you have placed the department clerks in Washington and other employees there?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has been so engaged in the Committee on Appropriations with his necessary and arduous work that I think possibly it has escaped his attention that a bill has already been reported to the House which practically proposes to pay $50 a month to every Government employee who is injured in the service.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I did not know that such a bill has been reported to the House. I knew that numerous bills had been introduced.

Mr. MANN. There has been such a bill reported to the House, and it was stated here the other day by the gentleman who introduced the bill that it was the expectation to pass it soon in the House. That statement was made amidst considerable applause among the few who were then present.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. NYE. That relates only to liability for injuries received, and that is quite distinct from this idea of pensioning civil employees.

Mr. MANN. As I said, it is for injuries to people who are injured in the service. There is not very much distinction between giving a man a civil pension when the man in injured in the service and in ordinary conditions granting a pension to one who becomes diseased while in the service so that he can not work, or one who becomes old in the service and who has not saved up anything, or to one who for any other reason is unable to earn a livelihood of his own and wants to be supported out of the Federal Treasury. It is only one step from another.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. When you shall have done all that, Mr. Chairman, then will come the rural letter carriers, 40,000 strong, who go in sunshine and in rain, in mud and in dust, in heat and in cold, and the city letter carriers, who tread the streets in slush and cold and heat, and they will tell you that you have provided for the Government clerks in Washington and elsewhere; that they have worn their lives away in this arduous service, and what will be your answer? There is no argument that you can use against it. If you are filled with the milk of human kindness, if you are possessed of a sense of equity and right, then you must extend these beneficent provisions of law to these great classes.

Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman yield to just a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMILL. You have described what might possibly happen if we open the door to pensions, but do you see anything so terrible in the picture which you have drawn, considering that this Government of ours never stops to consider the cost of doing what is right?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have considered it a good deal. I am older in years and older in service than the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL], and I remember what he does not remember, namely, how gently they asked for civil pensions a few years ago and how bold they are now.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not hear the beginning of the gentleman's remarks, I am sorry to say, but it struck me, from what I have heard, that he is assuming that unless we take the action that is proposed in this bill it will necessarily follow that we will have to pension all civil employees. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that is a fair assumption?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I believe we have reached that point where we must look forward to doing one or the other.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman think unless we do take the action proposed in the bill that it will necessarily follow that we must enact a civil-service pension bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I believe the civil-service pension is inevitable unless you make the term of service in the classified service definite.

Mr. NORRIS. And the bill fixes it at five years?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Five years.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the gentleman think that it will necessarily follow that if we fix five years that most of these positions would go back on the political "pie counter" and become the spoils of office?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I hope not. I do not think Congressmen should have any patronage whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that danger would be great, and while I concede with the gentleman that the pension question is a great one, and I perhaps to a great extent would agree with the gentleman in that respect, I am firmly of the belief that the other dilemma will bring more evil vastly than the pension system, even if it should come, which I would not be willing to admit or concede.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman was not here when I began my address. I have stated that the committee is not wedded to the 5-year proposition or the 65-year proposition, or any other age. We simply brought it in in order to get it before the House, and it will be open to discussion and open to amendment.

And, Mr. Chairman, after you shall have provided for all the employees in all the departments, you have simply begun to open Pandora's box. It leads as inevitably as anything can lead to an old-age pension; and why not?

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOWMAN. Does the gentleman see any objection, in case it is considered necessary to advance the wages of Government employees, to their capitalizing the amount that is necessary to raise their wages as a pension to be given to them after a certain number of years of service or in case of illness? Do you see any objection to that?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have not the slightest objection to the Government paying them good wages and letting them provide a retirement fund like everybody else.

Can not the people who have worn out their lives on the hillsides, in the valleys, in the shops, in the factories, and in the mines in order to provide mankind with comfort and luxuries, say to you: "You have provided for an old age of comfort to all in the Government service; why can you not provide for us?"

The old mother in Israel, whose hands are wrinkled and in whose cheeks are the furrows of trouble, and upon whose head are the frosts of 70 winters, who has toiled out her life in hard, unremunerating work, will hold out her hands in appeal to you, and you must provide for her.

Mr. Chairman, there are people in this country who believe that those who are on the pay rolls of the Government are the favored people of the earth. I have not troubled the appointment clerks in these various departments of the Government, but one day there came to me a man of splendid character, unquestioned integrity, and fine education, whose family I knew and who were my friends. I accompanied him to the District Building in order to solicit a place. He was told in my presence that there were 3,000 applications for the place and not a vacancy. He was told that if they gave him a position it would be at only $900 a year to begin with, and he was then getting $1,100. He said, "Mr. Commissioner, I would take it. I work 14 hours a day. I work on Sunday. I have to live in close proximity to my place of business. If I had a Government position my hours would be less; I could move out a mile or 3 miles and select such a place as I liked. I get no 30 days' leave of absence; I get no sick leave; I get no holidays." He was a pharmacist. He was an educated man, working 14 hours a day in the District of Columbia, with no 30 days' leave of absence, no 30 days' sick leave, no legal holidays, no half holidays in the summer. He thought, and in that thought he will find that the majority of the people in this country agree with him, that those who have Government positions are favored individuals.

There are in every country unfortunate individuals; there are men who are found in their old age in poverty. I hope there is no place on this earth where the civilized and Christian people are not willing to make ample provision for their comfort as they go down the valley of the shadow of death. But I deny that that same human sympathy that would impel us to provide for and take care of the old would justify us in entering upon a system of legislation that would encourage men not to provide for their old age.

I believe in the men who are filled with the milk of human kindness. I believe in the men who love their fellows. Personally I believe that the only satisfaction we get out of life is what we do toward making other people happy; but I think, Mr. Chairman, that as legislators we ought to weigh well the first step in legislation and ascertain the final result.

The President said recently that the great question to be solved in the future was socialism. I do not know whether he used the word "socialism" in its true sense or as a synonym for anarchy. He evidently did not think of it in its true sense, because, if the newspapers print the truth, the President and all his Cabinet are behind this scheme to start a civil pension list in Washington. Well, gentlemen, if that is not socialism I do not know what it is. And the word does not scare me, either. There are a great many things that are socialistic, as we call them, that are mighty good.

I say, and this is all I want to impress upon this House, that before we pass a bill retiring the clerks in the departments at Washington we ought to think about what we are doing. We ought to think whether we are willing to follow it up and provide a pension—they do not call it a pension; they call it a retirement fund or annuity—we ought to follow it up and ask ourselves the question whether we are willing to provide for all the employees of the Government throughout the United States, and then we ought to go one step further and ask if we are willing to provide for the old age of all the people.

The men who never had a seven-hour day, the men who go to the field with the sun and return from the day's work with the falling dew, should be provided for. The poet expressed it a long time ago. It was that way in his day and it is that way yet:

> The plowman homeward plods his weary way
> And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Those are his hours. That is his service to mankind. Are you willing to provide for him? When the time comes to vote, if you bring your bill here proposing to grant an annuity to the departmental clerks in the city of Washington, I am going to offer an amendment, if I can, that will extend those provisions to every man in the service of the Government. Now, you can do as you please about it. I will vote for that amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the hour is late, and I desire to incorporate in my remarks certain matters in order that the Members may read them in the RECORD and familiarize themselves with the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Mr. Chairman, in calling the attention of this House and of the country to the measure introduced by me on August 14, 1911—H. R. 13568, a bill to establish a bureau of markets in the Department of Agriculture—I wish to say at the outset that in my opinion it is as much the function of the Agricultural Department of our Government to acquire and diffuse knowledge on the question of how to sell the products of the farmer as it is the duty of that department to acquire and disseminate knowledge concerning better methods of producing farm products.

It is one thing to raise farm products, it is another thing to sell farm products, and it is just as much the duty of the great Agricultural Department of the United States Government to assist in disseminating knowledge concerning the latter as the former.

We hear much to-day concerning the flocking to the cities of our rural population, and each recurring decennial census ever shows the trend to be toward the cities. Members of Congress have advanced many theories as to how to combat this centralization in the cities and the leaving of our farms. In my judgment one of the best ways to combat this evil tendency is by our Agricultural Department not only undertaking to instruct the farmer how to raise better crops, but also how to get a fair price for these crops when produced.

What boots it if the farmer raises the most magnificent crop of potatoes, or onions, or cabbage, or beans, and so forth, ever recorded before in our history, if when he goes to sell these products the price he receives is not one-half of what the ultimate consumer pays for them?

If the Members of this House will admit, as I think they will, that these premises are correct, I feel that the first question I should take up in presenting this matter is the question of whether or not the condition exists which requires action, and, this being established, the next point I wish to discuss is what that action should be. I will therefore first discuss the condition that confronts us.

I will state that the first time my attention was particularly called to this question arose under conditions in my district incident to the advent of the cotton-boll weevil. The production of cotton in the district which I represent went down, as the result aforesaid, from 180,000 bales in 1904 to 10,000 bales in 1910. Our people were forced into other avenues of agriculture. They diversified in every direction. They raised a great deal of farm produce which comes under the practical heading of truck farming. I found a great deal of complaint made by them, not that they could not grow these different kinds of products, but that when they grew them they could not get a fair return therefor, although they informed me that the final consumers in the city were paying practically twice the amount for their stuff that the farmer was receiving.

While they had a general idea and a general knowledge concerning the verity of this proposition, yet it was not until quite recently that I was able to obtain figures that would tend to show that this discrepancy did exist, so that same could be put in concrete form and furnish information of a definite character.

In July, 1910, I noticed in an article published by Mr. B. F. Yoakum some figures on this subject that, were it not for the conservative source whence they come, might seem to be highly exaggerated. Among other things, Mr. Yoakum states in the article referred to:

> After a careful investigation it is estimated that during the past year—
> Meaning 1909—
> the farmers received and the consumers of the city of New York paid for the following articles of food approximately the amounts respectively shown:

	Paid to farmer.	Paid by consumer.
Eggs	$17,238,000	$28,730,000
Cabbage	1,825,000	9,125,000
Onions	821,000	8,212,000
Milk	22,912,000	48,880,000
Potatoes	8,437,000	60,000,000

There are other articles mentioned, but I mention the above for brevity and because they are, as a rule, the products of the small farmer or truck grower, which is the class of farmer which, in my opinion, is the most interested in this matter, as the discrepancy seems to be greater in his products than any others.

I admit that these figures are simply astounding, but coming from such an extremely conservative source as Mr. Yoakum, I feel that it can not be said that they have been given without careful study of this question. If this condition prevails with reference to the markets of the city of New York, I do not doubt that it prevails to more or less extent in each of the cities in our Union.

In the parish of Tangipahoa, in my district, our principal industry is truck growing. They are to-day shipping vegetables and berries to all parts of the Union, even shipping strawberries at this season as far west as Seattle, Wash., as far north as Chicago, and as far east as New York City. For years the best citizens of that parish have given thorough study, based on experience, to the marketing of farm products, and I have learned from both private conversation and by letter, from men well qualified to speak, that this problem is one of the greatest that confronts the producer. In a recent letter to me one of the most enterprising and intelligent truck growers writes—after referring to an editorial in the Southern Agriculturist on the subject—among other things—> will say we have too many leeches between the producers and consumers. I read statistics a few days ago that the farmers obtained $6,000,000,000 in 1911 for all farm produce, but the consumer paid thirteen billion. I do not consider that a square deal—and neither do I, and I do not believe that any Member of this House would so consider it. Later on I will quote others to show that this gentleman's figures are correct.

Such interest in the question of better markets has been manifested among the farmers in the district which I represent until I am firmly convinced that not only my own district, but every rural district in the United States, is interested in this question, for I believe that these conditions of enormous difference between what the farmer receives and the ultimate consumer pays are general throughout the land.

Proceeding upon the theory, however, that information and definite figures are what this House wants and not general allegations as to conditions, I wish to quote a few extracts from the address of Mr. Yoakum, delivered at a meeting of the Texas Farmers' Congress, at College, Tex., on July 26, 1911. I quote:

According to Government reports the producer receives 46 cents for products of the farm for which the consumer pays $1. It is not encouraging to the young farmer boys to see that out of every dollar being paid for the products of the farm their share is only 46 cents, while the remaining 54 cents are distributed among others before these products reach the consumers' tables.

Last year's agricultural products were worth $9,000,000,000 to the farmers. The Government used farm values in getting figures for this total. Assuming that the farmers kept one-third of the products for their own use, the consumers paid over $13,000,000,000 for what the producers received $6,000,000,000. The cost of getting the year's products from producers to consumers amounted to the enormous sum of $7,000,000,000. The real problem to deal with is not high cost of living. It is high cost of selling.

I feel that Mr. Yoakum has herein furnished a term, to wit, "the high cost of selling," which, as a matter of convenience and reference, will be very generally used hereafter by all discussing this question. Mr. Yoakum further says in that address:

The late S. A. Knapp, who had charge of farm-demonstration work in the Department of Agriculture and who had more to do with the recent agricultural development in the South than any one man, used to say that one-eighth of successful farming required scientific knowledge, that three-eighths was an art, and the remainder was simply business. The business end of husbandry has been sadly neglected, and that is the chief reason why agricultural growth makes such a poor showing in comparison with other national development.

The farmers of this country to receive better prices do not have to experiment with untried theories. They only have to copy what others are doing successfully. For instance, the people of Denmark 30 years ago received $12,000,000 for their butter, eggs, and bacon. Then they began the organization of market societies. Now the same character of products brings in over $100,000,000 a year. Nearly all of their dairy products are marketed through cooperative creameries, and their egg-export societies have 25,000 members.

* * * * * * *

The commercial waste in the distribution of farm products is reduced to a minimum. They share in the profits of economical marketing.

The necessity for early action is emphasized in the following paragraph, which I quote from the same address:

Advanced methods in handling the business of the farm are bound to come. What we must realize is the cost of delay. We have already waited too long. We should now work for prompt improvement in marketing facilities.

I now quote views of this gentleman as to the remedy:

The Government should assist in finding a way for better farm marketing. There should be a market bureau of the Agricultural Department devoted to accumulating and distributing information on best methods and best markets for selling.

* * * * * * *

The Government should systematically trace the movement of all farm products to the place of final use and give the country the information. It should give the country the benefit of a thorough investigation of improved selling and marketing systems, including all means of distribution and handling. Results will be immediate. The farmer will reduce his selling cost when he learns in detail about wagon-haul costs, freight charges, cold-storage charges, distribution in cities, profits to dealers, losses through deterioration, and all things which enter into marketing expense. As the selling expense decreases so will the returns to the farmer increase and the cost of living decrease.

Further on, Mr. Yoakum says:

Nine billion dollars is a big lot of money. It is the one great item of our national resource. In connection with this great wealth-producing business, it is certainly conservative, figured from any standpoint, to say that on the $9,000,000,000 farm value crop the producers should receive $2,000,000,000 more money than they are now receiving. These $2,000,000,000 saved would mean to the farmers a $2,000,000,000 saving on a $9,000,000,000 crop. When we discuss figures so large they become mystifying.

These $2,000,000,000 we could save, according to Mr. Yoakum, by a system of getting more direct from the farm to the consumer, is more than the combined revenues of France, Italy, and Germany, and more than double the cost per year of running our own Government.

In an address delivered in the city of Washington last summer, the Secretary of Agriculture, among other things, said:

The price received by the farmer is one thing; the price paid by the consumer is far different. The distribution of farm products from the farm to consumers is elaborately organized, considerably involved and complicated, and burdened with costly features.

In this same address the Secretary of Agriculture further says:

The farmer does not get one-half the price the consumer pays. Therefore the great mass of farmers are not benefited by the rise in price in all goods, and there is no benefit to the country at large. A few middlemen, selected individuals, who step between the farmer and consumer, are the persons who reap the benefit.

If my memory is correct, the Secretary of Agriculture, in his annual report to Congress in 1909 or 1910, gave the amount as 54 per cent which disappears between the producer and ultimate consumer—that is to say, the difference in price which the producer receives and the ultimate consumer pays.

Of course, I am not for a moment contending that under the best methods of farm marketing or the marketing of farm products that there must not be some considerable outlay for transportation, middlemen, and so forth, but what I do contend is that when so large an amount as 54 per cent, as contended by the Secretary of Agriculture—or even a greater amount than that as contended by other authorities whom I have quoted—that there must be of necessity something greatly out of joint in our method of marketing farm products. I am informed that in some countries abroad—Holland, for instance—only 25 per cent disappears between the producer and ultimate consumer, and I am of opinion that there is not a country on the globe where the difference is so vast as it is here in the United States.

I am not in this argument or the measure which I am pressing for the consideration of the House seeking to do an injustice to any calling whatsoever; I am simply seeking to do justice to all classes in this matter. Anything that would tend to bring the producer and ultimate consumer closer together would, in my judgment, be in the interest of both of said classes, and would at least tend toward following the law of supply and demand in a legitimate way.

Transportation companies and retailers are both necessary factors in the distribution of farm products, and I think are recognized as such by all thinking men.

Having established the fact, as I believe I have, that there is entirely too great a difference in what the farmer receives for his products and what the ultimate consumer pays for same, I shall now pass to the next question, to wit, that of securing some remedy.

It might appear to some that a far-reaching investigation, either by this House or the Senate, acting through a special committee of Congress, might get at the bottom of this matter and make such recommendations as to legislation which might solve the problem; but it is my judgment that it would be better to have some department of the executive branch of the Government make a special and specific study as to the best methods of marketing farm products and give the benefit of that information directly to the farmer.

If such division or bureau finds that legislation is necessary, they can report such findings to Congress with such recommendation as they deem best. If, on the other hand, they find upon a full and complete study of the question that certain methods of marketing, certain practices with reference to getting the producer and ultimate consumer closer together, are found to be feasible under existing law, and they can give that information direct to the farmer, both the farmer and ultimate consumer will be greatly benefited thereby.

With this end in view, I introduced H. R. 13568, a bill to establish in the Department of Agriculture a bureau of markets. This measure provides that it shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, to make diligent investigations of the methods of marketing farm products, and especially with regard to finding out and recommending the fairest and most direct method by which farm products may reach the consumer from the producer by accurately distributing information on the subject in question and on the subject of the best methods and best markets for selling, and providing that said bureau shall from time to time make such public reports of its work as the said Secretary of the department may direct.

As to the details of the measure, they are matters that can be easily perfected by the committee, and I am not in any manner wedded to the specific wording of the bill. What I am after is to have a careful study made of this question by competent, honest, and industrious officials under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, devoting their time specifically to the subject matter.

With a view to remedying this unjust and unfair condition which undoubtedly exists, such a working force can, in due time, certainly work out a better method of marketing farm products than exists to-day. As to the avenue along which we should proceed with reference to solving this problem, and as substantiating my views for the establishment of some bureau or division to specifically study this question, I will call attention of the committee to the report of the Committee on Agriculture of the United States Senate on April 3, 1912, which contains the following from letters from the Secretary of Agriculture:

> My views are that a division of markets in our Bureau of Statistics, adequately equipped with funds and employees to properly handle the matters involved in the proposed legislation, would be of great benefit to the farmers of the country, enabling them to be advised frequently and regularly as to the various points to which their products could be shipped, thus avoiding congestion in certain markets and paucity of supplies in others, and that the probable cost of such a division would be much more than offset by the saving that would be effected to farmers through the aid that would be given them in the proper and economical marketing of agricultural commodities, particularly those of a perishable character.

Further on in the report the Secretary of Agriculture says:

> The interests of the farmer are as greatly involved in the proper marketing of his surplus products as they are in their production. The two things, production and marketing, are intimately connected, and in that view it would be wise to place the proposed division in the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture.

I therefore submit, Mr. Chairman, that a condition confronts us in the marketing of farm products which requires a remedy, and I further submit that from my investigation and study of this question, extending over a period of nearly two years, that the best avenues along which we can proceed is along the lines I have heretofore suggested.

The question that presents itself in this matter affects the welfare of the great mass of people in the uttermost parts of the country; it makes no difference whether it be one who dwells in the largest city of the land or the farmer who lives in a most sparsely settled rural community, all would be better off if some method were shown along practical lines by means of which he who actually produces a product may exchange that product most directly with him who ultimately consumes it.

The consumers in our large cities would get their necessities of life at a cheaper price than they do now, and the producer of that article would get a higher price than he now receives, because no political economist, in my judgment, would urge that a normal and fair condition exists where more than half of the price disappears between him who produces that article and him who ultimately consumes it.

If the farmer received, say, 10 per cent, 15 per cent, or 20 per cent more than he does to-day for his products he could afford to see the price which exists to-day to the ultimate consumer materially lessened and still be better off than under present conditions.

The "high cost of selling" is certainly one of the greatest problems of the day, and we can not solve it by leaving present conditions alone and devoting all of our energies in the Agricultural Committee and in the Department of Agriculture to directing that great department to improve the methods of cultivation and production of products, when the fact stares us in the face that even when they are produced the farmer finds them blocked from a fair market.

The cry of "back to the farm" will continue to be the cry and will go unheeded unless something is done to secure to the farmer some way of solving "the high cost of selling."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that after the first paragraph of the bill is read that I may have the right to half an hour in debate under the same latitude as general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that when the first paragraph of the bill is read under the 5-minute rule that he be entitled to the floor for 30 minutes as under general debate. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. To-morrow morning will satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I hope it will not be to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like it if the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] could be recognized for 10 minutes before we begin the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule, and then the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will have half an hour to-morrow morning.

Mr. MANN. Was my request agreed to?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; for to-morrow morning.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, if it be agreeable to the House and the gentlemen of the subcommittee, I ask that the privilege that has been extended by unanimous consent to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] be also accorded to me, after the reading of the first paragraph of the bill, for half an hour, if I desire. I probably shall not use all of the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to object to that. There was a special reason why no objection was made to the request of the gentleman from Illinois. But general debate on the bill is to be closed to-night.

Mr. HAMILL. Then, Mr. Chairman, availing myself of the consent of the House, I would rather take my 10 minutes at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

[Mr. HAMILL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I call for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24023, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How much does the increased appropriation amount to?

Mr. ADAMSON. Something near $1,000,000. I have not added it up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 22043, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference; also to waive the reading of the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What was the amount carried by this bill when it passed the House?

Mr. ADAMSON. About $100,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the Senate has added $1,000,000?

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, I do not say that it is $1,000,000, but they have added a good deal.

Mr. MANN. The Senate has added a good deal to it, the most of which goes to the Pacific coast, up in Alaska, and some on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that the bill lie on the Speaker's table until to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will withdraw that request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. RICHARDSON, and Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota.

MINORITY VIEWS ON THE SEAMEN'S BILL.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have five legislative days in which to file minority views on the bill H. R. 23673, generally known as the seamen's bill. (H. Rept. 645, pt. 2.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries may have five legislative days in which to file minority views on the seamen's bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MISSOURI RIVER, NEBR.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 23774, providing an appropriation to check the inroads of the Missouri River in Dakota County, Nebr., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to proceed, in accordance with such plans, specifications, and recommendations as may be approved by the Chief of Engineers, to take such steps as may be necessary to check the inroads now making by the Missouri River upon the banks of said river in Dakota County, State of Nebraska, opposite the city of Sioux City, Iowa, as may appear to be necessary, and to build such revetment and other protecting work along said river as may be needed for the permanent protection of said bank. That for said purpose there is hereby appropriated, from the money remaining in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $60,000. That said appropriation, being needed to supply an emergency, shall become available from the time of the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether there are any other bills for repair work of any damage done by floods at individual places?

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I know of none. This is the only bill of the kind—the last bill of the kind that has been considered by our committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, at another time I objected to a bill of this kind and expressed the opinion, which was acquiesced in, that these matters should be taken care of under general bills. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLERBE] has indicated the reasons why this is important at this time, but so that nobody may proceed upon the theory that upon requests for unanimous consent such bills will be considered, I wish to announce that hereafter I shall object to unanimous consent for the consideration of such bills.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I shall not do in this case, I would like to ask the gentleman whether this $50,000 will be likely to be expended for the purpose of an emergency fund or whether it is intended, if it is not all expended now, to have a lot of it remain available for any time in the future?

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee went into the matter very carefully. This is to be an emergency fund, to be expended entirely between now and what they call the June rise.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest that the bill be amended by inserting, on page 2, line 3, after the word "dollars," the language "or so much thereof as may be necessary." The bill makes an appropriation of $50,000, and under the law that remains available until expended, and is so carried upon the books. If it is only for emergency, and that is what I understand this to be, it ought to be changed so as not to leave an unexpended balance.

Mr. ELLERBE. I have no objection to an amendment of that kind.

Mr. MANN. There is a committee amendment that has not yet been acted upon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 3, by inserting after the word "dollars" the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 3, by striking out the word "remaining."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Speaker, I move to further amend by striking out the last sentence of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 4, 5, and 6, strike out the words "That said appropriation, being needed to supply an emergency, shall become available from the time of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ELLERBE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, for 8 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SWITZER, until May 25, 1912, on account of important business.

To Mr. DAVENPORT, for 10 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he is going ahead to-morrow with the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We hope to go on with this bill to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, May 3, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am very anxious at this stage to put into the RECORD the amendments that I intend to offer to the bill. It seems to me that it would put them in a convenient form to be seen by Members of the Senate. I sought to do so yesterday morning, and objection was made. If necessary, I will read them myself so as to get them into the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments proposed to be offered by the Senator from Georgia will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments referred to are as follows:

Amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. SMITH of Georgia to the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, viz:

Amend the bill by striking therefrom all of section 3.

In section 30, after the word "before," in line 8, insert the words "or after," so that the section will read:

"SEC. 30. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as doing away with or affecting any common-law or statutory right of action or remedy for personal injury or death happening before or after this act shall take effect."

Amend section 5 by adding at the close thereof the following proviso:

"Provided, That if the employee elects to furnish his own physician or surgeon to care for himself, he may recover from his employer such expenses incurred therefor by him as are reasonable and just."

Amend, after line 16, on page 4, section 7, by adding:

"Provided, That where it is made to appear that the employer, through its officers and agents, had received knowledge of the accident within 30 days after the happening thereof, no notice whatever shall be required to be given of the action by the employee to the employer."

Amend by adding at the close of section 7 the following:

"It shall be the duty of the employer, within five days after receiving notice through its officers or agents that an employee has received an injury in its service, to notify such employee whether said injury was received while such employee was employed in such commerce by such employer; and in any legal procedure which may follow the employer shall be bound by such notice, and will not be permitted to deny its truth, and on failure of said employer to give said notice said employer shall not be permitted to deny, in any legal procedure, the claim that said injury was received by such employee while employed in such commerce."

Amend by striking section 10.

Amend by striking section 11.

Amend section 13, paragraph 4, by adding at the close of the same: "Provided, That either party may take the testimony, to be used before the adjuster, of a witness either by deposition or interrogatories, according to the rules of practice of force in the United States district in which the case is pending."

After the word "require," in section 13, paragraph 9, line 11, insert the words "The reasonable attorney's fees of the employee shall be taxed as cost against the defendant by the adjuster or by the court."

After the word "require," on page 20, section 14, line 21, insert the words "or without giving notice where such notice is not required."

On page 22, section 14, after line 11, add: "Provided, That where an employee institutes suit for an injury, claiming that same did not take place while he was employed in interstate or foreign commerce, and fails to recover in such suit, the limitation of the time for his right to proceed under this act shall begin with the termination of such suit, and not with the time when the injury to him occurred."

Amend section 14 by adding paragraph 8 after paragraph 7:

"(8) Employees shall have the privilege of enforcing the rights given to them under this act before the adjuster or to proceed in any State court having jurisdiction, and no suit brought in a State court under this act shall be removed to the United States court."

Amend by striking section 16 and substituting as follows:

"SEC. 16. That on the hearing of a cause of action arising under this act either party shall have the right to elect to commute the monthly payments into a fixed sum, and in that event the fixed sum shall be the present value of the annuities herein provided for, the present value to be calculated on the basis of interest at 5 per cent."

Amend section 20 by striking out in lines 19, 20, and 21 the following words: "No employee's wages shall be considered to be more than $100 a month."

Amend section 21, line 14, by striking out the words "for a period of eight years," and add, in line 15, after the word "death," the words "during the life expectancy of the deceased."

Amend section 21, on page 30, in lines 17, 18, 21, and 22, by striking out the word "sixteen" and inserting "twenty-one." On page 31, line 16, strike out the words "for the unexpired part of the period of eight years."

On page 34, lines 5 and 6, strike out "50 per cent," so that same shall read: "Where permanent total disability results from any injury there shall be paid to the injured employee the monthly wages of such employee during the remainder of his life." In line 17 strike out "50 per cent," so that the same shall read: "Where temporary total disability results from any injury there shall be paid the monthly wages of the employee during the continuance of such temporary total disability."

On page 34, section 21, paragraph 9, subdivision D, strike out the balance of page 34, page 35, and page 36 down to line 6 and insert in lieu thereof:

"(D) Where permanent partial disability results from any injury—

"(1) An amount equal to 50 per cent of his wages shall be paid to the injured employee for the balance of his life in the following instances:

"The loss by separation of arm at or above the elbow joint or the permanent and complete loss of use of one arm.

"The loss by separation of one hand at or above the wrist joint or the permanent and complete loss of the use of one hand.

"The loss by separation of one leg at or above the knee joint or the permanent and complete loss of the use of one leg.

"The loss by separation of one foot at or above the ankle joint or the permanent and complete loss of the use of one foot.

"The permanent and complete loss of hearing in both ears.

"An amount equal to 25 per cent of his wages shall be paid to the injured employee during the remainder of his life for the following injuries:

"The permanent or complete loss of hearing in one ear.

"The permanent and complete loss of sight of one eye.

"An amount shall be paid to the injured employee during the balance of his life for the percentages of his wages stated against such injuries, respectively, as follows:

"In case of the permanent loss of hearing in one ear, 20 per cent.

"The permanent and complete loss of sight of one eye, 20 per cent.

"The loss by separation of a thumb, 15 per cent; of first finger, 12½ per cent; second, third, or fourth finger, 10 per cent.

"The loss of one phalanx of a thumb, two phalanges of a finger, 7½ per cent.

"The loss of more than one phalanx of a thumb and more than two phalanges of a finger, 10 per cent.

"The loss by separation of a toe, 6 per cent."

On page 36, article 2, subdivision E, amend as follows: Strike out subdivision E and insert the following:

"(E) Where temporary partial disability results from an injury the employee shall receive, during the time he is unable to secure work, his full wages, but after he secures work he shall only receive the difference between the amount of compensation of the work secured and his former wages: Provided, That if work is offered to him of a suitable character by his employer, with compensation equal to the amount of his former wages, and he refuses the same, he shall not be entitled to any compensation for such disability during the continuance of such refusal."

Amend section 22, on page 37, line 6, by striking out the words "90 per cent of," and in lines 7 and 8 by striking out the words "as limited by the provisions of section 20 hereof," and by striking out the balance of said section continued in lines 8 to 17, inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof: "If his wages received fall below the wages he was receiving at the time of the accident, an amount of compensation shall be payable equal to the difference between the wages received and his former wages."

On page 36, after line 23, add a new subdivision to section 21, entitled "F," as follows:

"(F) That the provisions herein set forth fixing the amount of compensation to be paid to an injured employee or his representative in case of his death, shall apply to those employees whose injuries occur without contributory negligence on their part. In other cases where compensation is provided for in this act, the compensation shall be one-half of the amounts stated."

Amend, on page 39, by striking out section 24.

Amend, on pages 43 and 44, by striking out section 29 and in lieu thereof providing: "That in any case the employer or employee may elect before the adjuster or the court to have the case proceed for the present value of the annuity provided for under this act, which shall be the present value of the annuity allowed, calculated at the rate of 5 per cent interest."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the Senator from Missouri resumes, I should like just a moment to make a very brief statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, yesterday I asked unanimous consent that the vote on this bill be taken on Saturday at 3 o'clock. I was met with the statement that that would be in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement. I stated in that connection that what I was asking had been done before, and that statement seemed to be disputed. I desire, in order to preserve the record upon this question, to call attention to the fact that February 5 of the present year, at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], unanimous consent was given that on the 5th of March the treaties and resolutions of ratification should be taken up and before adjournment on that legislative day that all amendments to the treaties and the treaties themselves should be voted upon. On March 6, under that unanimous-consent agreement, when the resolutions had been under consideration for a day, on page 2885 of the RECORD, this appears:

Mr. WILLIAMS. My interruption is not for the purpose of asking a question, but I understand that the Senator from New York would rather not go on to-night, and I now understand that if the Senator from Massachusetts will make a request to take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and to vote not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, it will be acceded to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Four thirty p. m. to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I made the request that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow, and that a vote be taken not later than half past 4.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote to be taken otherwise as provided in the existing unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what assurance a Senator would have that he would be permitted to make even a short address under the terms of such an agreement?

Mr. LODGE. He has all day between 12 o'clock and half past 4.

After further colloquy the Vice President said:

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the order is entered.

Now, on March 7, the following day, the hour of 4.30 o'clock having arrived, the Vice President stated:

The hour of 4.30 o'clock having arrived, the question first is upon the first amendment to the treaty recommended by the committee, which the Secretary will report. The treaty has not been read in full. Is there objection to dispensing with the first formal reading of the treaty? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

So it appears very clearly that in that instance, within the past few weeks, the Senate has agreed, after a unanimous-consent agreement, to vote upon a certain legislative day to fix an hour upon a later calendar day when the vote should be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah submits no request at the present time?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I make no request at present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Missouri yields to me for a moment, as I have a telegram that I should like to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the telegram presented by the Senator from Georgia.

The Secretary read as follows:

HOUSTON, TEX., May 2, 1912.

Hon. HOKE SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Your speech opposing workmen's compensation act read at meeting of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen to-night. Your sentiments unanimously indorsed. We thank you for your position, and hope you will be successful in defeating action or amending bill when it is called to-morrow. Health and success.

CHARLES MURPHY, Secretary No. 145.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as a preliminary to what I am about to say this morning, I want to make this statement: I believe as much as almost any other man in my State I have been regarded as a friend of organized labor. I have frequently represented labor organizations in their controversies in courts and with their employers. I have frequently drafted measures to be introduced on their behalf in the common council of the city in which I live and in the legislature of my State. As a public official it has come to me on numerous occasions to pass upon the requests of labor organizations made to public authority, and in every instance the rulings I have made have been satisfactory to labor organizations. I believe, therefore, that I can speak upon this measure from the standpoint of one who has always endeavored to show a friendly interest in the affairs of those men who seek to protect their rights through organization.

The Members of the Senate who are voting for this bill are undoubtedly largely influenced by the idea that the bill represents substantially the unanimous voice of the labor organizations in this country.

Mr. President, if the bill as now written had been laid before the various labor organizations of the country, and the individual workmen given a fair opportunity to examine and understand its provisions, and if, after a discussion and debate, the railway employees had expressed their opinion with practical unanimity in favor of the measure, I would lay aside my individual judgment and respond to the wishes of those men thus expressed, even though the bill, in my opinion, contained grave errors and tremendous mistakes. But that is not the case. I challenge the attention of the Members of the Senate to what I am about to say with reference to this support the bill is claimed to have and to the origin and character of that support; and when the facts are understood it is my opinion that some of the Members of the Senate at least will change their views, so far as they are affected by the opinion or alleged opinion of the railway men concerned.

I say again to the Senate this is the most revolutionary piece of legislation that has been introduced in the Senate for 20 years. I challenge your solemn judgment and solemn thought, before you wipe out the common-law rights of men as they have existed for hundreds of years, before you wipe out all the statutes that have been enacted in the States in the past 50 or 75 years, before you destroy the acts of Congress which were contended and battled for by the railroad employees of this country for 20 years before they finally were enacted into law, before you take so radical a departure, to give to this bill your careful consideration. I challenge my colleagues upon this side before they say to a million six hundred and fifty thousand railway men and to their wives and their dependents, "You shall hereafter be barred from the courts of your State; you shall hereafter be barred from your rights under the common law of the land, under the statutes of the States and of this Nation," before you say to them, "The only tribunal to which you can appeal is a Federal court," before you undertake that revolutionary step you ought to understand this bill and you ought to give it time and thought and care.

What is there about this bill, sir, that calls for action so suddenly? Why are those who are pressing the bill so anxious that it shall be enacted into law without full and free discussion? Why do they want this bill, which overturns all the precedents of our land and establishes a new course of action, to be forced to a vote in this sudden and almost unprecedented manner?

Men have lived under the present system of laws for many months, and under many of our laws and our general system of jurisprudence for over a hundred years in this country, and it would do no harm, when we undertake to enact legislation of this kind, to ascertain whether it be true that a legal miracle has been brought forth, one which is incapable of improvement by amendment, one to which the collective intelligence of this body can not add a single paragraph of virtue, one in which the collective intelligence of this body can not discover a single flaw, a bill so miraculously drawn that it is concurred in by the presidents of railroads, by the attorneys for railroads, by the claim agents of railroads, without a dissenting voice, and it is claimed is concurred in by the united voice of labor.

Senators, that feat has never yet been accomplished in this world. That feat will never be accomplished if you give time for discussion. I affirm now that there is no man who ought to regard himself as bound to this bill as a bill representing the opinions of the railway men affected, because of the facts that I am now about to lay before you.

There are in this country four great railway societies, known as the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, the Order of Railway Conductors, and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. There is still another organization which embraces the shopmen, who to a large extent are not affected by this bill.

These several organizations have their local lodges, and these several lodges once in two years—mark you, once in two years, and one of them once in three years—send representatives from their subordinate lodges to an international convention. The international convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen only meets once in three years; the other organizations meet once in two years. At the general meeting of the international convention they adopt legislation and they outline policies.

They have, however, done another thing: They have provided for the appointment of an executive agent to represent each of these societies, and the executive agents who at the present time represent these societies are as follows: The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Warren Stone; the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, Mr. Lee; the Order of Railroad Conductors, Mr. Garretson; and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Mr. Carter.

These men are named at the general meetings and are denominated the executive officers. The last meetings of these societies and organizations were held months before this bill was drawn in its present form. Therefore, at their general meetings the representatives of these subordinate lodges had no chance to consider this bill. They did have the opportunity to say whether they favored, as a general policy, compensation acts. But to say that you favor compensation acts is very different from saying you favor a particular compensation act. To say that you are in favor of a law that provides that all human beings shall go about the public highways clothed is one thing; to say that they shall go clothed in a particular manner is a different thing. So this bill has never been before any general organization, and the only men who have passed upon it have been these four men, selected not with reference to this bill, bearing no badge of authority or instructions especially applicable to this bill, coming with no letter of advice or counsel, directing them to support this bill. They were simply selected in a general way as executive heads of these bodies. So these four men have passed upon the bill, but the 1,650,000 railway men who are running the trains of this country have not passed upon the bill; they have never even seen this bill.

That is not all, Mr. President. These "rank-and-file" men have been denied the right of protest by the laws of their order, construed, perhaps, improperly extended beyond the point of original intention, but nevertheless now so construed. I have the evidence here to sustain my statement and will lay it before you. These rules are understood to mean that no member of the organization is at liberty to raise his voice in protest against the action of any one of the four head men. The member may speak in favor of that which the four men may do, but he can not, upon matters legislative, protest against the action of these men. So you do not have here the concentered opinion of the railway men of this country; on the contrary, you have the ipse dixit of four men, and, as I shall show you a little later on, of but three of those four men.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And now of only two.

Mr. REED. And now, as I am informed by the Senator from Georgia, of only two, the head of the conductors' organization having withdrawn his support.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, that statement should be modified to this extent—the Senator from Missouri did not exactly understand me—that the conductors' oragnization have withdrawn the restriction put upon the men and permitted them to act independently. I do not understand that Mr. Garretson has himself withdrawn his support, although I find in his testimony before the committee that what he supported was a very different measure from this bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me put into the RECORD the facts.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do the four men of whom the Senator from Missouri speaks, known as the legislative representatives of these four branches, represent the employees of the railroads?

Mr. REED. They are known, as I understand, as the executive heads. They are supposed to look after all matters which concern their organization, and so they undertake to guard the interests of their organizations in matters legislative. I do not know whether the term "legislative agents" could be applied to them. I think it would be too narrow if so applied.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand the Senator as saying that when these four executive heads meet and indorse a particular bill pending before Congress the membership of the Order of Locomotive Engineers and the other orders representing the employees are not permitted, under the law governing their organizations, to protest against their action?

Mr. REED. That is exactly as I understand it. Stated with accuracy, the members of each organization are barred from protesting against or interfering with the policy of the head of that particular organization, so that when three of these men agreed upon this bill they thereby closed the lips of and silenced the voice of protest. The members of those three organizations were barred from the right of objection. The fourth executive head did not approve the bill, and the members of his organization have been free to express their views and have been protesting generously and with emphasis.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, following that up, suppose a member of the organization should attempt openly to use influence against the position taken by this executive board with reference to a legislative matter, is there any penalty prescribed by the laws of the organization?

Mr. REED. My understanding is that it means expulsion—that the rule is so construed. I am about to lay the evidence which I have in my possession before the Senate on that subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, I understand from the Senator, that an individual member of these organizations who attempts openly to protest against this recommendation or indorsement, who attempts in any way to exert influence openly in Congress to prevent the carrying out of their indorsement and recommendation, would be subject to expulsion from the order?

Mr. REED. At least he places himself in jeopardy and in conflict with the rules of the order, and my understanding, gained from talking with some of these men, is that it means expulsion. I am about to submit the rules of the organization and some other testimony given before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is, if the rules were invoked against them, the penalty would be expulsion?

Mr. REED. That is what I understand to be the fact.

Mr. OVERMAN. And also, if the Senator will yield to me——

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. If any one lodge should protest, it would mean that they would have to surrender their charter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, I should like to ask the Senator one further question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield further?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator any information of any pressure having been brought to bear to prevent individual members of these organizations from asserting their wishes and their opinions in respect to this legislation?

Mr. REED. I have nothing further than the statements men have made to me—that it was unsafe for their members to protest and that they did not protest; but nobody has said to me, and I have no letter or telegram to the effect, that any man has been personally threatened.

I hold in my hand the constitution of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers for the years 1911, 1912, and 1913, lapsing over until their next convention. Section 5 of article 27 of their constitution reads as follows:

> Any member interfering with legislative matters affecting national, State, Territorial, dominion, or provincial legislation adversely affecting the interest of our members shall, upon conviction by written information, be expelled: Provided, however, He shall have right of appeal to his lodge within 30 days after expulsion.

That is the section of the constitution of that one organization. It was handed to me this morning by a member of that organization who represents it in the State of Texas and who states that it is construed to mean that any interference with the legislative policies of the executive head is held to be a violation of that provision of their constitution.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator if he is aware of the testimony of these men before the committee to the effect that the reason for this rule is that they found after years of experience that when the order agreed upon a legislative policy individual members would sometimes be influenced by the railroads or by outsiders to interfere with the legislative policy which had been agreed upon, and in order for their organization to be effective they had to adopt some kind of a policy and some kind of means for enforcing the rules of the order. That was testified to and was agreed to, as I understand, before the committee by the representatives of the laboring men.

Mr. REED. Yes, Mr. President, I understand that the reason which was assigned before the committee by those who defended this rule was that the rule had been adopted in order to protect the organizations against the improvident advancement of legislation of an improper character by their members, and also for the purpose of protecting the members against the coercion of their employers; but, like all rules which may be adopted for one purpose, it may be used for another purpose. It is now being applied to mean that when these executive officers have agreed upon a policy, any man who dares to challenge the correctness of that policy is held to be opposing the interests of the organization and he suffers expulsion. Many of these men have insurance for which they have paid for many years, and they forfeit that insurance upon expulsion. So that the effect of the rule, no matter what its origin and no matter what the purpose may have been that called it into existence—the effect and application of the rule now is to close the lips of these men and to silence the voice of protest. If they adopted the rule because some of their members had been previously corrupted, as stated by the Senator from West Virginia, then I challenge thought to the fact that if their members have been corrupted in the past they hardly escape from all danger of that corruption when they place this enormous power in the hands of three or four men.

I am not charging that anybody has been corrupted, but I am saying that the same danger which led them to enact this law exists just as much to-day as it did before. I am not intimating any corruption. Men can differ in this world without an intimation of baseness. I am applying my remarks solely to the reason which was assigned by my friend, the Senator from West Virginia, as the reason for the rule, and he does not assign it as his reason, but as his conclusion derived from testimony given before the Judiciary Committee at the hearings on this bill.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. REED. Certainly; I always yield.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator this: Can he imagine any way by which a labor organization can protect itself from outside influence, whether by corruption or otherwise, unless it has some rule of this kind?

Mr. REED. Well, if the Senator wants my opinion about this rule—which is entirely aside from the question we are discussing and has nothing to do with it—I reply that no government has ever escaped corruption by providing that the rank and file of the people can not open their lips to protest.

Mr. CHILTON. The only trouble with that——

Mr. REED. We have that right against the President of the United States, and the only place men do not have the right of protest is in Turkey. Really, I believe the right now exists even in that unfortunate land.

Mr. CHILTON. The committee having these matters in charge and hearing the statement of the railway men did not find any way by which they could correct or revise the rules of the organization, and they had to take the statements as they were made, and to take the laws of the organization as they found them.

Mr. REED. I am not criticizing the committee; I trust the delicate sensibilities of the members of the committee will not be shocked by so much as suggestion of responsibility for the rule I am discussing. I am simply arguing the one point that under existing rules the railway men of this country have not been permitted to voice their sentiments against this bill, though they are permitted to support it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think I ought to state here that after this bill was before the Judiciary Committee and had been passed upon, there was a demand that a subcommittee be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives and the Senate from the respective Judiciary Committees to meet and give hearings to some individual railroad men. On that committee were the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and myself, and there were three members on the part of the House. There were many railroad employees here, but there were mighty few who went into that room, as the Senator from West Virginia knows.

Mr. REED. Why?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will tell you why. The three leading men who have advocated this bill were in there. There was also present a man by the name of Teat, representing a Georgia order that has no such rule, and some Representatives in Congress who were heard. I was very much astonished when I went to the committee room to see a number of railroad men standing around the door. I knew one of them and invited him to come in. He said, "No; I can not. I have been working for the railroad for 25 years. I have been insured that long, and if I go into that room and protest against this bill I will lose my insurance. I will not only lose my insurance, but I may be expelled. I may not only be expelled, but the lodge I represent may lose its charter. Therefore we people who came here for this purpose are not going in." The only man who went in and heard it, so far as I can remember, was the man named Teat, who headed this organization. So, although we had arranged to give a hearing, had notified these men to be here, and they were here, and the subcommittee was there to give them a hearing, they were not there, but on the outside of the room.

Mr. REED. That is a startling statement. It is, however, a statement that would not be made by the Senator from North Carolina unless it was the truth and the very truth. But what a situation does it disclose to the Congress and the people of the United States. These railway men, big, brave-hearted fellows, who ride their engines into the night and through the storm, who take their lives in their hands every hour, who look with unflinching eyes into the face of death, yet do not dare to voice the protest of their hearts before a committee appointed by Congress to hear them! What a spectacle that is for a white man in a white man's country to contemplate!

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suppose the Senator concedes that this is a rule which was adopted by these very brave men themselves. It was not a rule enforced on them by any other order than their own.

Mr. REED. I understand the situation. But it does not relieve us from the duty to scrutinize this bill. We can not in the teeth of these disclosures escape responsibility by the claim that the bill has been examined by the railway employees and approved by them, because we now know they have not been permitted to speak.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to make another statement which I think I ought to make. One of the men also told me that they did have this rule, and the reason of the rule was that it had in their experience been known that the railroads had employed certain employees to come up here and protest against legislation they were in favor of.

Mr. REED. To protest against it? Who was in favor of it?

Mr. OVERMAN. The order itself was in favor of it. And one example he cited was the boiler-inspection bill. He said the order was in favor of the bill, but they found men here, representing the lodges, about the Capitol day after day protesting against the passage of the bill. They then concluded, in order that this might not happen again, that they would pass this drastic rule, and the only way they could be heard hereafter was through their leaders.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That was adopted in convention.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was adopted in convention, and therefore hereafter they were not allowed to address any Senator or Member of the House or come here to protest. It must be done through their leaders.

Mr. SIMMONS. With the permission of the Senator from Missouri I should like to ask my colleague one question. I understood my colleague to say the subcommittee had hearings. Did anybody come before the subcommittee except these four heads of the executive committees?

Mr. OVERMAN. One was there from Georgia, a gentleman by the name of Teat, I think his name is, who said he had come to appear; the prohibition had been taken off by his order. I asked him if any other organization forbade its men to protest against this legislation, that I had been told on the outside they were not allowed to come. He declined to answer my question.

Mr. SIMMONS. As a matter of fact, the subcommittee heard only the statements of these four men?

Mr. OVERMAN. These four men and Mr. Carter, who resigned, who would not have anything to do with it. He was neutral on the subject, and therefore opposed to it. He took opportunity to protest, as did a man by the name of Teat, from Georgia. Judge BARTLETT, another Congressman, and a man by the name of Lewis addressed the committee; Mr. Lee and Mr. Garretson and Mr. Wills made practically the same statement as before the general committee, so far as the men, who could not hear, had heard. They did not come in, but stayed on the outside.

Mr. REED. Does it require a prophet or the son of a prophet to know what happened? These men came here to protest, and am I wrong in assuming that the executive heads warned them to keep out of that room upon the peril of the enforcement of these rules?

But again I say that it is an appalling thing that any four organizations, composed of 1,650,000 American citizens, found that their own men were being corrupted by the railroads to such an extent that they had to adopt a rule of this kind to protect themselves against that infamous practice. If the railroads had been doing that to prevent legislation desired by these men for their real benefit, I challenge your attention to the fact that now there is not even a railroad attorney here to protest against this bill. The answer is the bill suits the railroads to an exact nicety. If the railroads in the past have been so vigilant and unscrupulous that they have not hesitated to bribe their employees to come here and oppose legislation calculated to confer benefits upon their fellow workmen, why are these same railroads not here now protesting? Why are they acquiescing by silence? Nay, why do they through their presidents and claim agents actively cooperate in the passage of the bill? There is but one answer, this bill will benefit the railway companies. This is a railroad bill.

We are forced to conclude that this measure suits the railroads; it suited the railroad president who sat upon the commission; it suited the claim agent of the railroad who advised the commission. It suits them now, and why should it not? It takes these men out of the State courts, where before they have had some measure of protection. It puts them under the control exclusively of the Federal courts, that have always been the city of refuge toward which every railway attorney turned his longing eyes when he had to defend a suit brought by a poor fellow whose arms or legs had been crushed or mangled through the company's negligence.

Where are your railroad officials now with their protests? Where now their bribe money? Where now their claim agents? Where now their lobby? They are sitting complacently back, content that this bill shall become a law. Why should they not be content? It will save them millions of dollars, and it will put them under the control and protection of the Federal courts where they have always longed to go, and to escape which the railroad employees for years have fought and struggled and contended until at last they put upon the statute books a law which permitted them to file their suits in the State court and to stay there. That law is not yet two years old. In fact, as is suggested to me by the Senator from Georgia, it is practically only three months old, because it is only three months since it was finally approved by the United States Supreme Court.

But, Mr. President, I have been interrupted and led somewhat afield from the theme I started to discuss. I was about to furnish some additional evidence of the fact that the employees have had no opportunity to protest. I read the rule of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. Adopted for whatever purpose it was, it is, nevertheless, now the cord about the throats of these men that chokes them into silence.

Now, there was some of this evidence given before the committee, and I am going to read first the statement of Mr. Lee. I want to have the attention of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE]. I would rather have his attention than that of anybody else.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator from Missouri is very flattering.

Mr. REED. I am only just.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. You are all right, generally.

Mr. REED. I am all right this time, and the only time you make mistakes is when you differ with me.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We will not dispute or debate that.

Mr. REED. And we are going to get together yet.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Here is a copy of the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary on this bill, March 15 to March 26. I read from page 73. I am reading from the statement of that Mr. Lee who was yesterday appealed to by the Senator who is sponsor for this bill, and who had read a tirade of Mr. Lewis, denouncing as an ambulance chaser a man who in fact is the chief justice of North Carolina. I take it that Mr. Lee is a biased, prejudiced witness, as shown by that statement of his, and his bias and prejudice are in favor of this bill and all that it contains.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are so few in the Senate that I think it proper to suggest that there is no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	McCumber	Root
Bacon	Davis	McLean	Simmons
Bourne	Fall	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bristow	Foster	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Brown	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Gardner	Nixon	Smoot
Burnham	Gronna	Overman	Stephenson
Burton	Guggenheim	Page	Sutherland
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Paynter	Swanson
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Perkins	Warren
Crawford	Kern	Rayner	Wetmore
Culberson	Lea	Reed	Works
Cullom	Lodge	Richardson

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent and that he has a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I make this announcement for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I stated that I would read what Mr. Lee said, because he is an adverse and prejudiced witness. He is prejudiced in favor of this bill, and so prejudiced against everyone who dares lift his voice against it that he is willing to denounce a great judge of a great court as an ambulance chaser simply because he dares call attention in a dignified and logical statement to the bill's manifold defects and injustices. So I read what Mr. Lee said in regard to these coercive measures. Mr. NORRIS asked:

> You do not want the committee to understand that if any local organization was opposed to this bill that there was anything in your rules and regulations that would prohibit them from protesting as earnestly as they saw fit through the members of their board?
> Mr. LEE. Absolutely. The member who is honest knows that if he did it would have to be placed before the grand lodge. A few years ago we found railway companies, as Mr. Wills has said, that would wish to oppose some certain law that was really for the benefit of the majority of our class, and they would pick out certain fellows who were fluent talkers, or whom they could control, or whom under threat of dismissal or some other arguments they could send to the legislature to lobby to get certain laws defeated. The result was we could not succeed with anything that would benefit the masses because our members were appearing before these committees. So we passed this law, and to-day there is no member of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen in Georgia or in other States who does not know—and there are some of them in this House—that he has a perfect right to appeal and protest through the grand lodge to which he contributes his mite to support, and it would be presented through the executive or the executive would be brought to trial for not doing so.

Here is a plain admission that no man dare protest against a measure recommended by these executive heads except that he can send his protest up through the regular channels reaching that executive head, but he can not protest publicly or to a committee of Congress.

Now, I am not saying this in criticism of these orders. The reason I am saying it I shall, I think, make manifest a moment later. But upon the same line I call your attention to the statement of Mr. HOWARD, a Member of Congress. He said before this same subcommittee on March 26:

There is a very peculiar condition existing among the railroad men in Georgia. I do not know whether it exists all over the country, but I have been reliably informed that the rank and file of the men who are most affected by the operation of this revolutionary measure can not even write their Senators or their Representatives in Congress a single solitary line in opposition to this bill without violating the rules and regulations of these organizations. That rule does not apply as to the Order of Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, but it does apply to all of the other organizations. I speak for the organizations in Georgia now, not confining it to my district, as I have conferred with the representatives of these particular organizations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.). It is perfectly evident that Senators do not desire to be present in the Senate at this hour, and I suggest that we take a recess for lunch until 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia make that motion?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Lodge	Sanders
Bacon	Curtis	McLean	Shively
Bourne	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Bristow	Fall	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Brown	Foster	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Gallinger	Nixon	Smith, S. C.
Burton	Gronna	Oliver	Smoot
Catron	Hitchcock	Overman	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Page	Sutherland
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Rayner	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Reed	Watson
Crawford	Lea	Richardson	Williams
Cullom	Lippitt	Root

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will extend the motion to a quarter past 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate take a recess until a quarter after 2 o'clock.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is out of the city on business of the Senate. I understand that he is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], I withhold my vote.

Mr. GORE. I was not in the Chamber when my name was reached on the roll call. My colleague [Mr. OWEN] transferred his pair to me, and I will allow the transfer to stand.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate, and that he is paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I announce my pair with that Senator and withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bacon	Johnson, Me.	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Johnston, Ala.	Overman	Tillman
Chilton	Kern	Owen
Davis	Lea	Pomerene
Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Reed

NAYS—49.

Ashurst	Crane	McCumber	Shively

Burnham	Fall	Page	Townsend
Burton	Gallinger	Paynter	Wetmore
Catron	Gardner	Penrose	Williams
Chamberlain	Gronna	Percy	Works
Clapp	Guggenheim	Perkins
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Root
Clarke, Ark.	Lodge	Sanders

NOT VOTING—29.

Bailey	Foster	Martin, Va.	Smoot
Bankhead	Gamble	O'Gorman	Stone
Brandegee	Gore	Poindexter	Swanson
Briggs	Heyburn	Rayner	Warren
Culberson	Kenyon	Richardson	Watson
Dixon	La Follette	Smith, Md.
du Pont	Lippitt	Smith, Mich.
Fletcher	Lorimer	Smith, S. C.

So the Senate refused to take a recess.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ought to say to the Members of the Senate who were disturbed at their luncheon by the last two roll calls that they were demanded by the Senator from Utah and not from this side. On no account would we have imposed the hardship upon you of leaving the table, but as there were only about seven Members here, the Senator from Georgia conceived the idea that we might as well go to lunch also, and therefore made the motion for a recess. We had no idea that it would be followed by a demand that would take you from the table. I think I ought to make that statement in order to relieve myself and the Senator from Georgia of any responsibility.

Mr. President, I was reading from the statement of Mr. HOWARD, a Member of Congress, in which he was detailing the fact that railway men were not permitted to protest, and I proceed:

Gentlemen, I do not know whether or not the men in my State or in my district are opposed to this bill. That is not the purpose of my appearance before this committee this morning, to say whether or not they oppose it or whether they are in favor of it. The distinguished chairman of the Senate committee and of this commission, in questioning Mr. Teat a while ago, asked the question whether or not this commission had not been in session for a period of about two years. I can state with some degree of authority that the first time the compensation law was discussed in the South in any way whatever, in an official way, was at Chattanooga on the 25th day of May, 1910, and I think I can say with some degree of certainty that although this commission has had these hearings, and they have been exhaustive and full hearings, and some of the most expert railroad men in all branches have been heard before this commission, I do not suppose to-day there are 50 Members of Congress, in either branch, either in the Senate or in the House, that have read 500 words of the testimony taken before the commission.

And I say now that I think that is the truth right at this minute regarding the Senate. I continue reading:

We understand that hearings are held on a great many measures, and the evidence taken in these hearings is never read or considered until possibly the bill is favorably recommended by the committee holding the hearings.

There was a tentative bill introduced. That bill got to Georgia and these men had read it. The heads of the organizations in Georgia have read it. They say that this bill is revolutionary; that it practically takes from them a constitutional right, and that they want time to deliberate over this bill. All of their organizations meet during the summer, from April on through to July, August, and September. This is not an unreasonable request, as far as my State is concerned. The railroads are not suffering, and neither are the men suffering from the operation of the present laws.

Now, Mr. President, the reading of this rule and the reading of this testimony and the statement of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] conclusively demonstrate that the railway men of this country have not been at liberty to express their opinion. Neither have they had opportunity to express an opinion, or to even form a mature opinion, for the reason that this bill was only introduced in Congress some 30 days ago, and in that length of time there has not been the chance afforded for these men, scattered as they are throughout the United States, to obtain copies of the bill, to discuss it with each other, to take advice upon it, and to obtain, if they dare obtain, the action of their local organizations. Therefore, when we are told here that this bill expresses the universal sentiment of these railroad men, we are told that which can not be sustained by any evidence and that which is not the fact, sir. On the contrary, the evidence now before us is that there is a sentiment of protest, and that that sentiment was silenced at the very doors of Congress; and we have the right to infer it was silenced by these big bosses of the organizations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to inquire of the Senator, for information, if he thinks under the rule of which he has spoken that the various local lodges would be prohibited from giving expression to their opinions with reference to this bill?

Mr. REED. That seemed to be the opinion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the colleague of the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. It not only applies to individual members of the order, but to the lodges themselves?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the Senator does think, of course, that when the general conventions of these various branches of railroad employees meet, then there will be freedom of opinion?

Mr. REED. Of discussion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of discussion.

Mr. REED. And until that time, if I understand the facts, there will not be freedom of discussion.

Mr. President, let us, then, analyze the situation and see what it is. Four men have assumed to agree to this bill for all the railway men of the country. Nay, that statement is not correct, for one of these men, to wit, the head of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, has not assented to it, but has most vigorously protested against it. So that now you have three men undertaking to speak for eight or nine million people who are directly or indirectly concerned in this legislation. The opinions of those three men do not represent the opinions of their constituency, because their constituency have never had the chance to examine this bill, and they were not elected and sent here with any instructions from that constituency to speak for them with special reference to this particular legislation. So you simply have three individuals standing here and undertaking to tell Congress what it shall do with reference to this vast body of men.

Nay, more, these three men farmed out their authority to Mr. Wills, and Mr. Wills, one man, became the legislative agent here at Washington, actively interesting himself in this legislation. I would not for anything say a word reflecting upon Mr. Wills. I know him but slightly; he is a man very earnest and very fixed and set in his opinions. According to him all candor and honestly, all earnestness of purpose, and all patriotic desire to serve his constituency, he is, nevertheless, but one individual, dowered with no greater intellect, I take it, than that of thousands of other men in his organization whose lips are closed and whose tongues are silenced by this rule and who have never been permitted to speak.

So, in the last analysis, what Congress is asked to do, and what some Members of this Senate are doing, is to lay aside its judgment, the collective and comprehensive judgment of the body, for the opinion of one Mr. Wills. I say that proposition is intolerable. The man who adopts it will live to see a day of regret. Of course, if Mr. Wills is possessed of all knowledge; if he has scaled all the heights, measured all the depths, and surveyed all the boundaries of the intellectual kingdom, if he has analyzed and mastered all the intricate problems of the law, if he is grounded in the principles of the Constitution, if he has the ability of a Webster, we might possibly be justified—some of us weak and erring children—in yielding to his superior judgment; but even Webster might make a mistake and Mr. Wills may be fallible. Already one of these three who delegated his authority to Mr. Wills is, according to the statement of the Senator from Georgia, in doubt in regard to the wisdom of this legislation.

Put this matter over for 60 days and there will rise from these rank and file men in some form—for you can not forever keep the lips of an American citizen closed—there will come in some way a message to the Congress that will say to it that the railway men of this country are not ready to put themselves into the hands of the Federal courts and to close the doors of all other tribunals to them.

I see sitting around me a few men who have protested for many years against the citizen of the State being dragged into the Federal courts to try his case at the instance of a corporation that lives in his State, that makes its living in his State, that is policed and protected by his State, but nevertheless is permitted to drag him into a tribunal which is practically foreign to him, because that corporation happens to have filed its articles in some other State. I see men around me here who recognize the injustice of that system and who have protested against it. I am astounded to see them now willing to confer upon the Federal courts more jurisdiction and more authority than all the laws that have ever been enacted have granted them since the day our Government was born.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, inasmuch as I have the honor, and it is an honor, to be sitting "around" the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who is making what I conceive to be a very illuminating speech on this bill, I fear unless I interrupt him now that my silence may be construed to mean that I am in sympathy with that particular part of this bill which seeks to prevent injured railroad men from instituting suit for damages in the courts of the particular State where the injury occurred, but delivers their right to sue to the tender mercies of the Federal courts; and I ask permission of the Senator from Missouri that I may here and now say a word in that respect.

Mr. REED. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am in favor of this bill in principle. The constitution of the new State of Arizona—and I will in this great presence say that as a document perpetuating and securing the liberties of the people of a country or a State, no greater document has been written since the Declaration of Independence in 1776 than the constitution of Arizona—and this Arizona constitution lays a mandate upon the State legislature to enact a compulsory-compensation law. Hence I repeat, I am in favor of such a law in principle, but I desire to vote for a real, true compulsory-compensation law, one that will "compensate."

I do not forget that Thomas Jefferson said:

> The Federal judiciary are the sappers who are constantly seeking to undermine the confederated fabric of our Government.

I do not, of course, refer to all the Federal judges when I criticize some of them. I must discriminate, but I do refer to members of the Federal bench who have soiled their ermine. Why this attempt to deprive these engineers, conductors, brakemen, and firemen, the bravest men in the world, of the right to adjudicate their wrongs in their State courts? Is it because the railroad attorneys and the railroad presidents who entertain Federal judges by devious ways—such as paying the judge's expenses on a fishing expedition; and as Plutarch said, "I care not who writes the laws, if I but take the judges fishing"—believe they will have smooth sailing in the Federal courts when some maimed employee with crutches or armless sleeve asks compensation for the loss of a member of his body which God has given him?

Mr. President, when an engineer, brakeman, fireman, or conductor is called to work by the call boy—and too frequently the call boy's name is Death—when the trainman in obedience to duty's call goes out upon the run, the trainman and his wife look into each other's faces and there are the unspoken words, "Shall we ever meet again?"; for a trainman is engaged in an extra-hazardous occupation, engaged in drawing the commerce of the Nation, sitting at his throbbing throttle, transporting citizens over the rails, and is he to be denied when injured the poor boon of going before the courts of his State; denied the privilege of appearing before a judge elected by the vote of his fellow men? Is that to be denied to him?

This bill seeks to drive him exclusively before the Federal courts, some of whose judges, every man who is honest with himself confesses, much to our regret, are now under the suspicion of being in league with the "Interests." Is there a Senator in this great body who will deny that to-day some of the Federal courts are under suspicion; and why? Because all, or nearly all, of the cruel, the unjust, the outrageously unjust injunctions and decisions against the laboring people have come from the Federal courts.

Some of these Federal judges, free from the recall, with the impeachment process a practical impossibility, have come to sit as judicial tyrants.

I have in my desk some notes to which I intended to refer, but I shall not interrupt longer at this point further than to say to the Senator that when looking at me and saying he saw around him men who are turning these cases over to the Federal courts he was for "once" in error, and that there is no more resolute antagonist of the proposition of lodging jurisdiction of these cases solely and exclusively in the Federal courts than I am.

Before I resume my seat I must not be understood as making any assault upon the courts. I venerate the great Supreme Court of this Nation which so ably deals with the ever present and complex propositions of State and national sovereignty and the liberties of millions of people. This great Supreme Court of the United States is progressive, and I do not include it in my criticisms; but I refer especially to such judges as Judge Grosscup, who has been charged not only with corruption but immorality as well.

I thank the Senator from Missouri for his courtesy.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from California pardon me a word, and then I will yield.

I want to say to the Senator who has just taken his seat that either I made a statement directly the opposite of what I intended or he misheard me. What I intended to say, and I think did say, was that I saw around me Senators who have been protesting against the jurisdiction of the Federal courts being exercised over citizens of States upon the ground of diverse citizenship between themselves and the railroad company when that railroad company is in all except form a citizen of the State. I did not mean to say that the Senator who has just taken his seat has been in favor of putting all litigation in the hands of the Federal courts.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it has become altogether too common nowadays to make wholesale assaults upon the judiciary of this country, as we have just been listening to, and it is exceedingly unfortunate that any such assault should come from a Member of this body. I know—everybody knows—that there are unworthy judges upon the bench, State and Federal, but I happen to know a good many of the Federal judges of this country, and some of them I am glad to say are my warm personal friends. One of them was for a time my partner in business; and I am not going to sit here silently and allow this wholesale charge to be made against the Federal judges of this country, knowing, as I do, that a great many of them are men of the highest character, distinguished for ability and fairness in the conduct of cases of all kinds.

I do not think much can be said when we compare the State and the Federal judiciary in favor of the former in that respect. My experience has taught me that you can depend upon the integrity and fairness of the Federal judges fully as much as upon those who occupy State positions. It is a matter of deep regret that such assaults against the judiciary of the country can be made in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. No man venerates more than I do the great, the honest judges of the country, who unmoved by improper influences declare the law and are not under the control of railroad companies. I inveigh only against those judges who go fishing with railroad presidents and railroad attorneys who are litigants before them, and I repeat I do not forget that Plutarch said, "I do not care who writes the laws if I but take the judges fishing." I do not make, and the Senator from California should know that I am not making, an assault upon judges as a whole, but only upon those whose unjust decisions bring our beloved institutions into danger and who therefore deserve to be characterized as I have characterized them, based upon what I conceive to be very sufficient grounds for so doing.

Mr. REED. I take it, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, that the Senator from California was applying his remark to the Senator from Arizona, and I therefore see no occasion at this moment to indulge in that debate. It has been very interesting and entertaining. I can understand, however, why the Senator from California may consider the judges of Federal courts as desirable as the judges of State courts, in view of the campaign that was recently made in that State, in which, if I understand aright, the courts of his own State were very severely criticized.

I am not of that number who assail courts or assail established authority, but I do unhesitatingly and unequivocally say that in the ordinary State court a railroad man with his hand or leg off, before an ordinary jury summoned from the body of the county in which he lives, has about ten times as much chance to recover as he does in the average Federal court. The railroad men of this country know that and did know it when they insisted, in 1910, upon the amendment to the Federal statute of 1908, which provided that when they filed their case in the State court it could not be taken into a Federal court.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I would ask the Senator from Missouri, in view of his statement as to the advantage of the complainant in a State court as against the Federal court, why is it so, when in both courts jury trials determine all damages?

Mr. REED. That depends very largely upon the man who sits on the bench, and it somewhat depends on the way the Federal juries are selected and who selects them; but principally upon the rulings of the man who happens to be the judge.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. REED. I yield further to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I myself am very much opposed to the method in which juries are selected in the Federal court, but that is the fault of the Senator from Missouri and myself.

Mr. REED. It is not my fault. I have not been here long enough.

Mr. BORAH. May I say, then, it is the fault of those who make the laws of Congress, because we determine the method in which they shall be selected and how they shall be drawn. We guide and control it.

Mr. REED. That is only a plea in confession and avoidance. It admits the statement that the poor fellow who is litigating does not get the same chance in the Federal court that he does in the State court; and whether the wrong rests upon Congress or not does not help him a bit when the judge instructs him out of court or lectures a jury until it brings in a verdict against him.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator seems to have shifted his position somewhat on that proposition. I do not speak offensively.

Mr. REED. Not at all. You have shifted your viewpoint.

Mr. BORAH. I would undertake to say, and I would undertake to justify my position by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, that the Supreme Court of the United States has been more liberal in its interpretation of the law with reference to the right to recover in damages than have the State courts, and that it has repeatedly reversed the decisions of the State courts in favor of the plaintiffs claiming damages.

I have within the last few months, in view of the charges which have been made, taken the time to go through the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and to run down the number of instances in which that court has reversed the holdings of the court of last resort in the State where the decisions of the United States Supreme Court were favorable to those claiming damages in damage suits incurred in railroad accidents, and so forth. I am sure it would be interesting to follow that out, and we would ascertain that the fault does not lie in the rule which has been established in the Federal court so much as it lies in the machinery which is purely under the control of the Congress.

Mr. REED. Yes; but primarily the litigation is under the control of the judge of the United States District Court. It is of the conduct of the case in the courts of which litigants have complained. However, not that I am unwilling to pursue this topic to the end, nevertheless we are getting very far aside from the theme that I was discussing.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I have been an advocate to some extent since I came into the Senate of reforming the practice in the Federal courts, and particularly with reference to the instructions which the court may give the jury, and on questions of fact, and to those matters over which we have jurisdiction and control here.

Now, I am not entirely out of harmony with the view expressed by the Senator from Missouri, but I am out of harmony with the reasons for those evils as the Senator views them. I think it lies with us very largely to correct the evils and to apply the remedy for these wrongs, and if we should prescribe, as it should be our duty to do, a correct code of practice for the Federal court with reference to jury trials, I think we would have very little cause of complaint.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator, and I admire and respect him, inadvertently conceded the whole of what I have said and much that was said by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], when he said that what we needed was legislation here which would regulate the instructions to juries. In other words, these courts, armed with the broad power of instruction, have abused that power to such an extent that Congress must step in to reform the abuse. That certainly is the inevitable logic of the Senator's statement.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, and as usual, Congress being in fault finds it much easier to lay the fault upon some one else than to perform its simple duty.

Mr. REED. I do not agree with that. I do not agree that you can shift the responsibility in that way. If under the law Congress has given a broad power to a court, leaving it to the judge to instruct as he should instruct, and then if that judge has abused his power, it is no excuse for him to say, "You ought to have tied me so tight that I could not have done wrong." Whenever a man says that, he admits that he is the primary wrongdoer. Nevertheless, the responsibility may rest upon us, in view of that patent wrong, to bind his hands so close that he can not further perpetrate the wrong.

I will stand with the Senator to reform these wrongs. I agree with the Senator that when we come to reform them Congress ought to accept its full share of responsibility and approach that duty bravely and conscientiously. I will go a little further than I think the Senator goes, for I do not believe that the good Lord has ever made a man yet so good or wise that he ought to be placed in a position for life, and held responsible to no one; I will go with the Senator, if he will go with me, and endeavor to secure the submission of an amendment to the Constitution, limiting the terms of all Federal judges to 10 or 12 years, to the end that if mistakes are made in their appointment or if they prove to be incapable or unjust, there may be some other termination to their term of office than the stroke of death or the almost futile remedy by impeachment.

I will be glad to sit down and collaborate with the Senator in framing a law which will change the Federal judicial system. But every word the Senator has stated makes it plain that I am right when I protest against driving all these railway men into these Federal courts that so much do need legislative reformation.

Returning to the theme that I was discussing when I was interrupted and led far afield, I repeat that there has been no expression of opinion on the part of the railroad men of this country who are affected by this bill, that three men have, and, in fact, one man has, undertaken to speak for them; and that Senators here are abdicating the throne of their own judgment and reason and proposing to support this measure upon the assumption that it is the voice of the railway men they are responding to when, in fact, they are responding to the voice of one man.

Mr. President, as high an authority as any one of these men is the president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Mr. Carter. This man's opinion is entitled to as much weight as the opinion of Mr. Wills. He is just as earnest, just as intelligent, just as patriotic, just as learned, and just as high in position. The opinion of Mr. Carter is that this bill is as full of iniquities as an egg is full of meat.

I hold in my hand an article written by Mr. Carter in the form of a special or supplemental report which I do not at this time intend to read, although I think before this discussion is ended I shall ask to have certain portions of it read from the desk. But this one statement I want to read. I trust those Senators who think that this is a bill supported unanimously by the railroad men will give heed to the language of Mr. Carter, the international president of the Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen:

> The proposed bill has the earnest indorsement of President Taft and every member of the commission, of all representatives of railway labor organizations that have spoken upon the subject, and yet I have promised to analyze this bill from a critical standpoint.

Now, the language I am about to read I call attention to. I have read that which I have read to give the context:

> At the recent joint conference of the eastern and western federated boards of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, which body officially represented the locomotive firemen of 157,580 miles of railway in the United States, a discussion began that indicated the passage of a resolution condemning this bill. At my earnest solicitation the discussion was discontinued and a resolution indorsing my action in withdrawing from the joint national legislative arrangement in support of the proposed measure was tabled only after my repeated requests that the entire matter be not thus disposed of.

Then this man goes on to state, in substance, that because of the gravity of this case, because of the magnitude of the matter concerned, because such great interests were to be affected, he did not desire to have any differences arise between his organization and affiliated organizations, and he had held the matter in abeyance. He discusses this bill almost from the judicial standpoint, and I use the term judicial in the high sense in which it ought to be used. But he ends by pointing out scores of defects in the measure. Mr. Carter speaks with the same authority for his organization, the enginemen, as does Mr. Wills for other organizations.

In this connection I desire to present and have read a document which has just been handed to me and which is addressed to the Congress of the United States and was sent here by the order of Knights of Labor, the local lodge of this city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF RECORDING SECRETARY,
ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF LABOR, D. A. 66,
Washington, D. C., May 2, 1912.

To the Congress of the United States.

GREETING: We respectfully state that at a regular meeting of District Assembly No. 66, Knights of Labor, held this 2d day of May, 1912, at our headquarters, No. 609 C Street NW., the Senate and House bills, commonly known as the Sutherland-Brantley bill (S. 5382 and H. R. 20487), was read and discussed section by section, with the result that I was instructed to forward the protest of said district assembly against the passage of said bill because instead of being an improvement on the existing law it restricts and minimizes the benefits of the present statutes, and nullifies even the common law. Our present law in the District of Columbia is far preferable. We fear that those who have petitioned the Congress for the passage of this law have done so under the misapprehension that it enlarged their rights in the premises instead of contracting them and saddling one-half of the cost on our already overloaded backs and lifting it from the water-logged treasuries of the railroads, who are the defendants in these cases and are trying to shift their growing responsibilities under the laws lately enacted in which our rights are properly safeguarded.

Very respectfully,

E. J. DAKIN,
District Master Workman.

By order of the district assembly and under its seal.

Mr. REED. One word further in regard to the manufacture of this alleged sentiment that is so often referred to here.

Mark you, the rule is that men working in the ranks of labor have their lips closed to offer any opposition to this measure, but, of course, they have no restrictions placed upon them when they are speaking in favor of the bill. Accordingly, we ought to be able under those circumstances to get plenty of evidence for the one side that is allowed to produce witnesses.

So I find that Mr. Wills has been sending out appeals for help. It is the cry of the Macedonian, Come over and help us, but it goes along with the implied statement, If you are against us, keep mighty quiet. Here is a draft of his last letter with which he is flooding the country:

> Should you desire the principles of the workmen's compensation bill, which is now practically up in the House of Representatives for consideration, enacted into law, it is important that you should, without delay, write and wire your Congressman, not giving him your opinion on the bill but urging him to favor this bill without amendment, as amendments are dangerous.

Why dangerous? Here is the Senate in which, in my opinion, there is not a man who will arise and oppose a proper workmen's compensation act. Why then is it dangerous to add an amendment to this bill which would increase the protection to these men? Why is it dangerous to add a single amendment to this measure? If we were to provide that compensation should be given to the 16-year-old daughter of a slaughtered engineer who has not a dollar to live upon, to the end that she might gain an education and fit herself for the battle of life—if we would add that sort of an amendment, would it jeopardize the bill in the Senate? Would it jeopardize it in the House? Would it jeopardize it anywhere among any set of men who are honestly in favor of looking after these great laboring classes? It will not so jeopardize it unless those who profess to be friendly to this legislation are in truth against any proper protection for these men, and are advocating this measure because it is a procorporate measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. My attention was attracted by a suggestion made by the honorable Senator that the men in the lower grades were not permitted to oppose legislation. Is that a provision in the rules or regulations of the labor unions?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have been discussing that very question for three hours and a half, I think. I have read the rules of the organization; I have read some of the testimony given before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has made a statement of the facts.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I have been attending a committee meeting to-day and I did not have the privilege of hearing the Senator. He has not discussed it certainly three hours and a half, because we have not been in session that long a time.

Mr. REED. It seems to me like it was six hours and a half, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. It struck me as being very remarkable, because there is great clamor on the part of the labor men that the post-office employees should not be permitted the privilege of protesting, and I think they are about legislating upon that point, and it occurs to me that these men ought to be granted that privilege. It is a great hardship if the labor unions deny it to them. That is what attracted my attention. I may be wrong about it.

Mr. REED. The matter has been made rather plain, and as plain as I can make it. I do not care to have any rule of the organization, whether it is wise or unwise, set up in bar of any legislation which we may see fit to enact, which will overturn the outrageous rule dictated by Theodore Roosevelt when he was President, which said to a post-office employee that he must not petition Congress. I trust that this rule of the labor organizations, whether it is a bad rule or not, will not be pleaded in bar of a law that proposes to set aside that decree of Theodore.

The evidence I have submitted, I think, effectually disposes of the claim that there is a universal sentiment in favor of this bill, and brings us to the position that this bill, like all other bills, should be considered upon their merits.

I have not been addressing myself at this length to the particular topic I have considered because I think it ought to be material. My opinion is that when Congress comes to enact a law they ought to give ear and heed to suggestion and argument from every part of the country and from all classes of people. No man is so humble that his prayer should not reach attentive ears. Neither is any man so great that his word should be a word of command.

So we ought to consider this matter now, as some Senators are not considering it, upon its merits as a bill, not upon the hypothesis that it meets with the approval of three or four men who happen just now to be in possession of authority among labor organizations.

Before I begin a discussion of the bill I want to state my position.

There are men here going to vote for this bill who have fought organized labor all their lives. There are men here who would not consent to an adjournment for five minutes, so anxious are they to have this measure rushed through, whose hands have been against organized labor ever since they were old enough to lift their hands, and, singularly enough, at least some of the men who believe this bill ought to be closely scanned and analyzed have stood as the friends of labor. I do not refer to that kind of friendship which is used as an asset to be traded upon, but to the sincere adherence to those policies which make for the advancement of the cause of labor.

Every railroad in the United States is for this bill. Every railroad president is for it. Every claim agent is for it. I expect every Federal judge who would like to have another appointee is for it.

I am in favor of a workmen's compensation act. I am in favor of a workmen's compensation act which will preserve to the employees the rights they now have under the law, and which will extend the beneficent protection of the law to those classes of laboring men engaged in the hazardous business of railroading who are not included within the protection of the present law.

I do not believe in order to have a workmen's compensation act that as a preliminary to obtaining it you must take away from men their constitutional and legal right. In order to extend the benefits of legislation so that it will protect those men who are injured by virtue of the unavoidable accidents or the risks incident to and inherent in the business it is not necessary to take away the legal rights which are now guaranteed by the law.

I am in favor of a workmen's compensation law that will confer rights in addition to the rights the men now have. I do not believe they must purchase that kind of law by yielding their present legal rights. Why should they yield any portion of their legal rights?

Let us stop and consider what this bill does. I give an illustration:

I am a locomotive engineer. My employer hires a careless switchman; I have no part in his selection; I have no chance in the world to regulate his conduct; I am obliged to take my engine out upon the road; the careless switchman carelessly selected neglects to close a switch; my engine plunges into a ditch; both of my hands are destroyed. I was not to blame; I had done no wrong; I had omitted no duty; my hand had been upon the throttle, my eye upon the track. The risk was not inherent in the business.

The accident was not unavoidable; the risk—the danger—came because a negligent man had been put in an important position. And now I come to ask that I be recompensed for the loss of my two hands. What does the judge say to the jury? "You can give this man only such sum of money as will repay him for the actual loss he has sustained by reason of the wrongful act of his employer." I get paid in cold hard dollars only for the actual injury I have suffered. That is the law. Is it unjust to the employer? Is there any reason that any part of the money due for actual loss suffered should be taken from me? Who will stand in a tribunal of conscience and justify the proposition that I should be deprived of that which only compensates me for the loss I have suffered by the wrongful act of the railroad?

But now we come to another class of men who have not hitherto been protected by the law. You propose now to give to those men a measure of protection. I refer to that class who are injured through no fault of theirs and through no fault of a fellow servant, but simply because of the inevitable risk and danger of the business. They have not hitherto been compensated under the law, and you have no right to compensate them now unless you bottom that right upon the equities of their case. Unless, as a matter of justice and a matter of right, they ought to be compensated, then you have no right to grant compensation in this bill or in any other bill. When you give compensation by this bill you admit the fundamental proposition that it is equitable and just that they should be compensated. The question, then, to be determined is, If we are to compensate them, shall we put the burden of their compensation upon the business in which they are injured and out of the risks of which came the damage to them? Shall we load it upon that business and make it carry the charge or shall we take it from the men who have just and legal claims? Shall we take it from the man who was not negligent or shall we take it from the business? Shall we put the burden upon the railroad company and the public that patronize it or shall we put the burden on the nonnegligent engineer who did nothing wrong? Shall we take the money out of his pockets and out of the pockets of his wife and his children or shall we take it from the company and load it on the business? That is the issue here, and there is not a man living who can stand and debate it before these men and let them hear the debate who can justify taking the money from the nonnegligent men rather than the railroad.

"I have a just cause for my two hands gone"—I come back to my illustration—"and here is another man injured because of inevitable risks of the business. Shall the money that should come to me for my right hand be taken away from me and given to the other man in order that he may be compensated, or shall it be taken out of the railroad business? You propose to make me give up the value of my one hand to compensate the man who has a just claim, but not a legal claim"—a claim that you propose now to make a legal one—"you say, give up the money due you for the loss of your right hand for the benefit of a man who has no cause of action. I say, give me pay for my two hands; I am entitled to it; God, in his justice, meant that I ought to be paid for my two hands. The laws says I should be paid for my two hands. Do not, therefore, deny this man who has no right under the present law; pass a law giving him compensation, but do not take the value of the pieces of my body to pay it with; pay it out of the earnings of the business." Why do you not do it? They did it over in England; they do it everywhere where they are not corporation-ridden.

I agree that I will vote—I will gladly vote—to pay a reasonable sum of money to any poor fellow who is injured in a railroad accident, so long as he did not bring that accident upon himself by his own willful misconduct. I will agree to have that money paid out of the earnings of the road, which in the last analysis would make it fall upon the public in general. I will not consent to take from the man who loses both hands the price of one of his hands to compensate the man who has no rights at all. Rather, I will put that burden upon the traffic where it belongs, and give to all these men protection.

Why should we not do it? In the evolution of our law, we must move forward. Why should we not take this step? There was a time when you could not recover at all against your master. We have passed beyond that. There came another time when you could recover when the master's own negligence was the direct and immediate cause of your injury and you were not negligent at all. We have passed beyond that. There came a time when if you were injured by the act of a fellow servant you could not recover, and there came a time in the enlightened progress and advancement of jurisprudence when you could recover if you were injured through the act of a fellow servant. There came a time again when we reached the high-water mark, when Congress passed laws that wiped out the doctrine of the assumption of risk, that wiped out the fellow-servant defense, that wiped out practically the doctrine of contributory negligence, and allowed men to recover, taking into consideration the degree of their negligence. Why should we not now take the further stand that the complications of business, the vast extension of industrial plants, the employment of dangerous machinery have changed the relations of the employee to the employer so that men who are engaged in these dangerous fields of enterprise ought to be compensated. As we care for the soldier who is injured upon the field of battle, why should we not care for the men employed in occupations equally dangerous, equally necessary to our national life and progress?

These men are soldiers in the great industrial army, and they are obliged to risk life and limb, as are obliged to risk life and limb the men who stand in the red line of battle, and they are equally entitled to our protection. Why should we rob the man who has lost both hands or both feet in order to take care of these other men whom we now propose to bring within the protection of the law? Why not load the business with the additional burden as it should be loaded? It is a burning shame; it is a disgrace to our civilization that it is not done.

Why, sir, the principle ought to be extended beyond railroading. We are now constructing great skyscraper buildings that rear their lofty heads so far above the earth the eye is puzzled and the brain is rendered dizzy by contemplation. Yet scarce one is ever built but takes its toll of human life. The men who stand on swinging beams high above the ground, who look like spiders clinging to ropes and spars at appalling heights, risk their lives each moment they are at work. It is but right that those who take these tremendous risks should know if they are dashed to pieces their families will not be condemned to penury and want.

The list of vocations could be well extended to cover other dangerous employments.

But I come back to this bill and ask why rob the man who has a just cause, and out of his pocket, out of his blood money, out of the price of his life, take something to compensate these other men, who you admit have a just claim? You admit it when you bring their case here and propose to give them compensation. Why not compensate them from the business instead of from the money of widows and orphans? Why, I ask, take the money from the 16-year-old daughter of an engineer instead of taking it from the railroad company and the business? Why say to the engineer who goes out upon his engine and leaves at home a daughter 14 years of age, another 15, another 16, and another 17, "if you are killed to-night they will contribute a meager sum to take care of your 14-year-old daughter for two years; they will contribute a little to take care of your 15-year-old daughter for one year, but all your other children must be turned out to shift for themselves." Is that the friendly kind of legislation we are having here? Senators, this bill is a monstrosity. Every man who votes for it is voting for a bill so iniquitious that it will rise to curse him.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to ask the Senator if, with the amendment I am about to suggest, his objection would be relieved? I realize the force of the argument that is being presented by the distinguished Senator. Section 30, on page 44, reads as follows:

SEC. 30. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as doing away with or affecting any common-law or statutory right of action or remedy for personal injury or death happening before this act shall take effect.

I would add to that the words "or after this act shall go into effect."

Mr. REED. Why, if you will put that in this bill I will take my seat and thank God the light has at last broken.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say, Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I believe my good friend, who always wants to be right and always is when he does not separate from me [laughter], is going to stand with me for that proposition.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. My hat is off to you, and I shall offer that as an amendment when the proper time comes, but if it does not prevail, I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that if the Senator from New Jersey should be successful in incorporating his proposed amendment in the bill he would prevent the passage of the bill. Senators on this side of the Chamber, I apprehend, would not want the bill at all with that amendment.

Mr. REED. I am not going to take the uncharitable view that they would vote against the bill because of that humane amendment. That is what I am contending for here, and I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that I think his amendment is in almost perfect shape. I have not examined it critically, as I would if it came up to be voted on, but the idea is there beyond a doubt, and it appears to be well expressed. If you will simply make this bill so that it may be taken advantage of by the railroad men at their option, if they prefer it to their present rights under the law, we will end this discussion now, and I speak for every man on this side of the Chamber who has hitherto been opposing this bill. I think we can pass it unanimously in five minutes' time with that amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. DAVIS. In order to make the record absolutely correct, I want it stated in the RECORD that when I made that suggestion a few moments ago I was sitting on the Republican side of the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we have not got to the point where that amendment is consented to. If the learned author of this bill is prepared to say now that he will accept any such amendment as has been suggested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] we will frame it very quickly and end all discussion; but I am fearful that the Senator from Utah does not agree with the Senator from New Jersey. However, I am pausing now in the hope—it is very faint, but still a hope—that he may consent.

Mr. President, in the absence of any encouraging expressions I shall be obliged to continue discussing the bill. If the bill were a cumulative remedy, I would not object to it, but since it is an exclusive remedy and wipes out all the old common law and statutory rights of these men—every right they have on earth—and substitutes this bill for them, it is important we know what is in the bill.

The first thing I want to call attention to is a provision in the bill that you do not find in ordinary laws, and you can not find justification for it in this bill. We have had some experience in the course of the ages with what is a proper rule with reference to the time in which men can bring their actions; we have statutes of limitation; but there has never been a State yet so corporation ridden that it denied a man his right of action unless he gave notice of it within 10 or 20 days after it had arisen. Always the right of action for two or three years is preserved. The only kind of concern that has required immediate notice, and notice of the character contained in this bill, is an insurance company, which demands notice of a loss within a very few days after the fire has occurred. They have that rule probably for two reasons: First, inadvertently some men fail to comply with it and the company thus acquires a technical defense; and, second, there is a special reason why an insurance company should be given prompt notice; but the courts have invariably held that where notice is required even by an insurance company, and the company has actual notice, written notice is not necessary. The courts have invariably held that a claim against an insurance company can not be defeated if, in fact, the agents of the company, duly authorized, knew of the fire. But here is a bill that right in its inception contains a provision which can not be justified by any man on earth and it will not be justified on this floor. Let me read it:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the injured employee, immediately upon the happening of the accident, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and not later than 30 days thereafter, and likewise in case of his death by such accident the duty of one or more of the dependents of an employee, within 30 days thereafter, to give or cause to be given to the employer written notice of the accident causing such injury or death, stating in ordinary language—

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Sanders
Bacon	Davis	Myers	Shively
Bourne	Dillingham	Nixon	Simmons
Bristow	Fall	Oliver	Smith, Ariz.
Brown	Fletcher	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Foster	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Burton	Gallinger	Page	Stephenson
Catron	Gardner	Paynter	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Gore	Penrose	Swanson
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Thornton
Clapp	Jones	Poindexter	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Pomerene	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Rayner	Wetmore
Crawford	Lippitt	Reed	Williams
Cullom	McCumber	Richardson
Cummins	McLean	Root

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I was reading the requirement of the bill in regard to notice. I would be delighted if the Members of the Senate would give their attention to this, and particularly if the author of it would give his attention. I begin again because of interruptions:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the injured employee, immediately upon the happening of the accident, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and not later than 30 days thereafter, and likewise in case of his death by such accident the duty of one or more of the dependents of an employee, within 30 days thereafter, to give or cause to be given to the employer written notice of the accident causing such injury or death, stating in ordinary language the time, place, and particulars thereof, the name of the injured or dead employee, his class of service, and the address of the injured employee or person giving the notice.

If this bill stopped there it would be bad enough, but mark this:

Provided, That where it is made to appear that the party herein required to give such written notice has been prevented from giving it through or by reason of mental or physical incapacity, ignorance of law or of fact, or the fraud or deceit of some other person, or from some other equally good cause, the same may be given after the expiration of said 30 days, but not later than 90 days from the date of the accident or death.

Now, any court would construe that to mean this: You must give notice within 30 days, unless you have a good excuse. If you have that good excuse, as specified in the bill, you can then give it within 90 days; but if you fail to give it within 90 days your cause of action is dead.

Let us see how that would work out. It applies to dependents, to the relatives of the dead men as well as to the dead. We may well conceive of a man being killed and his relatives not hearing of it for 90 days of time. They might be abroad; any one of a thousand different sets of conditions might exist that I will not weary the Senate with relating, because they will spring to your minds at once. Mark you, this excludes everybody who does not get in within 90 days. The dependent might be a child six months old, without a representative on earth, without anybody to speak for it. It is cut out. Under the common law or the statutory law its rights would be reserved to it until it arrived at the age of 21, because in the kindness of the law the rights of the infant are preserved, but the first thing this bill does is to strike down all the rights under the old law and give only the rights here reserved.

This bill says no matter what the circumstances are, no matter what the conditions are, if the child is only 6 months old, if the wife is living but is non compos mentis or so sick she can not raise her hand or look after her business, for all time the claim is cut off. Is there anybody in this building, is there anybody in the Senate Chamber—and I had almost included the occupants of the gallery—willing to vote for that? It does not provide even if the railroad company has notice from other sources that that shall be sufficient.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have refrained from interrupting the Senator with reference to a great many statements with respect to the bill, but what he is saying now is so far from what the provisions of the bill are that I should like to call the Senator's attention to them.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Section 15, on page 26, provides:

SEC. 15. That while any person entitled to compensation under this act shall be an infant or mentally incompetent, his natural guardian or guardian or committee, appointed pursuant to law, may on his behalf perform any duty required or exercise any right conferred by this act with the same force and effect as if such person was legally capable to act in his own behalf.

Now mark:

No limitation respecting the time within which any right under this act is to be asserted shall, as against such infant or incompetent person, run while such infant or incompetent person has no guardian or committee: Provided, however, That the foregoing shall not apply to cases of infancy where the infant is over the age of 18 years, but such infant shall be treated for all purposes of this act as though of full age.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the original section which I have just read, section 7, relates to the notice that is to be given of the injury, while section 15 relates to the assertion of the rights after the notice has been given. It is the method of procedure afterwards, and it does in a very imperfect way attempt to save the rights subsequent, the rights which have been called into existence by the giving of the notice.

I do not think the Senator from Utah, when he comes to consider those two clauses together, will stand upon the position he has taken.

Manifestly the demand for written notice in the law ought always to give way to actual notice. Here is the way this thing would be worked or could be worked by a dishonest or unscrupulous claim agent. A man is injured in a wreck. A dozen people are killed. Everybody who reads a newspaper knows about it. The claim agents are there. The officials of the road are there. They see the mangled body of the engineer or fireman. They know all about it. The injured man is carried home to his stricken wife. He lies there, perhaps unconscious for days, incapable of doing any business. The woman appalled by the awful catastrophe is likewise incapable of attending to business. The claim agent is there. He says, "You do not need to give any notice." It is true that would be considered a fraud, and that would relieve the injured party from giving the notice within 30 days, but if he continues that sort of flattering and soft talk until 90 days have passed the woman is debarred from any recovery, although every official of the railroad, every employee, from the water boy to the president, knew all about it.

Why is there any such trick in this bill? Why any such deadfall? I do not mean to say it was put there for that purpose, but it simply shows when you wipe out all of the old laws and write a new one you had better be careful how you write it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Missouri will proceed with the reading for a moment or two, just after what has been read by the Senator, he will find that there occurs this language:

In the absence of such written notice—

That is where no notice has been given at all—the employer shall not be liable to pay any compensation under this act unless, in cases where the injury has resulted in the absence from work of the employee for at least 2 days and in case of death, it is made to appear that within such period of 30 days such employer had actual knowledge of the injury or death.

Does not the Senator think that extends the time?

Here is what follows that:

That in case of death resulting immediately or within 24 hours from the time of the accident notice thereof shall not be required.

Mr. REED. I want to discuss this bill frankly, and I say to the Senator I have not given full attention—the attention I ought to have given—to the language he has just read. It is barely possible that that provision partially covers some of the cases I have referred to, but in other instances the defense would still, I think, be open.

Now, Mr. President, I want to proceed to another proposition contained in this bill, and it is one I feel ought to receive the most careful consideration of the Senate. It is true there is a provision here in the case of an injury for the appointment of committees which may adjust by agreement the amount to be paid. But, Mr. President, that can be done under the present law. No legislation is required for that, and even if it was it would not be necessary to pass this bill in order to enact that measure.

But aside from that, the ordinary course of procedure is a hearing before an adjuster. I know that in this day and age of the world it is very popular to denounce men possessing a knowledge of the law, and yet there are very few men who would want to have a great property right or a great right of liberty carried before a man ignorant of the law, and for this patent reason: The law is the only means by which a man gets protection in his rights, and the only man who can construe that rule for the protection of human life and human rights is some one who knows what the rule is. Therefore disputes involving large property interest are not turned over for decision to men ignorant of the law.

We have justices of the peace who are not required to be learned in the law, but their jurisdiction is limited to small and trifling matters. But when we come to the question of the selection of these so-called adjusters by the Federal judges, there is no requirement that they shall have any knowledge of the law whatever. They need possess no other qualifications than those possessed by an ordinary justice of the peace—an ordinary layman—and yet we put into their hands not small and trifling matters, but questions which involve large sums of money and the very delicate questions of law.

It is not true that this bill fixes the amounts which are to be paid in cases of injury. It is true that it fixes the amount that is to be paid for certain injuries, but if Senators will examine the bill they will find that the number of injuries which are specified are exceedingly small compared with the injuries which actually do occur, and when the amount is not actually fixed, then it is to be determined by your adjuster. It is not fixed by the law, but he must pass upon the facts and he must determine the rule of law under which he is to weigh these particular facts and arrive at his conclusion. If any man will examine the rules by which the damages are to be estimated according to this bill, I think he will find it one difficult for him to understand.

Thus there is put by this bill into the hands of these men who may be unlearned in any principle of law the decision of these great questions of facts and of law. They are armed with authority as great as the court itself in most particulars—not in all; I will not stop to point out the limitations.

The first real step to be taken under this bill is this: A Federal judge appoints the adjusters. I assume he will appoint some such men as they have heretofore appointed by the courts as commissioners. We may therefore expect that some politician out of a job will get this. In that one man's hand is placed the important business of determining what is due all the railroad men of a judicial district.

Will this bill lessen litigation? I am putting it now to Senators as practical men? Will it not rather increase litigation? At the present time any man can get his trial by filing his cause in the court. He has one trial, and then follows judgment. But under this scheme you start with a trial before this so-called adjuster. You summon witnesses. I am not sure whether he can take depositions or not. If a man lives a distance from a Federal court he may be required to travel all that distance with his witnesses in order to obtain a hearing.

It was said here the other day that there is only one Federal court in the State of Arizona. In that case a man might have to travel clear across that State to have a hearing before the adjuster. The expense incident to this sort of trial is substantially as great as in an ordinary trial in court. Imagine a case of that kind, where a man has received an injury, perhaps not of the most desperate character. The railroad refuses to settle with him. He can not try that case in his local court. He has to travel across the State or part way across the State to see the adjuster. There he can have a hearing, which is in all respects a trial. This scheme gives the claim agent an advantage which will be quickly seized. He will say, "We will take you before the adjuster; you will have to travel a great distance and carry along your witnesses. Then, if you beat us there we will appeal to the Federal courts, and we will keep you in the courts until you will regret not having accepted the amount we offer."

After you have got through trying your case once before the adjuster, then either party may appeal to the court, and for the first time you are in the position where the law now puts you. You have to go through the adjuster's court under this bill before you are as far advanced in the course of litigation as you are now without this bill. When you get to the Federal court, what happens? Then the first thing is to attempt to deprive you of a jury trial. There is not a man who ever defended a railroad company or any other concern in a personal-injury suit who would not have been glad to have waived the jury and gone to the judge. There is not a man who has ever tried one of these cases for a plaintiff who would not have been glad if he could summon a jury to pass upon the man's injuries. The attempt therefore to deprive the injured employees of a jury trial is one of the startling things attempted by this bill.

Why require a notice within five days of a demand for a jury? Why did they give the jury trial at all? The only reason jury trial was not abolished is because, if the railroad presidents who sat upon the commission that framed this bill and the attorneys who were advising them, knew that the bill would be unconstitutional and that it would fall dead from the hands of him who penned it if the right to a trial by jury was utterly refused.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I challenge the statement of the Senator that "railroad presidents" sat on that commission. There was one railroad president who did sit upon the commission, and he was appointed by the President.

Mr. REED. I will adopt the singular instead of the plural.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want to say that the labor organizations were represented there in the person of Mr. Cease. The other members were Members of the House or Senate.

Mr. REED. Yes. I did not mean to say there were two presidents there. There was one, and it has been openly stated, if I mistake not, by the Senator who has given his name to this bill, that they would have been very glad to have done away with the jury trials altogether.

In the name of all that is good, when has it come to the point that Congress proposes to lend its aid to circumscribing the right to trial by jury? I repeat, as I understand the situation, this commission would have denied the right of trial by jury altogether, save that the Constitution would have been violated and the bill would have been a dead letter. Abrogate the right to trial by jury when that jury is invoked by a man injured in a railroad wreck, seek to circumscribe it and hedge it about when the person who is there appealing is a widow in her weeds or a child in its swaddling clothes! Strike down the right of trial by jury! Circumscribe it by a bill here in Congress! Why, sir, every man who has read the history of his country and his race knows that trial by jury is the sheet anchor of human liberty, and that so long as trial by jury is preserved inviolate even the tyrant upon his throne can not destroy the substantial rights of a human being so long as he can demand the verdict of 12 good men among whom he lives. Why, in addition to taking away from these men the right to a trial in the courts of their own State, try to take from them a trial before a jury, even a Federal jury, summoned by a Federal marshal?

Do you, sir, and you, and you, give sanction to that clause of this bill, and, if so, why do you do it? If it be right to circumscribe trial by jury, then let us amend the Constitution and take it away altogether. If it be wise to circumscribe the right of the workingmen who are injured to have their cases passed upon by 12 men, and if we are, as far as possible, to turn them over to the tender mercies of judges who are appointed for life—to any court, appointed or elected—then why not do it in all cases? Why not amend the Constitution and do away for all time in all cases with jury trials?

I know there are men in this country to-day who would wipe out jury trials. I know there are men in this country to-day who do not believe that the common man has intelligence enough to sit upon a jury. I know there are magazine writers and publicists who give to the country their views that only ignorant men sit upon the jury. But I say, sir, in this presence that I would rather have my rights tried, if I had a just and decent case, before 12 men who could not read or write, but who have had experiences in life, whose hearts beat in sympathy with the trials and struggles of the great mass of men, whose souls are thrilled with human sympathy, whose hands touch the horizon of human feeling—I would rather be tried by them than to be tried by the wisest judge who ever sat upon the woolsack. And so would every other man who understands that, after all, the courthouse is the citadel of human rights and that the right to a jury is the keystone which supports the arch of the citadel. Yet here is a bill, written for the alleged protection of 1,650,000 railroad men, and it is proposed by this tricky measure to cheat them, their widows and their orphans, of a right guaranteed in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, I ask how much of litigation have you cut off? You litigate before the adjuster. Then you litigate in the courts. They have to give you a jury, if you are quick on your feet and demand it. And then what? Then they read against you as prima facie evidence the finding of this adjuster. It will be held up there as the solemn decision of the court against you.

We have tried cases, some of us, and we have always known that it was error to introduce into the second trial of a case the fact of the decision having been a certain way in the first trial. That was to the end that you might have a trial upon the evidence produced there and then. But here it is skillfully written the adjuster's finding may be read and shall create a prima facie case. Do you call that protecting and taking care of the railroad men of this country?

I should like to meet some of the men who propose to vote for this infamous measure before great bodies of laboring men and hear them defend their attempt to deprive railway employees of trial by jury. I shall be delighted to hear their apologies for forcing them into Federal courts. Is there any necessity for forcing these men into Federal courts? Concede, now, that an adjuster might settle some claims; concede that he might be of some use, yet why should this Federal adjuster's decision be read as prima facie against either party?

If an appeal must be taken, why should it be taken to a Federal court? Will somebody rise and tell me why it could not as well be lodged in the circuit court or district court of the county, the State court, under whatever name it is, and why that judge could not as well hear the case, and a jury summoned by the county as well try the case as one summoned in the Federal court? Why? Because the adjuster is appointed by the Federal court does not change the relation of the litigants.

They tell us this must be a harmonious scheme; but why will that introduce disharmony into the system? I will wait a long while for a reply to that, and you will have, some of you, a long time to reply to it.

Now, Mr. President, think of this: Under the law as it stands to-day in the case of an injury, where there is liability, the widow is taken care of, the children are taken care of. The present law provides very explicitly, even in the absence of children or wife, that then the money shall go to the parents, if

I remember correctly its terms; it has been some time since I read them. Then, it goes, if there are none of these, to dependent relatives, and for the first time we find the word "dependent" in the present law. But what does this proposed law do? It provides that no children over 16 years of age can get a penny unless dependent.

Now, ordinarily, a lawyer reading that would say the word "dependent" means some one dependent upon the dead man for assistance in getting through life; but over in the back part of the bill we find the word "dependent" defined in a manner peculiar to this bill, and it is that no child is dependent when it is over 16 years of age unless it is incapable of earning a living because of mental or physical incapacity. So that the proposed law, speaking broadly, is so drawn that no child of a man who is injured, even through the grossest negligence of his employer, can recover after it is 16 years of age unless it be an idiot or a cripple.

That is a direct change against the interests of these men in favor of the railroad company. I want to know why it is in the bill. We are talking about taking care of these people, of assisting them, of aiding them, and the humane provision of this bill is that the rights of children shall cease when they are 16 years of age. They may be absolutely dependent upon the dead father for the bread that goes into their mouths; they may be without opportunity of education or chance of advancement in life, yet as they can not qualify as idiots or cripples they go without a penny.

Vote for it, all of you who desire; but, as for me, I will never say to the daughter or the son of a railway engineer, "Sixteen years of age you are to-day, and no further compensation comes to you from the dead hand of your father or the company that he worked for."

Why is that exception made in this bill? Is it upon the principle that it is right to compensate all, whether they are injured through inevitable accident or through negligence or because it is now proposed to include those injured through inevitable accident? Therefore, instead of charging it up to the business as an additional expense, we will take it from the widow and the orphan of those men who to-day have causes of action under the law, and from the man who loses his hands or foot we will take a part instead of taking it from the business.

Well, that is a fine piece of business; it is a beautiful piece of legislation. It is to be railroaded through this Senate. I ask again, Why this haste? Why not give these railway organizations a chance to examine and to speak? Why not see if the bridle can not be removed from their lips? Why not give the men interested a chance to investigate this bill?

I do not possess that degree of egotism which would lead me to believe that I could sit down in my office, even with the advice of a dozen good men, and draw a bill that some practical men working upon the road could not suggest an improvement to.

Only next week there meets a great body of these men at Harrisburg, Pa. Bring this bill before them. Let them discuss it. Let us hear from the men to be affected, not from the three or four men who assume to represent them, but the men who actually do the work and will be affected. There will be there representatives from all parts of the United States. I put it to Senators as a matter of fairness, Should not we wait to hear from those men? Should not action upon this bill be postponed until they can speak?

I have said I would not undertake to draw a bill, even if I had studied the question for years, without consulting the men who are daily engaged at the work and who are to be affected. They see the law from their own viewpoint; they feel the iron entering their soul every day and know where the lash cuts deepest into their flesh. I would not undertake to say that they could not make suggestions that would be of value to me. Other Senators, I am sure, feel the same way. Why not give this bill a postponement and let these men vote upon it?

I have expressed my views very strongly in regard to this bill. I regard it as a measure that is so fraught with iniquity that it ought never to become a law. But, sirs, I yield so high an allegiance, if you please, to the wishes of the men affected that if the bill were given to them and they had a fair opportunity to consider it and were to come back and say, "In view of our experience and after full consideration we want this bill," I would vote for it then, because I would believe I was yielding to men who had the experience.

But you Senators, sitting in your offices, with your multitude of duties, doing the best you can, as most men try to do in this world, but without the time to give to this measure full and mature consideration, are, some of you, blindly accepting the work of other men without having brought to it your individual judgment. In any event, I insist that as of right the 1,650,000 men to be directly affected ought to be heard before a bill so revolutionary shall become a law.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, before the bill progresses to a further stage I desire to be heard for just a short while on its merits. But the hour is late and possibly there might be a desire to take a recess before I could conclude. If there is any inclination of that kind on the part of gentlemen who have the bill in charge I would be glad to have them so express it now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator had better proceed. I think he will have ample time.

Mr. DAVIS. How long does the Senator want the Senate to remain in session?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We are under a unanimous-consent agreement to pass the bill on this legislative day.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator purpose having a night session?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is for the Senate to determine.

Mr. DAVIS. I mean by that suggestion, does the Senator purpose insisting upon the Senate remaining in session if the matter is not terminated soon?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it is a little early in the day to determine that. It is not quite 4 o'clock. We have two hours or more before it will be late in the afternoon.

Mr. DAVIS. I can not quite understand the diligence of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the session can run until half past 6 or 7 o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS. Usually the Senator is the first man who wants to take out. Now he seems to be pressing for some reason I can not quite understand.

But, Mr. President, I see a disposition upon the part of the managers in charge of the bill to railroad the measure, as I see it, through the Senate without an opportunity being given to the men who are directly affected by the bill to be heard, and possibly without an opportunity upon the part of those who would like to debate it to have a chance to fairly express their views.

If I were permitted to do so, Mr. President, I would indorse absolutely the remarks of my friend from Missouri [Mr. REED] and take my seat, because he has expressed my views upon the merits of the bill most admirably. But I want to say a word for the man who is on the engine to-day—the man who is actually engaged in work. I want him to be heard in this Chamber, and not the paid lobbyist or the paid promoter of so-called labor organizations, who is ever present and hovering around the Senate Chamber.

There are some good men who come here representing labor organizations—many of them, no doubt—but there are some for whom I entertain the most supreme contempt. They do not represent anybody except their own selfish interests. They do not represent the real man who works, the man who toils and labors and sweats upon the engine or the fireman on the train or the brakeman who takes his life in his hands in the discharge of his duty. Those men are at work to-day. Nine-tenths of those men have not seen this bill. Nine-tenths of these men do not know what its provisions are.

I see distinguished Senators here on this floor who are supposed to have given some thought and some consideration to a matter of this importance, but who really do not know anything about the bill themselves. I confess I have not examined it as carefully and critically as I ought to have done. We have not had time to do it. This bill was only introduced here less than a month ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. DAVIS. Other matters have engaged the attention of the Senate. Senators have been occupied with other duties. For the first time on yesterday this matter was really pressed upon the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In order that the record may be straight upon this question I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this bill was introduced February 20, 1912.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly; I will give you credit for 30 days more.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was reported out of the committee on April 3, and about two weeks ago unanimous consent was given to vote upon it this day. So it would seem that there had been ample time given for its consideration.

Mr. DAVIS. I just missed it 30 days in my statement.

Why this unseemly haste, Mr. President? We had just as well be fair with ourselves, and we had just as well be fair with the country. We had just as well strip this matter of all attempts at subterfuge and dodging and openly admit, because such is the case, that it is a measure not for the protection of the man who works and labors, not for the protection of the man who gives his life and his energy, his muscle and his brain to the duty of railroading, but it is a bill in the interests of the railroad itself. It is a bill attempted to be railroaded through the Senate to cut off the substantial remedies of the fellow who can not be heard on this floor. The brakeman who is engaged in his duties to-day can not come here before committees. The conductor can not come here. They send these lobbyists here, and after a certain stage of evolution they get to be congressional lobbyists. They come here and they forget the fellow back yonder on the train; they forget the fellow back firing; they become entranced with the glitter and tinsel and gloss of their surroundings. They immediately swell up and become great men. They become national characters. They represent great interests. They swell up like a "poisoned pup" in the sunshine, they become so inflated with their greatness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just whom does the Senator mean by lobbyists?

Mr. DAVIS. I mean the fellows who are here in the interests of this bill; your claim agents and your other fellows who are here that sat with this committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator mean the heads of the labor organizations?

Mr. DAVIS. I am talking about Mr. Whiting, and your men I do not know by name.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator mean the heads of the labor organizations?

Mr. DAVIS. Not necessarily, but for some of them I have but little respect.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The gentlemen who were here were at the head of the railroad trainmen. Mr. Lee and——

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know them by name.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. W. S. Stone, head of the engineers.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know them. I make no personal reference.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Each one was here spending time helping in the preparing of this bill and indorsing it. Does the Senator mean those gentlemen?

Mr. DAVIS. I mean Mr. Whiting and your crowd of railroad men, if you want to know who I mean.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the Senator does not mean the gentlemen whose names I have mentioned?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know the men. I mean Whiting and——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Whiting was here, and a great many other gentlemen were here.

Mr. DAVIS. And where is the president of the New York Central Railroad?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was a member of the commission.

Mr. DAVIS. He was put on the commission for a purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So if the Senator will call over the list he will see that Mr. Cease was on the commission who represented the employees and consented to this bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know Mr. Cease, but he was a very poor friend of the employees if he consented to this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A great many people were here whom the Senator does not know.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; but in the hand of proffered friendship there is concealed a dagger that will cut out the very vitals of the laboring man himself. Railroad men with the soft tread of a cat but with the claws of a tiger may come here under the guise of supposed friendship, and you attempt at one fell swoop to strike at the interests of the laboring man; and you are going to railroad the bill through the Senate, a bill that is revolutionary in its tendency, that destroys the fundamental law, and that takes from the laboring man every vested right he has.

Sir, when the fellows who toil and sweat, when the men who do the real work in these great industrial pursuits understand the real purpose and the real meaning of this bill they will rise to damn you.

My friend, the distinguished Senator from Missouri, showed that in less than two days how the sentiment of his State had changed. I pause to say that there are no brighter, more intelligent, capable railroad men in the country than those of Missouri. In less than two days they have changed their minds on this important question, and they have instructed their representatives to vote against this bill and to do all in their power honorably and consistently for its defeat.

I heard other Senators in the cloakroom, just an hour ago, say that in less than two days their constituents have reversed their position on this question, and that they are now urging them to defeat this measure.

Senators, why this haste? Why this anxiety? The convention of railroad employees will meet at Harrisburg, Pa., on the 8th instant. Can you not stay the hand of the despoiler until the 8th? Can you not let this measure rest, hair hung and breeze shaken as it is, until after the 8th? Why this rush? Is there something that you want to cover up? Is there something that you do not want the public to know? Is there something to conceal? Senators, let us have an open, fair fight on this measure.

I know the bill is going to pass the Senate. There is no use to argue against it. There is no use to talk; the edict has gone forth; the verdict is made up; the question is settled. For my part, I am not a filibusterer, but not until my right hand shall lose its cunning and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth will I be found giving assent to such a measure so full of rottenness and deceit as is this measure.

You are in an awful hurry, are you not? You want to get it passed before the labor organizations can be heard.

Senators on the other side of the Chamber, there has been a powerful cleaning out over there among you lately, and there is going to be some more cleaning out soon. The people of this country are awakened to the fact that they can not longer trust the Senate of the United States to give them what they want and what is fair.

I have been here but four years. I see a lot of strange faces over there. Lots of them have gone out and new ones have come in. Just as fast as the people can get a lick at it they settle it.

Why is that true, Mr. President? Why does that condition obtain? It is because the people of this country have lost confidence in the Government itself. They feel that it has become an engine of oppression and tyranny, that the just rights of the humblest citizen do not receive fair recognition at your hands. They feel that Mr. Whiting and the president of the New York Central Railroad sit too near the throne. The people have a right to feel that way when such measures as this are attempted to be railroaded through this body, which is known and spoken of as a great deliberative body.

Senators, why this rush; why this haste?

There is another point. Those of you who have charge of this bill and who are supporting it say that it is in the interest of the laboring man. One Senator told me the other day in private conversation that the railroads would pay out much more money under the operations of this bill than they do under the present system. Does anybody think I am going to believe that? Does anybody imagine for a moment that you could get the fellow who actually works to believe that? Do you think that you can convince me or the country that a railroad corporation is for a bill that compels it to pay out $5,000,000 annually more money under the proposed system than it pays out now? Do you think you can make anybody believe that? The country is made to believe a good many things, but you are taxing their credulity too much when you ask them to believe that.

If you are really in favor of the laboring man and if you want to protect and preserve his rights, ask any lawyer who has charge of this bill and who is interested in promoting its passage why is it that you insist on putting this remedy as an exclusive remedy? Why do you want to take away the right of the laboring man to be heard in his own court, to be heard in his own forum, to be heard by a jury of his own peers, and make this remedy exclusive? Why do you want to do it, if you want to be fair? Is there any fairness in that, do you think?

I have heard it stated by a learned gentleman on the other side of the Chamber that even the English rule makes the right of procedure optional and does not make the remedy exclusive. If those in charge of this bill will adopt the suggestion offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], then much of the objection to the bill will be eliminated. Why not do it? Because if you make the remedy optional with the laboring man, and he chooses to go this route through the Federal adjuster, through the Federal court, to the court of appeals, then he is his own guardian; he can pursue what remedy he chooses. But in the name of decency, Senators, in the name of fairness, in the name of the man who works and labors, I appeal to you to at least give the laboring man the right to select his forum, the right to select his remedy.

Do you know what you are doing when you pass this bill? Members of the Senate, it is the most revolutionary measure to which my attention has ever been called. It wipes out with one fell swoop the common law, the statutory law, and the act of Congress recently passed, known as the employers' liability act, and which has not yet had an opportunity to be tested to determine whether or not it is satisfactory. It wipes them all out at one fell swoop and substitutes for them a piece of legislation which was formulated with the president of the New York Central Railroad and his chief adviser, Mr. Whiting, sitting close to the throne. We might just as well strip this, Senators; we might just as well stand up and count noses. As soon as the man who works and labors understands what you have done to him, that minute you are going to be called to the bar of public justice to give an account of what you have done here to-day.

I would not vote for this bill, Mr. President; I would resign my seat in the Senate of the United States before I would cast my vote for it. Why? It not only does an injustice to the man who is injured, but it does an incalculable injustice to the widows and orphans of this country, who, I must say, receive practically no consideration at the hands of Congress by this proposed legislation. Why, sir, the largest amount that a man can recover under this bill is $50 a month, and that for eight years.

Take a man whose spine has been absolutely shattered and whose nervous system has been broken down, who is destroyed in body and almost in mind, who must live through life a helpless cripple and almost a maniac because of the negligence and carelessness of a fellow servant—take that man; he may live through a period of years; he was earning $200 or $225 a month as a railroad conductor or engineer, and say to his family, "You have got to nurse this cripple; you have got to attend to this shattered body and almost shattered mind for the remainder of his days, and all we will give you in the way of compensation is $50 a month." And for how long? For eight years. Is that fair? Is there any semblance of fairness or justice in that? Would a railroad man working on a train to-day, taking his life in his hands, agree to such a measure as that? Do you consider that equity and justice? Do you believe that the railroad men will come here and say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; we applaud you for your kindness and for your generosity." Senators, stop and think before you do this thing.

I have been a friend of the laboring man all my official life. I was his friend as governor of my State for six years, and I have tried to be the friend of the laboring man since I have had the honor to be a Member of this body. I do not know what the laboring men in my State want; they have not conferred with me, but I know they do not want this bill. I know that this bill is inimical to their best interests, and I shall not support it.

Senators, I say stop before you do this thing and carefully consider it; stop before it is too late. An attempt is being made to railroad this legislation. Put on the brakes, apply the air, put on the emergency, do anything, wave the red light, wave the danger signal, give the boys in the trenches, give the man at the throttle, give the laboring man a chance to be heard.

I want to talk for those men. I am not here talking for Mr. Whiting or the president of the New York Central Railroad. Do you know, my friend, that you need not lose any sleep about the railroads; they will take care of themselves. You know that. They have always done so in all the history of railroads. They will take care of themselves. They are nice kid-gloved fellows, you know. They have great social functions, and they are the cleverest fellows on earth, you know. They will say of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], to whom I am addressing my remarks now, "He is the nicest fellow on earth; he is the greatest constitutional lawyer in the world; we will invite him out to-night to a banquet." They will give him a wine supper. They are that kind of fellows. They would not offer you money for your vote—oh, no; that is not their method; they are just good fellows, nice fellows, social fellows, you know, fellows it is agreeable to be with; and you need not lose any sleep about that character of fellow; he will take care of himself. But the fellow who is out yonder in charge of human lives, in charge of human freight, the fellow who is pulling the cord to-day on the engine hauling the train with my babies aboard or your wife aboard, is the fellow you had better watch after. He is the man whose interests you ought to protect. He has not been heard from. Wait until the gravel train gets in. You have heard from the fellow who rides in the Pullman car; now wait until the gravel train gets in. Wait until then, gentlemen of the Senate. Let us hear from the other side. Put this matter off a while; let us be fair.

Why does the Senator from Utah, a man of steady habits, a man of pleasing disposition, a man who is usually not fretful or restless under the curb, a man who takes life easy ordinarily—why does he suddenly get so restless and restive and fretful? He reminds me of one of the—and I do not mean this disrespectfully—horses that I saw at the horse show the other day, one of those restive fellows who just bobs and twists and prances all over the paddock. The Senator from Utah is restless; he can not sit still; he wants to get this bill passed. Why? Senators, I say stop before you do this thing. This bill is loaded. Mr. Whiting and the president of the New York Central Railroad sat close to the throne. Be careful how you vote.

Mr. President, this is no child's matter. This is no vote of a passing moment; it is a vote to change the fundamental law of this land; a vote that will go down to posterity as the deliberate judgment of the Senate. I am told if you do not put the price of legs high enough in this bill you can amend it so as to make the price of legs higher; if you do not give a man enough for an arm you can amend it so as to make the arm cost more. Senators, that is playing with fire. Whenever you abolish the law of the land that has stood for hundreds of years, that has stood the test of time, that has been construed by the courts and passed beyond the stage of speculation, you are doing a dangerous thing. The railroad companies know it. They fought the employers' liability act and took it to the court of last resort. They fought it through the Supreme Court of the United States. They hoped to defeat it there on the ground of unconstitutionality, and, having failed there, then they seek to wipe out all the fundamental laws of the land on this subject—laws, as I have said, which have passed beyond speculation, laws which have been construed by the courts, laws which are fixed and established.

The vested rights of the laboring man to-day are to be taken from him and a mere shadow, a mere subterfuge, a mere dodge, is to be given in their place. Senators, I say in the hand of proffered friendship is concealed the deadly dagger of the railroad companies.

Mr. President, I do not care to say more; probably I should not have said this much, but I want the railroad boys in my State to know that I am not going to see this kind of legislation passed here without raising my voice against it. As I have said, I do not know how they stand, and, more than that, I do not care how they stand at this moment. I do care how they will eventually stand, because I would yield my judgment to theirs if they had expressed it after solemn deliberation; but at this moment they have had no opportunity for deliberate judgment; they have had no chance for deliberation; they have had no chance for counsel or advice. While they are the best crowd of fellows on earth, yet they are the busiest men on earth; they have to trust their business to the heads of their organizations, and I am sorry to say that, in my experience, some of the heads of those organizations have not always been faithful. I repeat, Mr. President and Senators, I care not how the railroad people in my State stand on this question at this moment; I am going to use my judgment, and that judgment is that this bill will mean their ruin and their undoing. My judgment is that this bill is destructive of every substantial right they now have.

I have prosecuted a lot of these cases and I know something about them. I have made the railroad companies twist and squirm; I have made them turn over their "hard-earned dollars," as they call them, to a poor suffering widow or to the helpless orphan child. That is all the kind of business I do, outside of attending to the Senate, as has been charged, a side line; and thank God, Mr. President, I am always found on the side of the under dog in the fight, and I have always been found there.

The railroad companies tell me they want to act fairly; they tell me they want to do justice by their employees. Senators, they would not give them a pleasant look if they did not have to. Talk about a settlement with claim agents! Before a man dies they are worrying and fretting the wife, threatening her with endless litigation. With the children screaming, the father dying, the blood running from his wounds, here is the ruthless, merciless, heartless claim agent standing there with his paper and pen ready to take a dying statement or any statement that he can get from the lips of the injured man that would work against the interests of the widow and children.

Members of the Senate, the present law is good enough, and the railroad men are satisfied with it. Why set it aside? The Supreme Court of the United States has upheld the employers' liability act recommended by Mr. Roosevelt and indorsed by everybody. Let that be tested out; let that be tried out before we embark upon an unknown and untried sea of experiment and speculation.

I will not consume the time of the Senate in discussing the defects and iniquities of the bill itself. That has been ably covered by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. [illegible]nd I indorse his views as mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The reading of the bill for committee amendments will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "employed," to insert "in such commerce," and, on page 2, after the word "employer," to strike out "in such commerce," so as to make the section read:

That every common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, including commerce between the District of Columbia and a State (hereinafter designated employer), shall pay compensation in the amounts hereinafter specified to any employee who, while employed in such commerce by such employer, sustains personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment and resulting in his disability, or to the dependents, as hereinafter defined, of such employee in case such injury results in his death.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has some suggestions to make in reference to this section, but I do not know that the amendment proposed by the committee will affect his amendment. I suppose the committee amendments may first be disposed of and that then amendments by individual Senators will be in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the bill is now being read for action on committee amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is correct.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have an amendment to this section and shall present it in due time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

SEC. 2. That every common carrier by railroad in the District of Columbia (hereinafter designated employer) shall pay compensation in the amounts hereinafter specified to any employee who sustains personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment and resulting in his disability, or to the dependents, as hereinafter defined, of such employee in case such injury results in his death.

SEC. 3. That except as provided herein no such employer shall be civilly liable for any personal injury to or death of any such employee resulting from any such accident.

SEC. 4. That the first 14 calendar days of disability resulting from any injury shall be excluded from the period of time for which compensation is hereinafter specified: Provided, however, That during said 14 days the employer shall furnish all medical and surgical aid and assistance that may be reasonably required, including hospital services.

SEC. 5. That after the expiration of the 14 days mentioned in the foregoing section the employer shall continue to furnish such medical and surgical aid and assistance as may be reasonably required, including hospital services, in an amount not exceeding $200, unless such employee elects to furnish his own physician or surgeon or care for himself. The compensation hereinafter provided shall be in addition to all such surgical, medical, and hospital services as set forth in this and the preceding section.

SEC. 6. That no compensation shall be allowed for the injury or death of any employee where it is proved that his injury or death was occasioned by his willful intention to bring about the injury or death of himself or of another, or that the same resulted from his intoxication while on duty.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the injured employee, immediately upon the happening of the accident, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and not later than 30 days thereafter, and likewise in case of his death by such accident the duty of one or more of the dependents of an employee, within 30 days thereafter, to give or cause to be given to the employer written notice of the accident causing such injury or death, stating in ordinary language the time, place, and particulars thereof, the name of the injured or dead employee, his class of service, and the address of the injured employee or person giving the notice: Provided, That where it is made to appear that the party herein required to give such written notice has been prevented from giving it through or by reason of mental or physical incapacity, ignorance of law or of fact, or the fraud or deceit of some other person, or from some other equally good cause, the same may be given after the expiration of said 30 days, but not later than 90 days from the date of the accident or death.

In the absence of such written notice the employer shall not be liable to pay any compensation under this act unless, in cases where the injury has resulted in the absence from work of the employee for at least 2 days, and in case of death, it is made to appear that within such period of 30 days such employer had actual knowledge of the injury or death: Provided, That in case of death resulting immediately or within 24 hours from the time of the accident notice thereof shall not be required.

No defect or inaccuracy in the written notice herein required shall be deemed material unless the employer shall show that he was prejudiced thereby, and then only to the extent of such prejudice; and such written notice may be substantially in the following form:

"FORM OF NOTICE OF ACCIDENT AND CLAIM.

"To be filled out by an injured employee or by a dependent of a deceased employee or by a person acting for either.

"To the ——— Railroad Co.:

"You are hereby notified that ——— ——— (name of deceased or injured employee), your employee, met with an accident on the ——— day of ———, 19—, at or near ———, in the State of ———, and that the accident occurred in the course of his employment by you as ——— (class of service), and resulted in his ——— (disability or death) on the ——— day of ———, 19—, and claim for compensation is hereby made under the provisions of the Federal accident compensation act of 1912.

"Name (person giving notice) ——— ———,
"Address ——— ———."

But no variation from this form shall be material if the notice is sufficient to advise the employer that a certain employee by name met with an accident in the course of his employment (stating the nature of such employment) on or about a specified time at or near a certain place which resulted in his disability or death. The notice may be served personally upon the employer, or upon any agent of the employer upon whom a summons may be served in a civil action under the laws of the State or the District of Columbia where the accident occurred, or upon any station agent, or by sending it by registered mail to the employer, addressed to the principal office or to any division superintendent of such employer.

SEC. 8. That it shall be lawful at any time after the expiration of 14 days from the date of an injury, unless an award or findings shall have previously been made, for the employer and employee to settle by agreement according to the limitations of amount and time in this act established, the compensation due under this act, which agreement shall be in writing, signed and acknowledged by the parties, and shall specify the compensation, if any, due and unpaid by the employer to the employee up to the date of the agreement, and, if agreed upon, the amount of the monthly payments thereafter to be made by the employer to the employee, and the time such monthly payments shall continue. In case of death it shall be lawful for the employer and any of the dependents of the deceased employee to settle by agreement in like manner and with the same effect the compensation payable to such dependent under this act. The periods of compensation provided for permanent total disabilities or for the permanent partial disabilities specifically mentioned in subdivision 1, clause (D) of section 21, or for death, and the provisions of this act with respect to periodic payments and the percentage which such payments shall bear to the monthly wages shall not be varied by such agreement. Such agreement may be substantially as follows:

"In the matter of the claim of ——— ——— for personal injury received by ——— ———, in the service of the ——— Railroad (or Railway) Co.

"The ——— Railroad (or Railway) Co. and ——— ———, an employee of said company, injured in its service (or in case of death, ——— ———, dependent of ——— ———, deceased, an employee injured in the service of said company), hereby agree to the following adjustment under the Federal accident-compensation act of 1912 of the liability for injuries (or death resulting from injuries) to ——— ———, received in the course of and arising out of his employment by said company (or receiver, as the case may be), in interstate (or foreign) commerce (or in the District of Columbia), at ———, on the —— day of ———, 191— (here state the facts generally as to the work in which employee was engaged when injured), the said adjustment being as follows: (Here state the terms of the adjustment, referring to the appropriate sections and subsections of the act.)

"(Signed) ——— ———,
"Of ——— Railroad (or Railway) Co.
"———,
"Employee (or dependent of employee.)"

Said agreement shall be executed in triplicate, one of which may be retained by the employer, one by the employee or his dependents, and the other shall be filed with the adjuster, as provided in section 12. Any modification or alteration of said agreement, if made by the parties, shall be in writing and executed and filed in the same manner and with like effect. If the employer shall fail for a period of 10 days, after written demand, to make any payment provided for in said agreement, the employee or dependent at his election may maintain an action in any State or Federal court of competent jurisdiction to enforce such agreement, or may treat such agreement as rescinded and proceed to enforce the claim for compensation under the provisions of this act. Save as provided in this section no agreement purporting to settle compensation due under this act shall be valid.

SEC. 9. That it shall be competent for any employer subject to the provisions of this act and his employees to organize and constitute, in such manner as they may determine, a committee or committees for the purpose of settling disputes and awarding compensation under and in accordance with the limitations as to amount and time prescribed in this act; and it shall thereupon be the duty of the employer to file a written notice with the adjuster or adjusters having jurisdiction within the territory for which said committee is constituted, giving the names and post-office addresses of the members of the committee or committees. If the compensation due under this act be not settled by the agreement of the parties, and any such committee exists, the differences between the employer and employee arising under this act shall, upon the request in writing of either party and the written consent of the other filed with the committee, be settled by such committee in accordance with the provisions of this act, and after the filing of such consent the provisions of this act with reference to instituting original proceedings before the adjuster shall not apply. Such committee shall not be bound by technical rules and shall give the parties and their witnesses ample opportunity to be heard. The award made by such committee shall be final, except as provided in section 11, and shall be filed by the committee with the adjuster having jurisdiction within 30 days after the same is made, and the provisions of section 12, so far as applicable, shall apply thereto. The adjuster shall file such award with the clerk of the court having jurisdiction in the same manner and with the same effect as findings made by the adjuster, and said award, except that it shall be final, shall be treated in all respects as such findings. If the committee shall fail to make an award within 90 days after the filing of such consent, the same shall, by the said committee, at the request of either party in writing, be immediately referred to the adjuster having jurisdiction thereof, who shall proceed to hear and determine the same as if the claim for compensation were originally before him upon petition and answer.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to a sentence beginning in line 16, on page 9, and ask some explanation. I did not catch the connection myself. It reads:

The adjuster shall file such award with the clerk of the court having jurisdiction in the same manner and with the same effect as findings made by the adjuster, and said award, except that it shall be final, shall be treated in all respects as such findings.

If it is made final, what other objection could there be made to it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The purpose of that provision is that the award when made by the arbitrators shall finally go to the district court, and automatically become a judgment or have the effect of a judgment by the district court, the same as the findings of the adjuster, so that the award of the arbitrators may be enforced by execution or be enforced by any other process that may be appropriate. That is the purpose of the provision. The purpose of it is that the award shall become in effect a final judgment in the district court, just the same as the findings, only that no appeal shall lie from it and no review of it of course shall be had, the arbitration itself being final.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not catch it yet, but I will take my time and look into it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will continue.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 10. That before any agreement or award has been made or after the making of any such agreement or award, and at any time before the expiration of two years from the date of the accident, it shall be the duty of the injured employee, if so requested by the employer, to submit himself one or more times, at reasonable times and places, for examination by a duly qualified physician or physicians furnished and paid by the employer. It shall also be the duty of such employee in like manner to submit himself to one or more such examinations whenever his original claim for compensation or the matter of the review of compensation is pending before an adjuster or the court. The employee shall have the right to have a duly qualified physician or physicians, provided and paid for by himself, present at any such examination. If the employee refuses to submit himself to any such examination, or in any way obstructs the same, his right to payments or compensation and his right to take or prosecute any proceeding under this act shall be suspended until he shall have submitted himself for such examination, and no compensation shall at any time be payable in respect to the period of such suspension. Upon request a copy of the report of the employer's physician or physicians of such examination shall be furnished to the employee, and a copy of the report of the employee's physician or physicians, if any, shall be furnished to the employer, within six days after any such examination. The employer shall have the right, in any case of death, to require an autopsy at his expense.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 8, after the word "time," to insert "within two years after the accident," and in line 21, after the word "but," to strike out "shall order no change of the status existing prior to the application for review" and insert "such order shall have no retroactive effect," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That an agreement for compensation may be modified at any time within two years after the accident by a subsequent agreement. At any time before the expiration of two years from the date of the accident, but not afterwards, and before the expiration of the period for which payment of compensation has been fixed thereby, but not afterwards, any agreement, award, findings, or judgment may be from time to time reviewed by the adjuster upon the application of either party after due notice to the other party upon the ground that the incapacity of the injured employee has subsequently ended, increased, or diminished. Upon such review the adjuster may increase, diminish, or discontinue the compensation from the date of the application for review, in accordance with the facts, or make such other order as the justice of the case may require, but such order shall have no retroactive effect. The findings of the adjuster upon such review shall be served on the parties and filed with the clerk of the court having jurisdiction, in like time and manner and subject to like disposition as in the case of original findings.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 12. That it shall be the duty of the employer to file, or cause to be filed, every agreement for compensation, or modification thereof, to which he is a party, in the office of the adjuster having jurisdiction, as hereinafter provided, within 60 days after it is made; otherwise it shall be voidable by the employee or dependent. The same shall be received and filed by said adjuster and recorded and indexed. A copy thereof, certified by the adjuster, may be admitted in evidence with like effect as the original; and it shall be the duty of the adjuster to furnish a certified copy at the request of any person in interest: Provided, That the employee or dependent who is a party to said agreement may file the same with the same effect as though filed by the employer: And provided further, That where there are two or more adjusters having concurrent territorial jurisdiction, such agreement shall be filed with the adjuster senior in date of appointment.

Section 13 was read to the end of the fifth subdivision, as follows:

SEC. 13 (1) That the United States district court in each judicial district shall, within 30 days after this act takes effect, appoint a competent person to be known as adjuster of accident compensation, and shall, from time to time, whenever the business in any such district in the judgment of the Attorney General of the United States justifies it, appoint additional adjusters. Each of such adjusters shall receive a salary of not less than $1,800 nor more than $3,000 per annum, to be paid by the United States in equal monthly installments in like manner as salaries of district judges are paid. It shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States, as soon as practicable, to make inquiry and fix and establish the salary to be paid to each adjuster within the limits aforesaid, the determination by him of the amount to be based upon the extent of the business done or to be done by said adjuster under this act. Each adjuster shall have jurisdiction of all cases arising under this act within the judicial district for which he is appointed: Provided, however, That where more than one adjuster is appointed for a judicial district, the court making the appointment may, in its discretion, determine the manner in which the authority of the respective adjusters shall be exercised under this act within the same district or limit the jurisdiction of any adjuster appointed by it to one or more counties or other territorial subdivision within the district, in which case the jurisdiction of such adjuster shall extend to such county or counties, or territorial subdivision only, except as hereinafter provided: And provided further, That every appointment of an adjuster shall be certified by the district court making it to the circuit court of appeals having jurisdiction of the district, and said circuit court of appeals may, within 30 days after the receipt of the same, for good cause, disapprove such appointment, in which case it shall become of no effect, and such district court shall make another appointment, but the acts of such adjuster in the meantime shall be valid.

(2) No person shall be appointed as adjuster who, at the time of his appointment, holds any office of profit or emolument under the laws of the United States or of any State other than the office of commissioner of deeds, justice of the peace, master in chancery, or notary public, or who is related by marriage or by consanguinity or affinity within the third degree, as determined by the common law, to any judge of the district court of the United States, or judge or justice of an appellate court, having jurisdiction of the district where in he may be appointed. The adjuster shall be a resident of the territorial district for which he is appointed. He shall hold his office for a term of four years, but may be removed at any time by the court, if his services are no longer required in the public interest or for good cause shown, subject to reinstatement by the circuit court of appeals having jurisdiction. Each adjuster before entering upon the duties of his office shall take an oath of office for the faithful and impartial performance of his duties. In case any adjuster shall be removed, or for any reason shall cease to act, he shall transfer all his official records, files, and papers to his successor in office, or, if none, then to the clerk of the district court having jurisdiction, and the court shall have power to enforce this provision by order: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall operate to render any adjuster ineligible to act in a like capacity under the law of any State.

(3) It shall be the duty of the said adjuster to keep a record of his proceedings, and he shall have the power to preserve and enforce order in his presence while transacting business; to subpœna witnesses; to administer oaths in any proceeding and in all other cases where it may be necessary in the exercise of his powers and duties; to formulate, issue, amend, and control his processes and orders consistent with law as may be necessary to carry into effect the powers and jurisdiction possessed by him; to examine persons as witnesses, take evidence, require the production of documents, and to do all other things conformable to law which may be necessary to enable him effectively to discharge the duties of his office.

(4) If any person shall, in proceedings before an adjuster, disobey or resist any lawful order or process, or misbehave during a hearing or so near the place thereof as to obstruct the same, neglect to produce after having been ordered to do so any pertinent document, or refuse to appear after having been subpœnaed, or, upon appearing, refuse to take the oath as a witness, or after having taken the oath refuse to be examined according to law, the adjuster shall certify the facts to the district court having jurisdiction, which shall thereupon in a summary manner hear the evidence as to the acts complained of, and if the evidence so warrant, punish such person in the same manner and to the same extent as for a contempt committed before the court, or commit such person upon the same conditions as if the doing of the forbidden act had occurred with reference to the process of or in the presence of the court: Provided, That no person shall be required to attend as a witness before an adjuster at a place outside of the State of his residence and more than 100 miles from such place of residence, or unless his lawful mileage and fee for one day's attendance shall be first paid or tendered to him.

(5) It shall be the duty of said adjuster to maintain and keep open during reasonable business hours an office at the place of his residence for the transaction of business under this act, at which office he shall keep his records and papers. He may, however, hear cases at any other place within the limits of his territorial jurisdiction that may be deemed by him most convenient for the parties and witnesses. He shall be allowed all necessary traveling expenses in going to and from his place of residence for the purpose of conducting such hearings, and his necessary and reasonable expense of subsistence while so absent, not exceeding for subsistence the sum of $5 per day. Accounts for all such expenses shall be approved by the district court and transmitted to the Attorney General of the United States and paid as allowed by him. Said accounts shall be rendered quarter yearly, beginning with the 1st day of October next after this law goes into effect. The Attorney General, upon requisition, shall, at the expense of the United States, furnish each adjuster with necessary records, books, blanks, and stationery supplies.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah in charge of the bill if he has not a committee amendment to offer to clause 5 on page 16?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have an amendment to that section and to several other parts of the bill, but I was waiting until the reading of the bill shall have been concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I have a series of amendments to offer.

The Secretary read as follows:

(6) No adjuster shall act in any case in which he is interested, or when he is employed by either party or related to either party by marriage or by consanguinity or affinity within the third degree, as determined by the common law. Whenever it shall be made to appear, by the application of either party, to the satisfaction of the district court having jurisdiction, that the adjuster before whom any case is pending is disqualified, or that he entertains bias or prejudice, so that a fair and impartial hearing of the case can not be had before him, it shall be the duty of the court to order the case transferred for hearing and disposition to another adjuster within the judicial district, or if none, to another adjuster within the State, or if none, then to appoint a competent person to act in the case as adjuster pro tempore. Such adjuster pro tempore shall possess all the powers conferred upon the adjuster by this act, and shall proceed in the same manner and with the same effect. His compensation shall be fixed by the court appointing him, and such compensation shall be paid by the United States on the approval of the judge and the allowance of the Attorney General. The parties may agree to transfer any case to another adjuster in the same State, and in case of such agreement or order all papers and a certified copy of any record in the case shall without cost be forthwith transmitted by the adjuster before whom the case is pending to the adjuster agreed upon or designated, who shall, upon receipt of such papers and copy of record, proceed as though the case had been originally brought before him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he objects as we go along to offering amendments as we reach them in the various sections?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think we had better first dispose of the committee amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I mean committee amendments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would have no objection to doing that, but we have passed over two or three places where amendments should have been noted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does seem to me that we would understand the bill better if the committee amendments came in in connection with the section.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to that. When the Clerk completes the reading of the subdivision I will offer them.

The Secretary read as follows:

(7) Neither an adjuster nor the partner of an adjuster shall appear as attorney for either party in any proceedings under this act.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 11, line 5, I move to strike out "The employer shall have the right, in any case of death, to require an autopsy at his expense," and in lieu thereof to insert "The United States court, upon application of the employer, may in any case of death, for good cause, order an autopsy, at the expense of the employer."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 14, line 10, after the words "master in chancery" insert "referee in bankruptcy."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That simply excludes the referee in bankruptcy in addition to the master in chancery.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is in addition to the master in chancery.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Senator if he thinks it wise to exclude the master in chancery?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I do not; this is an addition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 16, line 19, strike out the word "may" and insert "shall"; in line 19, strike out the word "any" and insert "such," and after the word "place," in the same line, insert the words "or places"; in line 20, strike out the word "that" and insert "as"; and at the end of the line strike out the words "deemed by him."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not quite finished.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In line 20, does not the Senator desire to strike out the word "that" and insert "as will," so that it will read "as will" instead of "that may."

The SECRETARY. In line 20, page 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "that may" and insert "as will."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. After the word "witnesses," in line 21, I move to insert "including the place where the accident occurred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the paragraph be read as it will read as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

He shall, however, hear cases at such place or places within the limits of his territorial jurisdiction as will be most convenient for the parties and witnesses, including the place where the accident occurred.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would suggest to the Senator from Utah for his consideration that he might add to that "and the home of the injured or killed person," or "or the place of residence of the injured or killed."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of the injured or deceased?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of the injured or deceased. That would carry the adjuster to the witnesses instead of the witnesses going to him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. After the word "occurred," I move to insert "and the residence of the injured or deceased employee."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is all I have up to that point.

The Secretary read as follows:

(8) The adjuster may, in any case upon application of either party or of his own motion, appoint a disinterested and duly qualified physician to make any necessary medical examination of the employee and testify in respect thereto. Said physician shall be allowed a reasonable fee, to be fixed by the adjuster, not exceeding for each examination $10, which shall be included by the adjuster in his account and paid as provided in paragraph 5 of section 13: Provided, however, That the adjuster shall in every case receive the testimony of any physician called by either the employer or the employee.

The next amendment of the committee was, in subdivision 9, on page 19, line 20, after the word "employer" to strike out "and all taxable costs thereafter incurred in the case by the employer shall be taxed against the employee," so as to make the subdivision read:

(9) Witness fees and mileage shall be computed at the rate allowed for witnesses in the United States district courts, and fees and mileage for serving the petition or other papers shall be computed at the rate allowed for service of summons from said court in civil suits by the United States marshal. Costs legally incurred may be taxed against either party, or apportioned between the parties, in the sound discretion of the adjuster or of the court, as the case may be, and as the justice of the case may require: Provided, however, That the employer may in any case pending before an adjuster, in writing, offer to allow findings to be made in favor of the employee, specifying the amount of the monthly payment and the length of time such monthly payments shall continue, and in that event, unless compensation (time and amount both considered) exceeding that offered by the employer be found by the adjuster or by the court, no costs thereafter incurred on behalf of the employee shall be taxed against the employer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

(10) The adjuster or adjusters for the District of Columbia shall be appointed by the Supreme Court of the District, and such adjuster or adjusters shall hold the same tenure of office as prescribed for adjusters appointed by the United States district courts, subject to removal by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for like cause, and shall have the same power and jurisdiction under this act within the limits of the District of Columbia, and shall be governed by all the provisions of this act, so far as the same may be applicable, in the same manner as adjusters appointed by the United States district courts. The findings of the adjuster or adjusters shall be transmitted to the said supreme court, and shall be disposed of by said court in the same manner and under the same rules as are prescribed herein for the disposal of such matters by the United States district courts. The said supreme court and the justices thereof shall have and exercise the same power in all cases arising under this act within the District of Columbia as are conferred by this act upon the United States district courts.

SEC. 14. (1) That in default of agreement between the parties interested or submission to a committee, as hereinbefore provided, the employer, employee, or any dependent may, after giving notice of the accident when the same is required, and within six months from the date of the injury or death, institute proceedings for the settlement and adjustment of the claim before an adjuster having jurisdiction within the territory where the accident occurred. Such proceedings may be instituted by petition, setting forth in ordinary language the facts constituting the claim and asking that compensation be fixed and awarded in accordance with the provisions of this act. Unless service is accepted by the party defendant a copy of such petition shall be served upon him and return of such service made in the manner provided by law.

(2) Within 10 days after such service the party defendant may answer the petition and in such answer shall include such questions of law and fact as it may be desired to put in issue. As soon as practicable after the answer has been received the adjuster shall proceed to hear the case and decide the same, his decision both upon questions of fact and law being reviewable in the district court as herein provided. If no answer has been filed within 10 days after the service of the petition, or such other time as may be fixed by the adjuster, the said adjuster shall enter a default and proceed to hear the evidence and determine the case with the same effect as though answer had been made. If no proceedings shall be instituted for the settlement and adjustment of a claim arising under this act within six months, as above provided, the same shall be forever barred, unless the adjuster shall find that the failure to institute proceedings within such time was chargeable to the employer or to circumstances clearly beyond the control of the employee or dependent. But under no circumstances shall any claim for compensation be maintainable after the lapse of one year from the date of injury or death, except in cases in this act otherwise provided for: Provided, That in any case where the period during which payments are to be made is not made final by agreement, award, findings, or final judgments, such claim shall be maintainable within three months from the date when the last payment was due according to the terms of such agreement, award, findings, or judgment, or, when no such time has been fixed, or where payments are discontinued by the employer as set forth in section 8, from the date of the last actual payment.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 5, after the word "final," to strike out "judgments" and insert "judgment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 13, after the word "counsel," to insert "or an agent," so as to make the subdivision read:

(3) The adjuster shall allow either party to be represented by counsel, or an agent, who need not be a member of the bar, and after hearing any evidence that may be presented and considering any arguments that may be made he shall promptly make and render his findings in writing, a copy of which shall be served on each of the parties, and shall return such findings, together with the petition and answer, if any, into the clerk's office of the United States district court for the district in which he was appointed, or the clerk's office of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as the case may be. The clerk of the court shall forthwith file the same and make an entry thereof on his docket without charge. At any time within 20 days after receiving a copy of the findings either party may file exceptions with the clerk of the court and serve a copy thereof on the adverse party, stating generally that the findings of the adjuster are excepted to on the ground that they are contrary to the law and evidence, whereupon the case shall be tried and determined in said court, all questions of law and fact being open for consideration de novo. And said court may regulate by rule the practice in such cases in all respects not provided for by statute. The party filing exceptions shall at the same time pay to the clerk of the court the sum of $5, which, together with any jury fee paid as hereinafter provided, shall be in lieu of all other clerk's fees and charges, and no other or additional charge for any service rendered by said clerk in said cause except as herein otherwise provided shall be made. Any such amount, as well as any jury fee paid, shall be taxed by the court as costs against the losing party. If no exceptions shall be filed by either party as above provided, the said findings shall become final and have the effect of and, subject to payment of fees as in other cases, be enforced as a judgment of the court, and the clerk shall, without charge, record said findings and index the same as in the case of other judgments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah why they put in the term "de novo"? Ought questions of fact to be considered de novo? The adjuster's report of the facts carries up a report, does it not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it also carries up all the evidence taken, and the evidence is recorded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The evidence would not be recorded. There is no provision for recording it. It is absolutely necessary——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can see that if the evidence is not recorded, of course, it is necessary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Under the seventh amendment of the Constitution the right of trial by jury must be preserved. The evidence must be presented to the jury de novo. We have no right to cut it off.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see, of course, if the evidence of the witnesses is not taken down and returned to the court, the other court would have to consider the facts de novo.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And, of course, it would consider the law de novo, anyway.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. The words de novo are not an amendment to the bill. They were in the original bill. They are simply italicized, I suppose, because they are Latin words.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not propose to interrupt the Senator. I thought he had concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I had concluded.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to state to the Senator from Mississippi that in my judgment this section, read in connection with a subsequent one of the bill, violates the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and I have proposed and will offer at the proper time an amendment seeking to preserve the right of trial by jury, as is provided in that amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator from Texas whether he has in that connection read the case in One hundred and seventy-fourth United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Capital Traction Co. case?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Capital Traction Co. case.

Mr. CULBERSON. My opinion is based largely upon the opinion in that case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I drew this section upon that opinion.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not think it is properly drawn, though I respect the opinion of the Senator from Utah. The fact is we do not preserve in the bill as written the right of trial by jury within the true meaning of the Constitution. We hamper it with the findings of an adjuster, which the jury or the court must regard as prima facie evidence, and we have to overturn and rebut that by a trial before a jury or even before the court alone. So, the right of trial by jury as guaranteed by the seventh amendment is not preserved in its strength and in its essence and in its fullness, but is burdened and embarrassed by the prima facie finding of an adjuster where a jury is not provided.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is not this section. That comes along later.

Mr. CULBERSON. I said that section and the following taken together.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. There may be room for discussion, as the Senator now suggests, but I think the section that is now being read is clearly warranted by One hundred and seventy-fourth United States. Whether or not we can make the findings of the adjuster prima facie evidence is another question.

Mr. CULBERSON. In the case of the Capital Traction Co. against Hof, in One hundred and seventy-fourth United States, there is no provision and nothing similar to the provision about the prima facie evidence of the findings of an adjuster, on the previous trial, but there is an express direction that the trial shall be according to the principles and usages of the law. The trial by jury in the District of Columbia, after the appeal from the justice of the peace, is not impaired by a requirement that they shall regard as prima facie evidence the findings found by a lower tribunal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 14, on page 23, line 24, after the word "jury," to insert the words "upon the claim for compensation under this act," so as to read:

(4) Where exceptions are filed, either party shall have the right, upon a written demand filed with the clerk, to a trial by jury, upon the claim for compensation under this act, as in cases at common law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued, as follows:

The party making such demand shall at the time thereof pay to the clerk the sum of $5 as a jury fee. If a trial by jury is not demanded by either party within five days after the filing and service of the exceptions a jury shall be deemed to be waived, and the court shall thereupon hear and determine the case without a jury. The findings of the adjuster filed as aforesaid shall be received as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set forth in any trial before the court or jury. Where the case is tried by a jury the court may submit special interrogatories, to be answered by the jury in the form of a special verdict.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in the language "the findings of the adjuster filed as aforesaid shall be received as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set forth in any trial before the court or jury," it strikes me if the committee were to strike out the words "or jury" they would accomplish what they want and not raise any constitutional question. In so far as the findings of the adjuster being treated by the jury as prima facie evidence is concerned, they would not be so treated, no matter what the law said; the jury is going to consider the evidence its own way. Of course, if the court was going to hear the evidence it might do very well to require that the court should receive these findings prima facie.

I merely suggest to the Senator from Utah in an interrogatory way as to whether he does not think it would be better to avoid this possible trouble when no practical result will be reached by it. The jury is going to pay no sort of attention to the fact that you tell them they have got to treat something else as prima facie; they are going to draw their own conclusions from the testimony presented to them, and telling them that something is prima facie is really going to have no effect.

It seems to me that all the two words "or jury" inserted there can do is to arouse some degree of hostility against the bill, some degree of suspicion about it and some degree of fear of it—if I may so express it—and, it may be, some doubt as to its constitutionality; because it does seem to me that, generally speaking, if the right to trial by jury is not to be infringed the court might decide that you were hampering it at any rate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, does the question raised by the Senator from Texas really touch the question of the right to trial by jury? Whether or not the law provides that certain proceedings shall be prima facie evidence of the fact, does it have any effect except to shift what is called the burden of proof? In other words, the party relying upon what proceedings were had before the adjuster may introduce those findings in evidence, and the law simply says that that makes a prima facie case. He can stop there if the other side does not challenge it. The law simply says that is sufficient. But if it is challenged, the burden is on the other side to overcome it. That is a mere provision of the law in relation to evidence. I do not see where it touches the right of trial by jury.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Suppose it does not, and it is very doubtful whether it does or does not, what practical effect does it have? It will not have the effect which the Senator anticipates, of changing the burden of proof. The jury is going to hear the testimony and come to its own conclusion by the impression which the testimony makes upon the minds of the jurors.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It simply permits the party standing upon those proceedings to put them in evidence and rest there, because the law says that is a prima facie case; and from that point the burden of overthrowing it is on those who question it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator from Mississippi that some provision to make the findings admissible may very much decrease the cost and time and labor of a trial? As a rule, it is probable that a great many of the things which are found would be things that neither party had any objection to, and it would make it unnecessary for them to produce witnesses in order to prove it.

It is quite a common thing for our statutes to fix rules of evidence so that certain facts shall be treated as evidence. It tends very much to reduce the expense and trouble of a case for both sides. I have in mind now the statute—I think it is 3083 of the Revised Statutes—which, in the law relating to importations of goods contrary to law, provides that the possession of goods shown to have been imported contrary to law shall be prima facie evidence of knowledge on the part of the possessor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from New York will pardon me, that is totally different. It is like the possession of burglar's tools would create a presumption. That is something growing up out of the case itself; it is a part of the facts of the case. That is a different thing from making somebody's findings about facts prima facie evidence.

There would be no sort of objection, I take it, upon anybody's part, to having the findings admissible as evidence in the court above. The objection, as I understand it, made by the Senator from Texas is that when it is provided that it shall be prima facie proof without contradiction it shall be conclusive. That is just about what it amounts to.

Mr. ROOT. Why not put in the word "competent" and make it competent evidence?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think you should simply say it should be admissible. Then there could be no contention, I think, that it would be hampering any trial by jury.

Mr. ROOT. Substitute the word "competent."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Mississippi will allow me, I can illustrate very easily how this rule would be very effective. Suppose the defendant presented as a defense the claim that the injured employee was drinking, and therefore the defendant was not liable. The master or the adjuster finds with the defendant, and finds that the party was drinking, and therefore he could not recover. The case goes up then and is tried before a jury. Ordinarily the burden would be on the defendant to show that the party was drinking; but this adjuster, having found that he was drinking, the burden in the trial above would be changed and it would be on the employee to show that he was not drinking. If the jury, under the evidence, did not reach a conclusion that the sworn testimony satisfied them to a reasonable certainty that the injured party was not drinking, they would follow the master and find that he was drinking.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; under this clause as it is written.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is what I say.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But if it was merely made admissible, then if there was no testimony to contradict it it would have its weight with the jury, and if there was testimony to contradict it then the jury could take its choice without any overweight on either side.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The object of my statement was to show what I thought was the soundness of the criticism of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not understand that making a document or statement prima facie evidence changes the rule that the plaintiff must prove his case by a preponderance of testimony. It is prima facie evidence until some evidence, however slight, is offered in contradiction of it. Then the question would be at issue that must be proved according to the established rules of law. That is to say, the person holding the affirmative of the issue must maintain it by a preponderance of proof. If the finding is to be introduced at all it must have some probative force. It can not be less than being made prima facie evidence. It has no business in the controversy unless it proves something that has some weight or some capacity to prove a fact. Prima facie proof is mere proof that stands until something is offered in contradiction of it.

A provision that a certain document shall amount to prima facie evidence of the fact recited in it does not disturb the other rule, applicable to all sorts of controversies judiciously considered and disposed of, that the party holding the affirmative shall establish his case by a preponderance of evidence.

The introduction of the finding of an adjuster therefore would, if uncontroverted, amount to such proof as would entitle the party in whose favor the finding is made to the judgment. But I do not understand that it would justify the court in deciding that if the jury has a doubt about it it would find in accordance with the finding of the adjuster.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas before he takes his seat a question. Does not the Senator from Arkansas think that if this language read as I shall now read it it would accomplish everything desired, to wit:

The findings of the adjuster filed as aforesaid shall be admissible as evidence in any trial before the court or jury.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. As evidence of what? As evidence of fact?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Simply admissible as evidence. Of course there is evidence of whatsoever the finding tended to prove, but not giving any weight to it by expression of law, leaving the jury to give such weight to it as they choose. Instead of the wording as it is now—

The findings of the adjuster filed as aforesaid shall be received as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set forth in any trial before the court or jury—

It would read:

The findings of the adjuster filed as aforesaid shall be admissible as evidence in any trial before the court or jury.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Evidence of something.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That I think would leave no question. It would certainly dispose of the question in the mind of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If the Senator from Mississippi desires me to answer that——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire the Senator to do so.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It will take only half a minute.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would rather have the Senator from Arkansas answer the question first.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well, I will yield. It is only a question that I desire to ask.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is on the same point?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is. I will ask the Senator from Mississippi the question when the Senator from Arkansas has concluded.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I can not exactly draw the distinction between the two forms of expression just at this time, but I am clear in the proposition that no grade of evidence can be any lower than prima facie evidence. It simply raises the presumption that a certain condition of fact exists unless something is offered in contradiction. So that saying a record shall be introduced in evidence and that the jury shall be at large to determine what it means and how much credence shall be given to it and what the evidence should have a tendency to prove is not quite up to my idea of what evidence should be.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not that change the burden?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know where there is injury by reason of a collision or a derailment they have held that that in itself is prima facie evidence and the burden is then shifted to the railroad to show a negative.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The burden is very easily shifted. Any sort of legal evidence will do it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the object of putting in this provision is, as suggested by the Senator from New York, when the adjuster makes his findings he will pass upon the various matters that are in dispute; he will find, for example, that the employee was in the employ of the railroad company; that he was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the accident; that he sustained an injury in the loss of a leg or whatever the injury may be.

Now, when the case is brought there may be but one question to present to the jury, namely, the amount of damages, or rather the length of time that the payment should continue, and it would be a wholly unnecessary burden to compel either the employer or the employee to put in proof any facts which are really not in dispute. So the object of it was to make these findings prima facie evidence. I do not care whether we call it prima facie evidence or simply competent evidence, or whatever term is applied, just so long as it may be received as evidence of the fact in the absence of any dispute in regard to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the question I was going to ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is pertinent in view of the remark of the Senator from Utah. There is a very material difference in the effect this provision would have as it is now worded and if it is changed in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi. To illustrate, if it simply provided that the findings of the adjuster are admissible in evidence, there could be admitted any evidence, and it would have no more effect possibly than merely proving that there had been a proceeding before the adjuster without any possible effect whatever as to the facts in the case. So that it makes a radical change in the provision which ought to be had in mind in considering the proposed change.

Now, as to whether it affects the constitutional right of trial by jury, the Senator from Mississippi seems to draw some distinction between this evidence because it is a finding of an adjuster, because it is the opinion rendered by some one who has heard the evidence and reported on it, and any other rule of evidence, such as the rule in the enforcement of game laws, for instance, that the possession of game is prima facie proof that the law has been violated. I think there is no distinction between the rule of evidence in the one case and in the other. One no more than the other violates the right of trial by jury or in any way encroaches upon the right of trial by jury. It is simply a rule of evidence. Rules of evidence are made by statute, they are made by the courts, and they grow up as part of the common law. There are various kinds and various degrees of such rules, and this, no more than any other rule of evidence fixing the admissibility of evidence, the competency of evidence, and the probative effect of evidence, will encroach upon the right of trial by jury.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the two cases cited by the Senator from Washington does he not think the difference really is the difference between a fact and an opinion about a fact? A fact is one thing and an opinion about a fact is another. When, for example, you make the possession of the paraphernalia of gambling prima facie evidence in the case of a man charged with keeping a gambling house, the thing which you call evidence there is a fact; it is a palpable, material, visible fact; but this is the opinion of somebody about a fact.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is very true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is constituting an opinion a fact.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But it may very well be true and a proper rule of evidence that the opinion of a regular official authorized to investigate a certain matter should have as much weight as other facts. It is a fact in itself. The fact is that this official has investigated the case and has come to this conclusion. There is no more reason why that should not be given some probative effect than there is that one of the facts to which the Senator from Mississippi referred should not.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, while this immediate matter is not regularly here, I will take advantage of the moment to say a word or so about the subject under discussion. On page 23 the bill provides—whereupon the case shall be tried and determined in said court—

That is, in the district court of the United States—

all questions of law and fact being open for consideration de novo—

I want to emphasize that requirement—all questions of law and fact shall be open for consideration de novo.

Now, going on further, to subdivision 4 of that section of the bill, on page 24 that language is modified by the declaration:

The findings of the adjuster filed as aforesaid shall be received as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set forth in any trial before the court or jury.

The two provisions are, in my judgment, not only inconsistent, Mr. President, but the last one so embarrasses and so burdens the right of trial by jury as to be in substance and in spirit a violation of the seventh amendment of the National Constitution.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator will allow me, I will conclude in just a moment. The Senator from Georgia has illustrated that there are two instances in this bill, if not more, in which this militates against the employee; that is where he is denied the right to recover either on account of intoxication or because he brought the injury upon himself willfully; so that in those two cases, if not in others—I believe in all cases—the man comes to a trial by jury in the district court of the United States on an appeal from an adjuster, not with the entire freedom which the Constitution contemplated, but he comes with the handicap and the burden that he must show to the jury that the prima facie findings of the adjuster are in fact unjust. He must rebut the prima facie findings of the adjuster, if against him.

Now, the Senator from Utah says—and I had read it substantially in the report of the commission—that this provision is drawn in the spirit of the case of Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, reported in One hundred and seventy-fourth United States. Briefly, Mr. President, I want to invite the attention of the Senate to that case. In the first place, the opinion at page 28, approving the language of Chief Justice Hosmer, of Connecticut, uses these words:

A law containing arbitrary and unreasonable provisions made with the intention of annihilating or impairing the trial by jury would be subject to the same considerations as if the object had been openly and directly pursued.

That is the language of Chief Justice Hosmer, of Connecticut, in a case in the supreme court of that State, and is quoted with approval by the Supreme Court of the United States. On page 38 of the same opinion, instead of a case then pending, where the findings of a case appealed from were made prima facie evidence against the man claiming the right of trial by jury, the language of the act of Congress providing for trial by jury, on an appeal from a justice of the peace to a court in the District of Columbia, says what? Not that the trial by jury shall be thus handicapped or in any way encumbered by prima facie findings, but that it shall be "according to law and the equity and right of the matter."

That is the character of law which the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Capital Traction Co. against Hof, in One hundred and seventy-fourth United States, says is within the meaning and spirit of the seventh amendment to the Federal Constitution; and inferentially and argumentatively it is said that wherever there is a provision which embarrasses or impairs the right of trial by jury it is within the inhibition of the Constitution, and does not afford the preservation of jury trial within the meaning of that article of the Constitution.

At the proper time, Mr. President, I propose to go somewhat more fully into this question when I present my amendment; but I have taken this opportunity to point out the difference between the case here and the case which was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States and reported in One hundred and seventy-fourth United States, and which was referred to by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest that we let this matter pass over and proceed with the reading of the bill. We can take it up at a later stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that any amendment has been offered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; no amendment has been offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment was, in section 14, page 24, line 12, after the word "counsel," to insert the words "or agent," and in line 16, before the word "fee," to strike out the word "counsel," so as to read:

(5) Wherever counsel or agent for the employee has stipulated for a fee, the agreement for such fee to be valid shall be made in writing and filed with the adjuster or clerk of the court in which the case is pending, and the employee shall not be liable to pay any fee in excess of the amount allowed by the adjuster or the court. In every case it shall be the duty of the adjuster or the court, as the case may be, regardless of any agreement, to fix the compensation, which shall not exceed a fair and reasonable sum for the services actually rendered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 9, after the words "United States," to insert "as in other cases," so as to make the clause read:

(6) Appeals and writs of error may be taken from the district courts to the circuit courts of appeals and to the Supreme Court of the United States as provided in sections 128 and 238 of the Judicial Code, and it shall be competent for the Supreme Court of the United States to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any case to be certified to it for review and determination as provided in section 251 of the Judicial Code. In cases arising in the District of Columbia appeals may be taken from the Supreme Court of the District to the Court of Appeals of the District as in other cases, and appeals and writs of error may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases and said court may require, by certiorari or otherwise, any case to be certified to it for review and determination as in other cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

(7) Any petition may be served by the United States marshal for the district where the proceedings are pending, or by any deputy. Any subpœna, process, or order of an adjuster, or any notice or paper requiring service, may be served by such United States marshal or deputy, or by any citizen of the United States over the age of 21 years, being a resident of such district, or by registered mail sent by the adjuster to the person or employer to be served, postage prepaid, and addressed to the principal place of business of such employer or to the place of residence of such person. The affidavit of such citizen, or the return registry receipt signed by the person or employer to be served, shall be prima facie proof of service.

The next amendment was, in section 15, page 26, line 3, before the word "guardian," to insert the word "natural"; and in the same line, before the word "committee," to insert "guardian or," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 15. That while any person entitled to compensation under this act shall be an infant or mentally incompetent, his natural guardian or guardian or committee, appointed pursuant to law, may on his behalf perform any duty required or exercise any right conferred by this act with the same force and effect as if such person was legally capable to act in his own behalf. No limitation respecting the time within which any right under this act is to be asserted shall, as against such infant or incompetent person, run while such infant or incompetent person has no guardian or committee: Provided, however, That the foregoing shall not apply to cases of infancy where the infant is over the age of 18 years, but such infant shall be treated for all purposes of this act as though of full age.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Utah to line 3, on page 26, of this section, at which point the Chair understands the Senator from Utah purposes to move the insertion of a comma.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; I move, on page 26, line 3, after the word "guardian," where it first occurs, to insert a comma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There should also be a comma, should there not, after the word "guardian," where it occurs in the same line the second time? I move that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 16. That the assignment of any cause of action arising under this act, or of any payments due or to become due under the provisions hereof, shall be void. Every liability and all payments due or to become due under this act shall be exempt from levy or sale for private debt. In case of insolvency every liability for compensation under this act shall constitute a first lien upon all the property of the employer liable therefor paramount to all other claims or liens except for wages and taxes, and such lien shall be enforced by order of the court.

The next amendment was, in section 17, page 27, line 8, before the word "award," to insert "or"; and in the same line, after the word "award," to strike out "or findings," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 17. That nothing in this act shall interfere with any proceeding by the United States to enforce any act of Congress regulating the appliances or conduct of any common carrier, or affect the liability of any such common carrier to a fine or penalty under any such act. Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect the power and jurisdiction of the courts, under the established principles of equity, to reform or cancel any agreement or award.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, page 28, line 22, after the word "compensation," to strike out "payable" and insert "already paid"; and in line 24, after the word "liability," to insert "and shall to the extent thereof be relieved from future payments," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 18. That where an injury or death for which compensation is payable under this act was caused under circumstances also creating a legal liability for damages on the part of any carrier subject to the provisions of this act other than the employer, the employer shall be subrogated to the right of the employee or dependents to recover against such other carrier, and such employer may bring legal proceedings against such carrier to recover the damages sustained by the injured employee or dependents in an amount not exceeding the aggregate amount of compensation payable to the injured employee or dependents under this act. That where the injury or death for which compensation is payable under this act was caused under circumstances also creating a legal liability for damages on the part of any person other than the employer, such person not being subject to the provisions of this act, legal proceedings may be taken against such other person to recover damages, notwithstanding the payment of or liability to pay compensation under this act; but in such case, if the action against such other person is brought by the injured employee, or, in case of his death, by his dependents, and judgment is obtained and paid, or settlement is made with such other person, either with or without suit, the employer shall be entitled to deduct from the compensation payable by him the amount actually received by such employee or dependents: Provided, That if the injured employee, or, in case of his death, his dependents, shall agree to receive compensation from the employer, or institute proceedings to recover the same, or accept from the employer any payment on account of such compensation, such employer shall be subrogated to all the rights of such employee or dependents and may maintain, or, in case an action has already been instituted, may continue an action either in the name of the employee or dependents, or in his own name, against such other person for the recovery of damages, but such employer shall nevertheless pay over to the injured employee or dependents all sums collected from such other person by judgment or otherwise in excess of the amount of such compensation already paid under this act, and costs, attorneys' fees, and reasonable expenses incurred by such employer in making such collection or enforcing such liability and shall to the extent thereof be relieved from future payments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 19. That no contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever shall operate to relieve the employer in whole or in part from any liability created by this act.

The next amendment was, in section 20, page 29, line 5, after the word "employee," to insert "unless the monthly wage is ascertained by the contract of employment"; in line 9, after the word "accident," to insert "or, if payment be by the hour, by the piece, or by the job, shall be 26 times the average of one day's earnings in such business and class of service ascertained by taking the aggregate of the earnings for the month next preceding the accident and dividing this aggregate by the number of days on which the employee worked in the month"; in line 16, after the word "based," to strike out "thereon" and insert "on the monthly wages ascertained by the contract of employment or on the amount thereof determined as aforesaid, as the case may be"; and in line 25, after the word "wages," to insert "Provided, That where the employee is engaged in a class of service in which employees habitually and with the sanction of the employer receive for their own use gratuities from the traveling public, the monthly wages of such employee shall not be considered to be less than $50 a month"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 20. That for all the purposes of this act the monthly wages of an employee, unless the monthly wage is ascertained by the contract of employment, shall be 26 times the established day's pay prevailing in the business of his employer for the class of service for which such employee was receiving pay at the time of the accident or, if payment be by the hour, by the piece, or by the job, shall be 26 times the average of one day's earnings in such business and class of service ascertained by taking the aggregate of the earnings for the month next preceding the accident and dividing this aggregate by the number of days on which the employee worked in the month. Calculations of the percentage of wages herein mentioned shall be based on the monthly wages ascertained by the contract of employment or on the amount thereof determined as aforesaid, as the case may be. For the purpose of such calculation, no employee's wages shall be considered to be more than $100 a month or less than $50 per month; except that where in any case the monthly wages of the employee are less than $25 per month, payment for the first 24 months of disability shall not exceed the full amount of such monthly wages: Provided, That where the employee is engaged in a class of service in which employees habitually and with the sanction of the employer receive for their own use gratuities from the traveling public, the monthly wages of such employee shall not be considered to be less than $50 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

SEC. 21. That compensation under this act shall be made in accordance with the following schedule:

(A) Where death results from any injury, except in the cases provided for in section 23, and except in those cases in which, in certain contingencies, a reduced period is hereinafter provided for, the following amounts shall be paid for a period of eight years from the date of the death.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 30, after line 15, I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is that a committee amendment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 15, on page 30, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That this limitation shall not apply to any child under the age of 16 years, but payments shall continue to such child until it shall have attained the age of 16 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to hear the amendment again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah whether this bill contemplates that in the event of the accidental killing of a railroad employee who leaves no widow and only one child, being, say, 15½ years old, the only compensation she can recover is a maximum of $25 a month for six months.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill contemplates that the compensation shall cease when the child reaches 16. The provision in all these compensation bills with which I am familiar fixes the same age. Many of the European bills fix it at 15. I know of none that fixes it at more than 16.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that in that case a girl 15½ years old, becoming an orphan as the result of the death of her father in an accident, would receive $150 in full settlement?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If she is dependent——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What does the word "dependency" mean?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Unable to earn her living——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Where is that definition?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. By reason of mental or physical incapacity.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator think it is within the bounds of reason to deprive that girl, 15½ years old, of the right that she now has to a substantial recovery from the railroad company on account of the death of her father and offer her only $150?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You can not draw a bill of general and universal application that will not admit of some hardships somewhere or other. The purpose of the bill is to take care of these dependents, and we provide by this amendment now that the payments shall continue for the full period up to 16 years. That will add to the amount, as near as I can figure it, about a million dollars; an increase of the aggregate amount in our estimate $15,000,000 to $16,000,000. We have in that respect followed, as I say, the general provisions of laws upon this subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it would be a very easy matter so to amend the bill that an orphan girl should not be put off with $150 in the event of the loss of her father.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, of course, appeals to me. It does look like an unreasonable hardship——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is worse than that. It is monstrous.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is not monstrous.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is shocking to the country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That would be to charge the legislatures of the various countries of the world with doing a monstrous thing. I do not believe that should be said.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It strikes me as almost inconceivable that there is no other provision for these helpless children than that in this bill. I think if the Senator wants support for the bill he must find some way so as to provide for the children.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator had been patient I would have stated that I have an amendment prepared to the provision on page 42 in reference to that subject which I will offer when we reach it. I do not know whether it will satisfy the Senator, but I will make the suggestion.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the proposed amendment be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 15, after the word "death," insert:

Provided, however, That this limitation shall not apply to any child under the age of 16 years.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is enough. I move to strike out "sixteen" wherever it occurs and insert "eighteen."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas to strike out "sixteen" and insert "eighteen."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator certainly does not want to move it there, because that would necessitate a number of changes in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rise to a point of order. Are amendments in order now?

Mr. CULBERSON. This is an amendment to the amendment offered by the committee, and it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order when offered to the committee amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We have provided all the way through the bill for this age of 16.

Mr. CULBERSON. And the purpose of some Senators is to correct the bill in this respect throughout.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator did not hear me out. It provides for 16 years all the way through the bill, and if the Senator's amendment is adopted it will necessitate changing those provisions all the way.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is precisely what I desire to bring about.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me finish. The Senator does not intend to do that at all, if he will let me finish. On page 42 we have a provision which covers the subject of "dependent children over the age of 16," and I intended when we reached that section to broaden the definition so as to include a female child under the age of 18 years. I do not know whether that would meet the views of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. That does not meet my idea, and I insist on the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. CULBERSON and others demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the rereading of the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 15, after the word "death," insert:

Provided, however, That this limitation shall not apply to any child under the age of 16 years, but payments shall continue to such child until it shall have attained the age of 16 years.

It is proposed to strike out the word "sixteen" and insert "eighteen."

Mr. CULBERSON. Of course that means wherever it occurs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I am opposed to the amendment to the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON (when Mr. DU PONT's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DU PONT] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. RICHARDSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. He is not here, and I withhold my vote. If present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I do not think he has voted. I transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I ask if the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. WARREN. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CHILTON. I have information that the Senator with whom I am paired, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], would vote "nay," and so I desire to vote. I vote "nay."

I desire while I am up to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. WATSON] with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 34, as follows:

So Mr. CULBERSON's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think this is the proper place to offer the amendment, as it would hardly come in here as an amendment to the amendment. I voted for the amendment just offered rather against my judgment because I thought later on, on page 42, would be the proper place and another amendment would be better. When we get to that point I am going to move to amend the language defining what is a dependent child over 16 years, by adding that this shall not apply to certain persons. I am going to move to add "or to any female under the age of 21 years if not married." I think when a boy is 16 years of age, instead of being dependent upon his mother or any pension or annuity to his mother, he ought to be helping her.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I had already stated to the Senate, before we voted upon the last amendment, that when we reached page 42 I had an amendment upon the same subject that I desired to offer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. About female children?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. With reference to female children.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I had already so stated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They ought to be taken care of until they are 21 or married.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My amendment provides for 18. At any rate, that will come up when we reach page 42.

Mr. DAVIS. It may be a little out of order to do so, but I am going to take a try at it. I move that the Senate now take a recess until 11.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate now take a recess until 11.30 o'clock to-morrow morning. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to take a recess was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 18 on page 31, as follows:

(1) If the deceased employee leave a widow and no child under the age of 16, and no dependent child over the age of 16, there shall be paid to the widow 40 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased.

(2) If the deceased employee leave a widow and any child under the age of 16, or any dependent child over the age of 16, there shall be paid to the widow for the benefit of herself and such child or children 50 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased.

(3) If the deceased employee leave any child under the age of 16, or dependent child over the age of 16, but no widow, there shall be paid, if one such child, 25 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased to such child, and if more than one such child 10 per cent additional for each of such children, not to exceed a total of 50 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased divided among such children, share and share alike: Provided, That if the number of children entitled to payment be subsequently reduced to less than four, the amount of the payments shall be correspondingly diminished.

(4) In the event of the death or remarriage of a widow receiving payments under subdivision (2) of this clause, the amounts stated in subdivision (3) shall thereafter be paid to the child or children of the deceased employee therein specified for the unexpired part of the period of eight years from the date of the employee's death, subject to the provisions of subdivision (9) of this clause (A).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 31, line 17, after the word "death," I move to insert "but to continue in any event until the youngest child shall have attained the age of 16 years," so as to read:

(4) In the event of the death or remarriage of a widow receiving payments under subdivision (2) of this clause, the amounts stated in subdivision (3) shall thereafter be paid to the child or children of the deceased employee therein specified for the unexpired part of the period of eight years from the date of the employee's death, but to continue in any event until the youngest child shall have attained the age of 16 years, subject to the provisions of subdivision (9) of this clause (A).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 23, after the word "both," to strike out "parents," so as to make the paragraph read:

(5) If the deceased employee leave no widow or children entitled to any payment hereunder, but leave a parent or parents, there shall be paid, in case of partial dependency, 15 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased to such parent or parents, and if either is or both are wholly dependent on the deceased there shall be paid in lieu of the 15 per cent, if only one parent, 25 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased, or if both parents, 40 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased, to such parent or parents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued, as follows:

(6) If the deceased leave no widow or child or parent entitled to any payment hereunder, but leave any brother, sister, grandparent, or grandchild wholly dependent upon him for support, there shall be paid to such dependent relative, if but one, 20 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased, or if more than one, 30 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased, divided among them share and share alike. If none of such relatives is wholly dependent and the deceased leave any such relative or relatives partially dependent upon him for support, there shall be paid to such dependent relative or relatives 10 per cent of the monthly wages of the deceased, divided among them share and share alike.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 20, to strike out "Canada" and insert "contiguous countries," so as to make the paragraph read:

(7) The foregoing subdivisions of this clause (A) shall apply only to dependents who at the time of the death of the deceased employee are actual residents of the United States or contiguous countries, except (a) if the nonresident dependent be a widow and there be no resident child or children entitled to compensation under this act, there shall be paid to her a lump sum equal to one year's wages of the deceased employee, as hereinbefore defined and limited, for the benefit of herself and nonresident children, if any; (b) if the nonresident dependent be a child or children under the age of 16 years and there be no widow, resident or nonresident, and no resident children entitled to compensation under this act, there shall be paid to such nonresident child or children a like lump sum, to be divided among them share and share alike; it being the intention of the foregoing to exclude from the benefits of this act any such nonresident widow, child, or children, if there be any resident child or children entitled to compensation under this act, and to exclude from the benefits of this act all other resident dependents, if there be any nonresident widow, child, or children entitled to take under the provisions of this subdivision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued, as follows:

(8) If the monthly payments for a death hereunder are at the rate of not more than $15 per month, there shall be paid by the employer a contribution of $75 toward the burial expenses: Provided, however, That where no compensation for death of an employee caused as defined by sections 1 and 2 of this act is payable hereunder there shall be furnished by the employer a reasonable burial expense not exceeding $150.

(9) If compensation is being paid under this act to any dependent, such compensation, unless otherwise provided for herein, shall cease upon the death or marriage of such dependent, and in case the dependent be a child, shall cease upon such child reaching the age of 16, unless dependent, and then when such child shall cease to be dependent.

(B) Where permanent total disability results from any injury, there shall be paid to the injured employee 50 per cent of the monthly wages of such employee during the remainder of his life. In the following cases it shall, for the purposes of this section, be conclusively presumed that the injury resulted in permanent total disability, to wit: The total and irrevocable loss of sight in both eyes, the loss of both feet at or above the ankle, the loss of both hands at or above the wrist, the loss of one hand and one foot, an injury to the spine resulting in permanent and complete paralysis of the legs or arms, and an injury to the skull resulting in incurable imbecility or insanity.

(C) Where temporary total disability results from any injury there shall be paid 50 per cent of the monthly wages of the injured employee during the continuance of such temporary total disability.

(D) Where permanent partial disability results from any injury—

(1) An amount equal to 50 per cent of his wages shall be paid to the injured employee for the periods stated against such injuries, respectively, as follows: In case of—

The loss by separation of one arm at or above the elbow joint, or the permanent and complete loss of the use of one arm, 72 months.

The loss by separation of one hand at or above the wrist joint, or the permanent and complete loss of the use of one hand, 57 months.

The loss by separation of one leg at or above the knee joint, or the permanent and complete loss of the use of one leg, 66 months.

The loss by separation of one foot at or above the ankle joint, or the permanent and complete loss of the use of one foot, 48 months.

The permanent and complete loss of hearing in both ears, 72 months.

The permanent and complete loss of hearing in one ear, 36 months.

The permanent and complete loss of the sight of one eye, 30 months.

The loss by separation of a thumb, 13 months; a first finger, 9 months; a second finger, 7 months; a third finger, 6 months; a fourth finger, 5 months.

The loss of one phalanx of a thumb or two phalanges of a finger shall be considered equal to the loss of one-half of a thumb or of a finger, and compensation for one-half of the above periods shall be payable.

The loss of more than one phalanx of a thumb and more than two phalanges of a finger shall be considered as the loss of an entire thumb or finger.

The loss by separation of a great toe, ninth months; any other toe, four months.

(2) In all other cases of injury resulting in permanent partial disability the compensation shall bear such relation to the periods stated in subdivision 1 of the clause (D) as the disabilities bear to those produced by the injuries named therein, and payments shall be made for proportionate periods not in any case exceeding 72 months.

The next amendment was, in section 21, page 36, line 18, to insert "suitable" before the word "work," so as to make the paragraph read:

(E) Where temporary partial disability results from an injury, the employee, if he is unable to secure work, shall receive 50 per cent of his wages during the continuance of such disability; but such payment shall not extend beyond the period fixed for payment for permanent partial disabilities of the same character; and if the employee refuses to work after suitable work is furnished or secured for him by the employer, he shall not be entitled to any compensation for such disability during the continuance of such refusal. If the employee is at work at reduced wages, he shall receive compensation according to the method provided in section 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendments were, in section 22, page 37, line 25, to insert "the employer may continue such injured employee in his service at suitable work, and if the employee accept such work and continue in his employer's service"; in section 22, page 37, line 4, to strike out the words "not accrue" and insert "be suspended"; in line 5, before the word "for," to insert "such"; in line 7, before the word "as," to strike out "injury" and insert "accident"; in line 8, after the word "wages," to insert "received"; and in line 15, before the word "work," to insert "such," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 22. That, notwithstanding any agreement, award, finding, or judgment as hereinbefore provided for the employer may continue such injured employee in his service at suitable work and if the employee accept such work and continue in his employer's service, compensation in any case of injury shall be suspended while the injured employee is at such work for which he receives wages which do not fall below 90 per cent of the wages he was receiving at the time of the accident, as limited by the provisions of section 20 hereof. If his wages received fall below such 90 per cent, an amount of compensation shall be payable equal to the difference between said 90 per cent and such wages, not to exceed, however, 50 per cent of the monthly wages he was receiving at the time of the accident determined according to the provisions of section 20.

The time during which the employee is at such work shall effect a reduction to that extent in the aggregate period for which payments would otherwise be made.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In section 22, page 37, line 7, I submit a committee amendment. I move to strike out the words "as limited by the provisions of section 20 hereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In line 13, I move to strike out the words "determined according to the provisions of section 20."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 23, page 38, line 6, after the word "subdivision" to strike out the word "(seven)" and insert "(7)," so as to read:

SEC. 23. That should an employee who sustains an injury resulting in permanent total or permanent partial disability die from any cause at any time, or should an employee who sustains an injury resulting in temporary total or temporary partial disability die as a result of such injury after 14 days of disability, the employer shall be liable for an amount to be ascertained as follows:

First. By computing the amount which would have been payable under clause (A) of section 21, if death had immediately resulted from the accident and the dependents existing at the time of the accident entitled to compensation had remained so entitled for a period of eight years, except in cases covered by subdivision (7), in which the amount shall be taken as one year's wages of the deceased employee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In section 23, page 38, after the word "accident," in line 3, I move to insert a period and to strike out the remainder of that paragraph down to and including the word "employee," in line 8, in the following words:

And the dependents existing at the time of the accident entitled to compensation had remained so entitled for a period of eight years, except in cases covered by subdivision (7), in which the amount shall be taken as one year's wages of the deceased employee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senate has now been in session about seven hours, and during that time we have made very rapid progress in the perfection of the bill, according to the views of those who are directly in charge of it. I think we ought to take cognizance of common sense and not protract the session to an extent that will still further exhaust the capacity of the Senate to do intelligent and expeditious work. I think we ought to discuss the proposition of taking a recess until some hour which will be satisfactory. I do not believe anyone desires to unusually protract the consideration of the bill or by unreasonable objections to arrest the progress of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator not permit, before making the suggestion, that the reading of the bill may be finished? It will take only a few minutes.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have no objection except that I thought the time had arrived when we ought to attempt to find out the differences between us as to how long the Senate is to remain in session. I will renew the request after the bill has been read.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; it will take only a few minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether it will be agreeable at the conclusion of perfecting the bill by the committee amendments to take a recess?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I shall move that the Senate take a recess when the reading of the bill has been finished?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Until 12 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We shall have to meet a little earlier than 12 o'clock.

Mr. OVERMAN. Eleven fifty.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest 11.30.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The reading of the bill can be finished in a very few minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would very much prefer to take a recess until 11.30 and then have half an hour at lunch, but I presume the proposition would not be agreeable to those in charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed as follows:

Second. By deducting from such amount a sum equal to the payments for the period between the accident and the death, which, if the accident had immediately resulted in death, the employer, by reason of the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in clause (A) of section 21, would have been relieved from making.

Third. By deducting from the remainder so ascertained the amount of the compensation paid up to the time of death under clause (B), (C), (D), or (E) of section 21 or under section 22.

The amount so ascertained shall be paid to the dependents, if any, of such employee, living at the time of his death, in the same amounts and subject to the same contingencies as if compensation had been payable to them under clause (A) of section 21 by reason of their having been dependent at the time of the accident: Provided, That should an employee who sustains an injury resulting in permanent partial disability die from cause other than the injury at any time, the liability of the employer shall not exceed the unpaid balance of the amount which, if the injured employee had lived, would have been paid under the terms of any agreement, award, findings, or judgment, or under clause (D), section 21, or under section 22.

SEC. 24. That if, in an accident, an employee receive an injury resulting in permanent partial disability and in the same accident receive additional injury, which, by itself, entitles him to compensation, or if he be injured in the service of the same employer while entitled to or receiving payments for a previous injury, the amount of the monthly payment to him for such combined injuries shall be computed as for a single injury as provided for and limited by section 20 hereof, but in such case the periods of time prescribed for such combined injuries, severally, shall be added together: Provided, That where any of such periods is less than three months, the same shall not be added, but shall be disregarded.

If an employee receive an injury, which, of itself, would only cause permanent partial disability, but which, combined with a previous injury, does in fact cause permanent total disability, the employer shall only be liable as for the permanent partial disability, so far as the subsequent injury is concerned.

SEC. 25. That in case any employee for whose injury or death compensation is payable under this act shall, at the time of the injury, be employed and paid jointly by two or more employers subject to this act, such employers shall contribute the payment of such compensation in the proportion of their several wage liability to such employee. If one or more but not all of such employers should be subject to this act, then the liability of such of them as are so subject shall be to pay that proportion of the entire compensation which their proportionate wage liability bears to the entire wages of the employee: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall prevent any arrangement between such employers for a different distribution, as between themselves, of the ultimate burden of such compensation.

SEC. 26. That where payment of compensation is made to the widow for the use of herself, or for the use of herself and child or children, her written receipt therefor shall acquit the employer. Where payment is made to any child 18 years of age or over, the written receipt therefor of such child shall acquit the employer. Where payment is due to a child under the age of 18 years, the same shall be made to a duly appointed and qualified guardian of such child under the laws of the State of such child's residence, and the written receipt therefor of such guardian shall acquit the employer.

SEC. 27. That the term "dependent" shall include all persons who are entitled to compensation under the provisions of clause (A), section 21, and of section 23, and wherever the context requires it, shall be held to include the personal representatives of the deceased and guardians of infants or incompetent persons.

The term "injury," wherever the context requires it, shall be held to include death resulting from injury.

The term "employee" includes an apprentice, but does not include an employee whose employment is purely casual, and not for the purposes of the employer's business. It shall include the singular and plural and both sexes. Any reference to an employee who has been injured shall, where the employee is dead, and the context requires it, include a reference to his dependents or personal representatives

The term "physician or physicians" includes surgeon or surgeons.

The term "child or children" shall include posthumous children and all other children entitled by the law of the State where the accident happens to inherit as children of the deceased employee.

"Disability" under this act shall mean want of capacity or ability by reason of injury to make full wages and full time in the position where working at the time of receiving the injury.

The term "dependent child over the age of 16," wherever it occurs in this act, or any reference to such child, shall be construed to mean a dependent child over the age of 16 years unable to earn a living by reason of mental or physical incapacity.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 42, line 5, after the word "incapacity," I move to insert "or a female child under the age of 20 years, unless sooner married."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether, in view of that amendment, we should not insert the word "male" before the words "dependent child"?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I think not, because that is a definition of what is a dependent child over the age of 16. I do not think it would hurt to put in the word "male," but I do not think it is at all necessary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to understand just what the amendment is and how the paragraph would read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read as it would stand if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

The term "dependent child over the age of 16," wherever it occurs in this act, or any reference to such child, shall be construed to mean a dependent child over the age of 16 years unable to earn a living by reason of mental or physical incapacity, or a female child under the age of 20 years, unless sooner married.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued as follows:

Whenever an employee of a common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad shall sustain personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment resulting in his disability or death, it shall be presumed prima facie that such employee was at the time of the accident engaged in such commerce.

SEC. 28. That without otherwise affecting the meaning or interpretation thereof the phrase "personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment"—

(a) Shall not cover an employee except while he is engaged in, on, or about the premises where his services are being performed, which are occupied by or under the control of the employer, or while he is engaged elsewhere in or about his employer's business where his service requires his presence as a part of such service at the time of the injury and subjects him to dangers incident to that employment.

(b) It shall not include an injury caused by the willful act of another directed against him for reasons personal to such employee and not against him as an employee or because of his employment.

(c) It shall not include a disease or infection except as it shall result from the injury.

The next amendment was, in section 29, page 43, line 23, before the words "per cent," to strike out "five" and insert "four," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 29. That where in any case payments have continued for not less than six months either party may, upon due notice to the other party, apply to the court having jurisdiction of the territory within which the accident occurred for an order commuting the future payments to a lump sum. The application shall be considered by the court sitting without a jury, and may be granted where it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that the payment of a lump sum in lieu of future monthly payments will be for the best interest of the person or persons receiving or dependent upon such compensation, or that the continuance of monthly payments will, as compared with lump-sum payments, entail undue expense or undue hardship upon the employer liable therefor, or that the person entitled to compensation has removed or is about to remove from the United States. Where the commutation is ordered the court shall fix the lump sum to be paid at an amount which will equal the total sum of the probable future payments, capitalized at their present value upon the basis of interest calculated at 4 per cent per annum with annual rests. Upon paying such amount the employer shall be discharged from all further liability on account of the injury or death, and be entitled to a duly executed release, upon filing which, or other due proof of payment, the liability of such employer under any agreement, award, findings, or judgment shall be discharged of record.

The reading of the bill was continued, as follows:

SEC. 30. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as doing away with or affecting any common-law or statutory right of action or remedy for personal injury or death happening before this act shall take effect.

The next amendment was to strike out section 31, page 44, lines 9 to 14, inclusive, which reads as follows:

SEC. 31. That it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that the burden of compensation under this act for personal injuries shall be considered as an element of the cost of transportation, and the Interstate Commerce Commission in any proceeding before it affecting rates is directed to recognize and give effect to this policy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded, as follows:

SEC. (32) 31. That it shall be the duty of every employer subject to this act to make reports of accidents, payments, and operations under this act to the Interstate Commerce Commission in such detail and at such times as the said commission may by general regulation require. Such reports shall be compiled and the general results thereof published as soon after they are received as practicable.

SEC. (33) 32. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1912, and may be cited as the Federal accident compensation act of 1912.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a letter and telegram which I desire to have put in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and telegram were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KANSAS CITY, MO., May 3, 1912.

Hon. JAMES A. REED,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Railroad men here heartily approve your position on compensation bill. Mr. Wills, of Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, does not represent sentiments of railroad men in this section.

L. GOLDANELS, Secretary No. 537,
Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., April 30, 1912.

Hon. JAMES REED,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A copy of Senate bill 5382, known as the Federal compensation bill has been taken up and considered by the members of the P. Lavelle Lodge, No. 92, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, St. Joseph, Mo., and the action taken thereon was against the passage of the bill.

We do not think it is the kind of compensation bill that is desired, and we furthermore do not think it is just to the cause of railroad employees.

Hoping that you will do all in your power to defeat the passage of this bill, and thanking you for the copy of bill and the explanation of same, we are,

Yours, very truly,

THOS. FANINGTON.
CHAS. S. SIMINEO.
A. C. VOORHIES.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 11.50 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BACON. There is no "to-morrow" in the legislative day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will give me some parliamentary word that will fit, I will accept his suggestion.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will have to say "Saturday."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the Senate take a recess until the calendar day Saturday next, at 11.50 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m., Friday, May 3) the Senate took a recess until Saturday, May 4, at 11 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 3, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., delivered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we bless Thee for the eternal principles revealed in the marvelous Sermon on the Mount, which inspires to holy living, comforts the sorrowing, soothes the dying, and makes clear the immortality of the soul. Help us to live those principles and prove ourselves worthy sons of the living God, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to a speech inserted in the RECORD, on page 5999, by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] on the Post Office appropriation bill, where the previous question had been ordered and debate was out of order. The RECORD shows, on page 5999 once and on page 6000 three times, practically the following: "I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a certain paper." And then follows: "The Clerk read as follows."

Of course no such transaction took place in the House. I do not think in inserting speeches in the RECORD out of place any Member ought to purport to state a transaction as taking place in the House which does not take place in the House. In the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], I shall not make any motion and do not know that I would do it if he were here. But if such things are to occur in speeches inserted in the RECORD, making misstatements as to what actually took place in the House, purporting to state that the gentleman asks the Clerk to read and the Clerk does not read——

Mr. KENDALL. Following that by a comment on what is purported to have been read——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] what suggestion he has to make about it, if any? It seems to the Chair——

Mr. MANN. The suggestion I make is that if it occurs hereafter probably I shall move to strike the statement from the RECORD, because it is not fair to the House, especially where the previous question is ordered and debate is not in order, to make it appear that a gentleman not only debates, but that the Clerk reads.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is proper. The only question is where to order the speech printed. The gentleman from New York had the right to print a speech. It seems to the Chair that it ought to be taken out of the place in which it is inserted now, undoubtedly.

Mr. FINLEY. I suggest this. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is not here, and it may be, through inadvertence or otherwise, that this speech or proposed speech was inserted in the wrong place in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. In any event it is not proper in the insertion of a speech by leave to purport and put in what the Clerk does. The Clerk does nothing.

Mr. FINLEY. I agree with the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. MANN. It is an erroneous statement. I do not make any motion at present, but this is not the first time it has happened and I think it is time to call attention to it.

Mr. FINLEY. I will state it is the first time I have known it to happen.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who keeps account of these detailed matters, how many days under the practice are allowed for the correction of the permanent RECORD now?

Mr. MANN. Until it is made up; usually about 10 days, I think.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] to the fact that these remarks, to be pertinent at all, would have to appear where they appear now in the RECORD, because they relate to an editorial which was not printed until the 1st day of May.

The SPEAKER. Let the matter hold over until the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] comes back, and the Chair will then take the trouble to notify him.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the next legislative day, immediately following the disposition of the bill now under consideration, be allotted to the Committee on Claims for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that the next legislative day succeeding the disposition of this appropriation bill by the House shall be set apart for the Committee on Claims—of course with the proviso that the next legislative day after this bill is disposed of would not be Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. I was going to suggest that, and I was going to suggest further unanimous-consent day.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, that committee is entitled to a day by right and by rule.

Mr. MANN. If it gets it; yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understood yesterday, Mr. Speaker, that the Panama Canal bill would come up after this bill was finished, and that upon that arrangement I would not be prejudiced by substituting a subsequent day for this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that the first legislative day, provided it is not Wednesday——

Mr. MANN. Or unanimous-consent day. Does the gentleman include in his request an exception of unanimous-consent day?

Mr. POU. Yes; I except that.

The SPEAKER (continuing). And except the day for unanimous consent and suspension of the rules, shall be set apart for the consideration of bills from his committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Except Monday and Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. Except Monday and Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. Bills on the Private Calendar. I take it, claims should not have preference over war claims.

Mr. POU. There would not be any controversy about that.

Mr. MANN. There would be a controversy, because when claims are in order war claims are also in order.

Mr. POU. My proposal was to set apart a day for the consideration of bills from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman had the right to-day, he would not have that preference.

Mr. NORRIS. Why does not the gentleman make a request that bills in order to-day will be in order on the day that is set apart? That would simply substitute this day for a day following the finishing of the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. POU. I made the proposition so that the bills now on the calendar could be considered. There are many gentlemen, a large number, interested in them.

Mr. MANN. There are a large number of bills on the Private Calendar reported from committees other than the Committees on Claims and War Claims, which, under the practice, come up in regular order, either on claims day or war-claims day. If the gentleman wants to substitute another legislative day for to-day, I have no objection, but I think it ought to be on the same terms as though the calendar were called to-day.

Mr. POU. I am willing to accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that on the first legislative day succeeding the disposition of this appropriation bill, provided the day is not the first or third Monday, or Wednesday, shall be set apart for such business as would be in order to-day——

Mr. MANN. On the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. On the Private Calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend some remarks which I made on the day before yesterday on House bill 17556.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on House bill 17556. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24023, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement before the committee rose last evening it was agreed that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] should be recognized for 30 minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not address the House at this time upon the subject which I had intended to, and I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon a matter entirely different from the one I had intended to address the House upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. MANN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

clerk to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, $2,220, messenger, $1,440; in all, $318,640.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman having this bill in charge if he can give the committee any information as to how much work the Senate Committee on Revolutionary Claims has to do. I see this bill carries $2,220 for a clerk and $1,440 for a messenger to that committee. I also wish to inquire as to the Committee on the University of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from South Carolina answers the gentleman from Tennessee, I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is his intention to make a motion to add an assistant clerk or messenger in these cases?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the reason I asked for the information. I supposed the present clerk was overworked, and that we might give him an assistant or two.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, these items have been carried in the legislative bill ever since I have been here, as well as ever since the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Nebraska have been here, and this is the first time they have ever found the items in the bill, it seems.

Mr. AUSTIN. Inasmuch as the policy of this bill is to cut, economize, and reduce in the various executive departments of the Government, why not begin at the other end of the Capitol Building and make a fight for economy all along the line?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there is a well-established rule that one House never interferes with the appropriations that are made for the convenience and accommodation of the other House.

Whatever may be the opinion of the members of the Committee on Appropriations as to the expenditures of the Senate, we did not feel authorized to call the Senators before us and inquire into the propriety of those expenditures. We have written into the paragraph which was just read the law for this fiscal year, taking into account the shorter session, so far as the session employees are concerned.

I may say that there was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations a proposition to increase by more than 30 persons the clerks and messengers who are already provided for. During the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, while the House was dispensing with 100 employees, or thereabouts, the Senate by special resolutions created 30 new places, and other resolutions of a like character have passed at this session. Your committee did not include in this bill these people who are now on the pay roll of the Senate under special resolutions and who are being paid out of the contingent fund.

I want to say that in 1902 the paragraph which we have just read carried $161,000. As it is made up by the Committee on Appropriations it carries $318,000. As the committee was requested by the Senate to make it up it would have carried $358,000, or an increase from $161,000 in 1902 to $358,000 for the year 1913. But the committee, under the long-established and well-recognized rules that must obtain between the two Houses, did not feel justified in going into the expenditures of the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman tell me if there is any legislation pending in the Senate in reference to the university of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know what legislation is pending in the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senate has a Committee on the University of the United States, a clerk to that committee at a salary of $2,220, and a messenger a $1,440. Is there any legislation or anything at all looking to the establishment of a university of the United States in the Senate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For a great many years there has been a pronounced movement which contemplated the expenditure of a large sum of money for that purpose, and I am surprised that it has escaped the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. What I am complaining of is that the bill appropriating the money is not here. If a Senator has introduced a bill looking to the appropriation for the establishment of a university of the United States, that would not justify the Senate in appointing a committee and a clerk and a messenger and perpetuate these salaries without bringing in some legislation with reference to the establishment of such a university.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That would be a matter that the Senate could more properly determine than the gentleman from Tennessee or myself. Just how much assistance is required for one Senator or several Senators to consider one or more bills is something I am unable to state, as I never enjoyed the privilege of serving as a Senator. I have some knowledge of what a Member of the House requires.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to ask the gentleman having the bill in charge why it is that we are appropriating in the bill $2,000 per annum for secretaries to Senators and only $1,500 for secretaries to Members of the House, and why we allow each Senator not only a secretary at a salary of $2,000 a year, but also furnish him, in addition, with a stenographer at an annual salary of $1,200 a year? Why should a United States Senator be provided with a secretary at a salary of $2,000 and a stenographer at $1,200, and a Member of the House only provided with a secretary at $1,500? Then we are voting in this bill $1,440 per annum for a messenger to a committee of the Senate and only $720 for a messenger to a committee in the House of Representatives. Why is it that we are called upon to discriminate against this House in favor of the Senate, paying our employees in a number of instances only half of what we are willing to sit here and pay to corresponding employees in the Senate? It is not justice to our employees and it is not fair to ourselves.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which does the gentleman think is wrong, the compensation paid to the employees of the Senate or the compensation paid to those in the House? Does he think that those in the Senate are paid too high or those in the House too low?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not think the compensation paid to those in the Senate is too much, but I do think that a messenger of this House at $60 a month is not receiving enough. I say when we sit here and vote to provide a Senator with a secretary at $2,000 a year and a stenographer at $1,200 a year, and $1,440 for a messenger, we are saying by that vote that we indorse it and approve it. If we do that with reference to the employees of the Senate, there can be no excuse for not increasing the salaries of those in the House to a corresponding amount. We might as well fix the salaries of the Senators at $10,000 a year and fix our own salaries at $7,500 a year.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman submit to a suggestion?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I would suggest to the gentleman that he offer an amendment to this paragraph reducing the salaries of these employees in the Senate, putting them on a par with those in the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I would rather offer an amendment to raise the salaries of the employees of the House and put them on a level with those of the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. Then I would suggest to the gentleman that when we reach that paragraph in the bill he offer that amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would be glad to have the assistance of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. PAGE. I do not promise my assistance. I merely make that suggestion.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I did not happen to be in the House this morning at the time the bill was taken up. I did not know that we met at 11 o'clock, notwithstanding my suggestion the other day to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that we ought to keep up with the record. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to an item under the office of the Vice President, which has been passed, which appears on page 2 of the bill. At the beginning of this Congress the Democratic caucus saw fit to strike out all of the appropriation for the item in the House of Representatives for two telegraph operators under the jurisdiction of the Speaker. I notice in the bill, as reported, an item for a telegraph operator for the Vice President at $1,500 a year, and a telegraph page for $600 a year. I would like the gentleman in charge of the bill to explain to the House why it is any more necessary for the Vice President to have a telegraph operator and a page for the telegraph operator than it is for the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have already explained that the Committee on Appropriations, under the rules that obtain between the two Houses, did not feel justified in inquiring into the propriety of these expenditures on the part of the Senate. We may have our individual ideas about their extravagance or their impropriety, but in a legislative capacity we are not at liberty to inquire into them, and we simply write into the bill the estimates sent to us by the Secretary of the Senate—or, in this case, we have written into the bill the current law.

Mr. GARNER. Then, if I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill, it makes no difference how extravagant it might appear to the House of Representatives or to the Committee on Appropriations, that committee would not take the position under any condition that it could go into the matter of the necessity of the employees in the Senate. Here is one instance where the House of Representatives has taken action and has decided, so far as the House is concerned, that it did not need a telegraph operator, that it did not need a page to the Speaker for the telegraph operator, and if this instance is not sufficient to convince the Committee on Appropriations that it is extravagant, that it is a matter into which the House of Representatives ought to look, then we must submit absolutely to the suggestions of the Senate regardless of what our opinions may be in respect to the extravagance of their appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is not justified in the inference which he draws. The Senate has determined that the telegraph office which it maintains is necessary for the convenience and the business of the Senate. Members of the House might differ as to what is necessary for the convenience and proper conduct of public business in some other legislative body, but, after all, this House would not tolerate any interference by the Senate with what it determined to be necessary in order to transact the public business of the House. If the House assumes that attitude so far as its own personnel is concerned, its own convenience, as to the things necessary to enable it to transact its business, then it must recognize that right in the other body. The only thing that the House can properly do, in those instances in which it would appear that expenditures are made to enable the Senate to transact its business which are out of proportion to what reasonable men would believe to be necessary, is to call the attention of the country to the fact. I do not know, and I do not know any other gentleman here who does know, that the telegraph office maintained by the Senate is not essential. The fact that the House abolished the telegraph operator here is no criterion as to whether such a position is necessary in the Senate. I know that abolishing that office did inconvenience the work conducted under me.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York I am sure is as familiar with the workings of the Senate as any Member of the House——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not profess to know anything about the way the Senate works.

Mr. GARNER. I do not contend that the gentleman knows anything about it, but I contend that he is as familiar with it, doubtless, as any Member of the House. It may be that no Member of the House knows anything about the workings of the Senate.

But I want to ask the gentleman if he can conceive of any reason why a telegraph operator should be furnished to the Vice President of the United States any more than to the Speaker of the House of Representatives?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not furnished to the Vice President. We should be fair about these things.

Mr. GARNER. Well, the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the appropriation is made under the Vice President, and the operator is appointed by the Vice President, and he is employed in a telegraph office maintained by the Senate. For its convenience or by its organization the appointment apparently is made by the Vice President, and the appropriation is placed under him. I do not believe the Vice President has any need for a telegraph operator himself, but if the Senate is maintaining a telegraph office there is need for a telegraph operator, and if the appropriation is made it must be made under some official who will have the appointment.

Mr. GARNER. Can the gentleman conceive of any conditions, so far as his observation goes, why the Senate of the United States has any more need of a telegraph operator than the House of Representatives?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I am not sufficiently familiar with the duties and work of the Senate to know. I do know this: I have seen in the past 13 years of my service here gentlemen of this House indulge in very severe criticisms of the personnel of the Senate and the extent of the service which it insists upon having, and after they have left this body for another place of more distinguished public service and became Members of the Senate apparently their viewpoint has entirely changed, and they no longer rave against the extravagances of the Senate, but seem to become happily reconciled to them.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. DYER. Do I understand the gentleman from New York to concede to the Senate absolutely the right to fix the salaries of its employees regardless of what this House may think of it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My information is that since the beginning of the Government the Senate has insisted upon that right, and in no instance has it ever yielded from that position.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for this question also following that? I would ask the gentleman if he does not think that the President of the United States should be shown the same consideration by this House that it shows to the Senate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not. The President is a different individual; he is at the head of the executive department of the Government. This is the legislative department of the Government.

Mr. DYER. Should he not be shown the same consideration in reference to his secretary, whose salary has been reduced?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, we will discuss that question when we come to it. We have shown every consideration to the President of the United States in the preparation of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], it is but fair to say that the total appropriation for the officers under the Vice President is $7,540, while the total appropriation under the Speaker is $12,840, and it does not make much difference what you call those officials. I have no doubt they are needed by both the Vice President and the Speaker. Mr. Chairman, in this bill in the item which has just been read, carrying the employees of the committees of the Senate, the total is $318,640. The total for employees of the committees of the House carried in the bill is $162,230, about one-half the amount carried in the bill for the Senate and less than one-half the amount now actually being paid to employees in the Senate. I took occasion some time ago——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order; I can not hear the gentleman, and I would ask the gentleman to repeat that statement of the amount, as I did not hear it. I understood him to say it was $162,000.

Mr. MANN. I will repeat the statement. The amount carried in the bill for the committees of the House is only about half the amount carried for the employees of the committees of the Senate and is less than half the amount now actually carried for employees in the Senate.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Let me make this statement and then I will be glad to yield. Some time ago, due to possible idle curiosity, I examined into the activities of some of these numerous committees of the Senate and discovered that many of them had had no bills referred to them for many terms of Congress, and hence had made no report upon any bill, and hence they could have had no business to transact. But, Mr. Chairman, it is fair to say that many of these committees, both of the House and of the Senate, are maintained for the purpose of maintaining employees of the committees in order that those employees may render assistance to the chairmen of the committees. I think it would be a wise policy if the House extended that theory so that some of the older Members of the House who are more active in connection with legislation might have the assistance which they require in the work of legislation. The clerks to Members of the House, in the main, are engaged all the time in work passing between the Member and his constituents and as a rule do not have much time to give much attention to legislative work. It is also but fair to say that a Senator of the United States represents as large a constituency in the total as the total membership of the House, and that therefore each Member of the Senate has a larger constituency than each Member of the House, and having a smaller number of Members of the Senate they require a larger number of employees to transact the official business which comes to them from their constituencies throughout the country.

A Senator from my State, that now will soon have 27 Members in the House, has an average constituency equal to more than 13 Members of the House. And while the 13 Members of the House each have a clerk, it is but fair that the Senator should have a larger number of employees to do his work than the one Member of the House. And I think as a rule these things have grown up in the Senate because they were required. I have discovered in my service in the House that chairmen of committees, which committees have employees sufficient to give aid to the chairmen, do more work and better work on the average than is done without them. The number of bills reported at this session of Congress where the reports are incorrect or where the bills do not conform with the reports would astonish Members of the House if their attention was called to it in every case, and that is largely because the committees, in the first place, have new employees, and in the second place, some of them do not have sufficient employees. The amount of legislation transacted by Congress now is manyfold what it was only a few years ago. Look, for instance, just at the printed volumes of the laws passed by Congress. What is now two large volumes a few years ago was one volume much thinner than either of the two is now. That means more work, and more work means necessarily more employees if the work is to be done intelligently. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I will yield.

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask the gentleman a question in reference to one of the statements which he made. The gentleman says, if I understood correctly, the Senate in reality was paying twice as much as is now being paid to the House committee employees. I would like the gentleman to state to the House in what way the Senate pays more than is indicated by the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. We make an appropriation for a contingent fund in the House, and there is a contingent fund in the Senate. We have passed a number of resolutions in the House for employees to be paid out of the contingent fund until otherwise provided by law. The Senate has done the same thing, and I think there has been added since the current law went into effect, last July, 30 or 40 employees in the Senate. Two were added the other day for a new committee, which will never meet, probably.

Mr. GARNER. I thought possibly the gentleman had reference to the question of the extra month's salary.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER. The Senate has made no attempt so far to pay out of its contingent fund or any other fund which is in the exclusive control of the Senate any——

Mr. MANN. They can not do that out of the contingent fund unless it is largely increased. I think they have hard work to pay them now out of the contingent fund.

Mr. BARTLETT. It does not require the action of both Houses, but it always goes on the appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. I know if the Senate has a contingent fund it can spend it as it pleases. It might pay it all to one man, for all I know. I am quite certain we can not do it out of the contingent fund that is provided in the law or in the bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add to what the gentleman from Illinois has said, that I am not disturbed that each Senator has a greater allowance for clerical hire than a Member of the House, and I am led to that reflection in consideration of my own State, which has at this time 32 Members in this House. Each Member has one clerk. Speaking of my own experience for many years, I have employed all the time one extra clerk at my own expense, and part of the time a second assistant, for I have a very large correspondence. Two Senators, with two extra clerks each, represent the same constituency that we 32 Members of the House represent, with 32 clerks, and they have proportionately as large a correspondence as we have. I have not the slightest doubt that each Senator from Pennsylvania expends out of his own pocket quite a large sum each year for clerical assistance.

The business of this House has so wonderfully increased that more clerical assistance is necessary. Some years ago—not so many years ago—the total number of bills offered was one or two or three thousand and up to five thousand bills in a Congress. Now we have more than 40,000 bills introduced in a Congress. We get inquiries from constituents about some or all of these bills. We have to have assistants who can devote their time entirely to looking up these bills and advising us about them, so that we can advise our constituents. I have letters in my pocket this morning that it would take me a day to look up the information necessary to enable me to answer them intelligently. Speaking as a Member of the minority, of course we Members of the minority have no committee clerks to assist us and have simply the personal clerk allowed to each Member.

I do not think that on the average the clerical assistance allowed to Members of the Senate is more than they require, and in many instances, in the case of Senators representing the larger States, I feel certain that the Senators have to pay something out of their own pockets every year for necessary clerical assistance.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] in answer to his reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as to this difference in the total amounts required to run the Senate and the House. You will find in this appropriation bill that practically every committee of the Senate has an assistant clerk, at $1,800 a year. The House has not. You will find that every committee of the Senate has a messenger, at $1,440 a year, while we are paying ours at the rate of $720. They also have a personal clerk, at $2,000, and a stenographer, at $1,200, whereas we appropriate only $1,500 each for our personal clerks and nothing for stenographers for the Members of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not to every Senator, but only to Senators who are not chairmen of committees. Only clerks to such Senators get $2,000. That is the language.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is true. Every Senator without a chairmanship gets a clerk at $2,000 and a stenographer at $1,200, and every Senator who is chairman of a committee has a committee clerk at $2,250, in some instances at $3,000, and in one instance at $4,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not every one.

Mr. AUSTIN. I say "in many instances," and also an assistant clerk, at $1,800, and a messenger, at $1,440.

Mr. KENDALL. Those are only the chairmen.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will examine the bill—I do not myself know what they have—he will find that this bill does not carry an assistant clerk for every chairman.

Mr. AUSTIN. I say in a number of instances.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is true with a number of important committees, like Agriculture, Appropriations, and so forth.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Committee on Indian Affairs, the Committee on Foreign Affairs——

Mr. BARTLETT. They are very important committees, just like ours.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not talking about their importance at all. I am simply calling attention to this difference, so that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] may understand how it is made up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Post office: Postmaster, $2,250; chief clerk, $1,800 (deficiency act July 21, 1911); seven mail carriers and one wagon master, at $1,200 each; four riding pages, at $912.50 each; in all $17,300.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman desire that reference to the deficiency act to remain in the bill as a part of the bill, in lines 21 and 22, page 8?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the law under which this appropriation was made.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire the reference to be retained?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes. We want to keep the reference there in order to keep track of the appropriation. It was put in designedly.

Mr. MANN. It is not retained anywhere else, apparently.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FAISON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 23774. An act providing an appropriation to check the inroads of the Missouri River in Dakota County, Nebr.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 22043) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. FLETCHER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Folding room: Assistant, $1,400; clerk, $1,200; foreman, $1,400; 9 folders, at $1,000 each; 14 folders, at $840 each; page, $600; in all, $25,360.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suppose this assistant was an assistant superintendent. What is he now? Under the folding room in the Senate there used to be a superintendent and an assistant superintendent. What is the assistant now?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would simply say that as to these two men in the folding room of the Senate we have used the titles that they used, and have put into the appropriation bill the law of the current year.

Mr. MANN. Formerly it was assistant superintendent. I do not know what you mean when you just call him an assistant.

Mr. NORRIS. Where is his boss appropriated for here?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They had a superintendent and they abolished him, and they call these men foreman and assistant.

Mr. MANN. It ought to be assistant foreman, or whatever it is, and not simply an assistant.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage of Representatives and Delegates, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $154,000.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 15 and 16 on page 11 and insert in lieu thereof:
"For mileage of Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, at the rate of 5 cents for each mile traveled by the usual route from their home to the seat of government, $38,500."

Mr. GARNER. I did not happen to be in the Hall when the item with reference to mileage of Senators was read. I will ask the gentleman if he offered a similar amendment on page 1 with reference to the mileage of Senators?

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman did not, because he was in the same fix as the gentleman from Texas and he did not happen to be on the floor. After disposing of this amendment, I will ask unanimous consent to recur to that item for the purpose of offering a similar amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition whatever to discuss the merits or demerits of the provision as contained in the bill or the amendment which I have offered. The question has been before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union time and time again and has been thoroughly discussed, and everybody here certainly understands the whole question, which is, as I see it, whether or not we, as Members of the House of Representatives, shall continue to vote to ourselves an amount of money for a purpose for which it is not expended.

I believe that we, as Members of the House, are entitled to, and that the people of this country believe we should have, only an amount that will defray the expenses of a Member coming to the sessions of the House. I think it is due to the House itself and to its membership that we should consider this matter in the light of the facts as they exist, and deal with it honestly between ourselves and the people whom we represent.

A great deal has been said, by my colleagues on this side of the House particularly, about economy. I am inclined to think that rather too much has been said along that line in connection with some matters about which we legislate; but I do believe that if we expect the country to take us seriously, and if we are expecting to make any impression upon the country at all that our purpose is to economize, we should begin, as we did in the beginning of this Congress, with the organization of this House—that we should begin with ourselves. And I honestly and earnestly believe that the compensation I have provided in the amendment that I have sent to the desk is ample to pay every expense of a Member of the House in connection with his travel, and that that is all he is entitled to, and all that the people of this country believe we should have; and I hope the amendment may prevail.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is of some interest to the membership of the House, and I ask that all debate on the amendment close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks that debate on the pending amendment to the paragraph——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. And all amendments thereto be closed in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina has given his reasons for the adoption of this amendment so tersely and in terms so well expressed that I do not know that I can add anything to what he has said. I will say that had he not first offered the amendment I would have done so.

We had this discussion some months ago upon the floor of this House, and unfortunately the proposition to reduce the mileage compensation was at that time voted down, though I think it provided for 10 cents instead of 5 cents a mile.

But it seems to me there is an additional reason at this time for practicing economy in the manner suggested in this amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. SHARP. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. In the gentleman's judgment, what is the equitable reason for any appropriation whatever to pay the expenses of Congressmen coming to and going from Washington? Is it the purpose to equalize the salary of the Congressman, and if so, will 5 cents per mile pay the Member's expenses when he brings his family to the Capital?

Mr. SHARP. It will pay his own individual expenses, but it will not of course take care of the railroad expenses of his family. It must be remembered that this law allowing 20 cents per mile was put on the statute books at a time when Members of Congress received only $5,000 per annum. They are now getting $7,500 per annum. There is an additional reason, it seems to me, for us to now inaugurate this policy of economy in the House. It was only at the last session of Congress that we saw fit in our judgment—although I voted and spoke against it—to increase the membership of the House under the recent decennial census by an addition of 42 Members which, at the least estimate, will call for an additional expenditure in salaries, clerk hire, mileage, and so forth, of $500,000 per annum. I am not finding fault with the general plan of economy shown in this bill. I have no criticism to make of the committee in its endeavor to lop off the services of unneeded employees wherever it finds them, though I deplore the effect. But it does seem to me that we can set a shining example here ourselves if we begin to apply the remedy at home, and instead of taking 20 cents a mile we consent to this amendment which allows but 5 cents a mile each way, as I understand it, which seems to me to be adequately sufficient to cover all the necessary expenses. I am heartily in favor of the amendment and sincerely hope it will carry.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am amused, I will not say disgusted, at this amendment. I have listened with interest to the gentleman from Ohio and also to the gentleman from North Carolina, both of whom, I believe, notwithstanding the law touching mileage, now want to cut it down to 5 cents a mile one way.

This legislative body acts so far as legislation is concerned, for a great block of people—90,000,000 in round numbers. We come and go by decennial apportionment, according to the population from our respective districts.

I have been here a long time. I could have stopped any time I chose to, and there have been many people that have desired me to halt. [Laughter.] I have a very good district that I appreciate highly. I am said to be a multimillionaire, all the way from two millions to a thousand millions, according to the declaration of those who are from time to time pleased to state, and all of which people say, now and then, that I have made by being a Member of the House. [Laughter.]

I laugh and go on. It is true that I have a modest competency, but I want to say to you that considering the support of my family, the education of my two children, the campaign expenses in my district, which have never been extravagant, because extravagant sums could not be used profitably in the district that I represent, my expenses have been more than I receive.

For eight years I have kept house in Washington while I was Speaker. Before that I lived in hotels. I have drawn almost a quarter of a million dollars from the Public Treasury in about 38 years of service, and I am here to tell you that my expenditures have been a half a million dollars at least, although I have lived at home modestly and fairly modestly in Washington.

"Well, how did you get it?" [Laughter.] I had a modest competency in black Illinois lands that I got when they were cheaper than they are now, and by appreciation I have income enough so that each year I have something to the good after I answer many demands, charitable and otherwise, for my own city and county and district.

Now, my individual experience is not a guide for others. I have never apologized for all the salary I have received and I never will. Why should gentlemen sit still here and assent to this rate of mileage in the Senate? Why should they assent to the Senate having secretaries at $2,000 a year while the House has secretaries at $1,500 a year I do not know?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I think I have heard the gentleman from Illinois when he was in charge of the appropriation bills state repeatedly here that we could not inquire into the expenditures of the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I am not criticizing the gentleman from South Carolina, and I am particeps criminis; I am a member of the committee in the minority that reported this bill. I mean, when we reach it, to move to increase the payment for the clerical assistance to the individual Member from $1,500 to $2,000. [Applause.] I want to say that I have but little patience with this talk of economy in this great body that legislates for all the people upon the question of mileage, which, in point of fact, is expended in the trips we take back and forth to our homes and in bringing our families here. In my judgment, it will make no vote for any gentleman who dwells on that kind of economy. [Applause.] Oh, I have seen this proposition made from time to time during all these years. Like hope, it springs eternal. It is not a new proposition to me. In every Congress during the 38 years that I have served here I have seen people agonizing to get rid of this mileage appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I recollect the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Holman, who was a great legislator. He was called the watch dog of the Treasury. He died poor, and he was always against the increase of salaries. I speak of him lovingly. He has passed over. I recollect one time we had a special session of Congress, which lasted all of the summer. That was the summer before he died. Then came the regular session. We adjourned, as I recollect, in September, and met again in December. That distinguished gentleman, who sat on the other side of the House, opposed the appropriation for mileage for the regular session. I laughed and said, speaking to him familiarly and lovingly, "Oh, Judge, after all, the law which is upon the statute books gives the mileage for each session of Congress." The House overruled him and almost unanimously voted for the appropriation. Shortly after I met a daughter of his, and she came up to me and shook my hand and with tears streaming down her cheeks said: "Oh, Mr. CANNON, papa was wrong and you were right. You do not know how much we needed that money to pay our current bills." Mr. Chairman, he has crossed over. I am not criticizing him, I am speaking of him lovingly. He was a great legislator, but he had that one weakness—that he was afraid to take that which the law gave to him.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to criticize the Democratic caucus. You have flapped your wings and crowed about starting economy here. The country has not paid as much attention to you as it would to a last year bird's-nest. [Laughter.] Your economy has been little pin economy. You have been talking about mills, when we have before us for appropriation legislation that involves the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. That being the fact, we should have all of the clerical help that we need, and we deserve the salary that we get and the mileage and the stationery allowed. If I had my way about it, instead of decreasing the salary of the Members of Congress, I would increase it, especially for that assistance that is necessary in these changing conditions to enable Members to keep respectable track of important questions that come before us for legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by adding at the end, after the word "Government," the words "and return," so as to make it apply 5 cents each way. As it reads it would apply only one way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is not the gentleman willing to take a vote of the House on the question of mileage 5 cents one way?

Mr. PAGE. No. I do not think that would meet the expenses of a Member in going and coming.

Mr. MANN. Neither will the other.

Mr. PAGE. It will if he is an economical gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It will not if he has a wife.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman and I disagree upon that point. I do not think that it contemplates paying the expenses of his family.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be now reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Government," in the last line of the amendment, add the words "and return," so that the amendment will read:

"By the usual route from their homes to the seat of Government and return, $38,500."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported in full, if we may.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the modified amendment be reported. Without objection, it will be done.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 15 and 16, on page 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For mileage of Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners at the rate of 5 cents for each mile traveled by the usual route from their homes to the seat of Government and return, $38,500."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute to follow after the figures "$154,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, on page 11, line 16, after the figures "$154,000," the following: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid to any Representative or Delegate which shall exceed a sum sufficient to pay the actual railway, Pullman, and steamship fares of himself and the immediate members of his family in coming once from his home to Washington and returning therefrom as certified by him to the Clerk of the House."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to convict myself of that cheeseparing economy that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois laughed at, but I am one of those people who do not believe that a thing is made justifiable because of its size, and I have never felt that we were justified in paying ourselves an extra salary under the disguise of mileage. It has two vices. In the first place, it is an indirect and a cowardly way of doing a thing. In the second place—and to my mind the very much stronger reason against it—is that it creates inequality among Members. I was one of the men who voted for an increase of salary from $5,000 to $7,500. I would vote tomorrow, if I thought the salary ought to be increased, to increase it, but I am not willing to vote myself a fixed salary and then under the disguise of mileage vote myself an increased salary, and I particularly am not willing to give to a Member from Washington or from California or from any other distant point a greater compensation than is given to other Members. Now, it so happens that my mileage, as I stated a year ago, is that of the average Member, and I can speak without special bias. Mileage should be for the purpose it purports to be for—to pay the actual expenses of coming here with your family and returning from here to your home. That is all that is provided for in my substitute.

Mr. PAGE. I just want to ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, his amendment would not increase the aggregate of the amount rather than diminish it?

Mr. SHERLEY. It certainly would not, in my judgment, come anywhere near increasing it, but it would put the membership of this House on a plane of equality and pay the actual expenses, and then there would not be dissatisfaction over it throughout the country.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has occasion in the number of terms he has served here to return to his home in Kentucky several times during a session of Congress?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have occasion, but most of the occasions have been made by myself and not on Government business. [Applause.] If I choose to go to Kentucky and look after my political fences, it is on my business and not the Government's, and it should not pay me mileage for doing it. [Applause.] I have served in this House 10 years, nearly, and I have never known a time when public duty demanded I should travel to the extent of my mileage and I have not known it in the case of other Members, either.

Mr. BORLAND. I have, Mr. Chairman; I have not served a single session of this House without the necessity of returning to my district several times during the session.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has had more calls home than I have had. I can only speak from my own information.

Mr. BORLAND. And I want to say they are not wholly political calls, either; they are all commercial gatherings in the district of interest to my district and my constituents.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am willing to accept the gentleman's statement, but we have to judge from our own experience, and I am still of the opinion that what the gentleman states with regard to himself is an exception to the rule. I have seen more damage to the public service through nonattendance here than I have ever seen through lack of ability to go home because of a shortage in mileage.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. With regard to the question asked by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], if this will not cause the appropriation to exceed the present appropriation, under the terms of the gentleman's amendment that would be an impossibility, because the appropriation of $154,000 is the maximum.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true; but I was answering not the technical question, but the real question that underlies it. There is no intention to increase mileage, but there is the intention to give to the Members the actual expenses that they incur.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TAGGART. Does the gentleman have in mind that a few days ago this House practically voted $25 per annum off of the salary of every Member of this House as a tax upon the salary of the Members of the House?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman may consider that is a reason for keeping something that I do not think the membership is entitled to. But I can not believe that my obligation to pay, along with other citizens, a tax, entitled me to a mileage that otherwise I would not be entitled to.

Mr. TAGGART. Do you hold that it is an advantage to live at a distance from the Capital?

Mr. SHERLEY. I hold this as a fact, that there are Members of this House, by virtue of the distance that they live from the Capital and by virtue of the mileage that they thereby receive, that have an addition made to their salaries as Members that is not made to other Members of the House. I know the matter has been thrashed out about one's family and the moving of the household, and all that. It applies in the same degree to a man who lives 600 miles as to the man who lives 3,000 miles away. One man gets a profit on 600 miles and the other gets a profit on 3,000 miles of travel. I do not want him to have a profit or loss on either. I want to pay him what he actually has to spend and nothing more or less.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman provides here for the expenses of the members of his immediate family. I wanted to know what he considered as members of an immediate family.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would consider as members of the immediate family the wife and dependent children; if he had no wife and his mother kept house for him, in that instance his mother. There is no trouble in defining that. Men who want to be fair know what immediate members of the family mean.

Mr. SHARP. I hold in my hand here a picture of 12 children belonging to a gentleman——

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and I am willing to pay a little extra to that citizen, if a Member of Congress. There are some of us without that number, and we will help to bring the average down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Personally, I am indifferent as to what is done about the mileage. I have stated on other occasions that I receive $92 a session, so that it is immaterial to me whether mileage be voted. The Committee on Appropriations, however, did not recommend any change in this mileage because of the experience of Members in connection with it in the past.

Since 1866 Members of Congress have received mileage at the rate of 20 cents a mile, and during the 13 years I have been in the House on numerous occasions efforts have been made to change the rate at which the mileage has been paid, and on every occasion the effort has failed. I am more interested, Mr. Chairman, in effecting some real, substantial reforms in the expenditures of public money than I am in engaging time and again in this fruitless debate. I know that some of the Members of the House are honestly of the opinion that the amount of mileage is too extravagant; that it is paid upon an erroneous basis; that it is paid in sums that can not be justified; and yet upon every occasion when the matter is debated the same arguments are repeated in favor of and against the proposition, and inevitably the House has voted to leave the mileage as it has been during all these years. I propose to vote to sustain the committee.

Mr. LEVER. How much will the saving amount to here?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. This item is for mileage for the session of Congress which ordinarily under the law would commence next December?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there will be any real occasion for using any of the money, according to present indications?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not interested——

Mr. MANN. Will not this session end on the 4th of next March?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not interested in that at this time.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman and all the rest of us are very much interested in it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will not take up my time, it will hasten the adjournment of this Congress. The committee reported this appropriation in conformity with the law because time and again—and during this very Congress itself—the House has refused to change the rate at which mileage is paid.

Mr. Chairman, I know that this matter affects gentlemen differently. Perhaps I would receive more under the amendment of my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] than I receive under the present law. I would be one of those who would be benefited by receiving the actual expenses of my family coming to and returning home from Washington. But the law has been this way since 1866, and Members have given innumerable reasons for the retention of the present amount of mileage. The Committee on Mileage, which has jurisdiction of the matter, has not reported any of the many bills pending before it for the purpose of effecting a change in the mileage paid.

I desire to say also that the country has acquiesced in the arguments advanced in favor of the present system, and we gain nothing by stirring it up and not accomplishing what is sought. So far as I am concerned, whether some Members receive more mileage than they should or not, I may say that many people think some Members receive more salary than they should; but it is apparent that it is impossible to fix any system or any rule which will not work out inequalities. It may be argued that there is no reason for paying mileage to anyone except Members who bring their families. In that case Members like myself would have an advantage over those who are single.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAGE. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 110.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Officer of the Speaker: Secretary to the Speaker, $4,000; clerk to the Speaker's table, $3,600, and for preparing Digest of the Rules, $1,000 per annum; clerk to the Speaker, $1,600; messenger to the Speaker, $1,440; messenger to the Speaker's table, $1,200 (transferred from Doorkeeper's office); in all, $12,840.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "officer" and insert in lieu thereof the word "office," at the beginning of line 19, page 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 19, page 11, by striking out the word "officer" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "office."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Clerk: Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $6,500; hire of horse and wagon for use of the Clerk's office, $900, or so much thereof as may be necessary; chief clerk, $4,500; journal clerk, and two reading clerks, at $4,000 each; disbursing clerk, $3,400; tally clerk, $3,300; file clerk, $3,250; enrolling clerk, $3,000; chief bill clerk, $3,000 (House resolution May 9, 1911); assistant to chief clerk, and assistant enrolling clerk, at $2,500 each; assistant disbursing clerk, $2,400; stationery clerk, $2,200; librarian, $2,100; assistant file clerk, $1,900; two assistant librarians, and one clerk, at $1,800 each; three clerks, at $1,680 each; bookkeeper, and assistant in disbursing office, at $1,600 each; four assistants to chief bill clerk, at $1,500 each (House resolution May 9, 1911); stenographer to clerk, $1,400; locksmith, who shall be skilled in his trade, $1,300; messenger in chief clerk's office, and assistant in stationery room, at $1,200 each; messenger in file room, one messenger in disbursing office, and assistant in House library, at $1,100 each; stenographer to chief bill clerk, $1,000 (House resolution May 9, 1911); three telephone operators, at $900 each, three telephone operators, at $75 per month each from December 1, 1912, to March 31, 1913; night telephone operator, $720; for services of a substitute telephone operator when required, at $2.50 per day, $200; two laborers in the bathroom, at $900 each; two laborers, and page in enrolling room, at $720 each; allowance to chief clerk for stenographic and typewriter services, $1,000; in all, $91,970.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. I wish to call to the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill the fact that I want to offer an amendment on page 12, line 25, to strike out "720" and insert in lieu thereof "900." I will state for the information of the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 25, strike out the figures "720" and insert in lieu thereof "900."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I will state for the information of the committee that during this session of Congress the Committee on Accounts have had occasion to go through and examine a great many, if not all, of the employees of the House. Some apparent injustices have come under our observation, and this is one of them. There are appropriated for in this bill three telephone operators, at $900 each, and three telephone operators, at $75 per month for the time they are employed, which is equal to $900 a year.

In the same paragraph is an appropriation of $720 for a telephone operator known as a night operator. We discovered, in going through these different offices, that this is the least desirable place appropriated for in the telephone service. In other words, the employee would prefer to have some of the places elsewhere appropriated for at the same salary, to the $720 place. A night employee goes on at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and stays until 12 o'clock midnight, and the fact having come under our observation, it was suggested in the committee that we call the matter to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman propose to increase it?

Mr. GARNER. I was explaining the necessity of the change and for offering this amendment, inasmuch as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] had made a point of order against it. Either the others ought to be appropriated for at $720, or this one ought to be appropriated for at $900 a year.

I simply call it to the attention of the committee, in order that they may consider the justness of increasing this salary. I do it at the suggestion of the Committee on Accounts, who would make this in order if it was submitted to them for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Are these telephone operators women or men?

Mr. GARNER. They are all women.

Mr. MANN. The night operator?

Mr. GARNER. The night operator who looks after matters of the telephone service is a man, but the employees in the House of Representatives carried in these appropriations, I am informed, are all women.

Mr. MANN. This night operator carried in this appropriation is a woman?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What are her hours?

Mr. GARNER. From 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 11.30 or 12 o'clock at night, as the emergency may arise. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think this should be stated about the House organization: At the beginning of this Congress certain action was taken by which the organization of the House was fixed. The Committee on Appropriations had nothing to do with it and was not consulted about it. It has followed the action of the House in fixing the organization. If the committee itself had proposed to increase the compensation of employees of the House upon its own initiative, because convinced that some of them received insufficient compensation, the committee would be very severely criticized and Members would very greatly resent its action. The attention of the committee has not been called to this matter. We have been in session a year, during which this condition has existed. It seems to me that if any change is to be made toward increasing these compensations, it should be done in some other way than proposed here. I shall insist on the point of order.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is sincere, and I am sure he is, that the question ought to be left to the organization of the House, why does he not withdraw his point of order and let the committee pass on the propriety of increasing this salary?

I want to say, further, that I did speak with the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] about the matter in general conversation, in reference to the employees of the House, suggesting that some ought to be cut out, and that in this instance and one other instance the salaries ought to be equalized. This was while the subcommittee was considering the bill, and I will say to the gentleman from New York in all candor that he ought at least to give the committee an opportunity to vote on the propriety of equalizing these salaries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Accounts, and if they considered it proper they could pass a resolution which would make this in order on the bill.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that, and the Committee on Accounts, I anticipate, would not have a dissenting vote against doing that. The only thing is, if this increase is not carried here for the next fiscal year it will have to come out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Until provided for by law.

Mr. GARNER. Until provided for by law.

Mr. BARTLETT. And if the gentleman's committee had passed the resolution heretofore he could have offered this amendment now, and it would have been in order on this bill.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that; but I will suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that if it is a desirable amendment the mere fact that it does not happen to be in order, it seems to me, ought not to be insisted upon in this particular case.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will say that I will vote for the gentleman's amendment if it is not held out of order.

Mr. GARNER. I can state for the Committee on Accounts—and the chairman of that committee is here to confirm what I say—that the matter has been discussed in the Committee on Accounts, and that it met with no objection, and that the Committee on Accounts, who could give the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction of it, are perfectly willing and anxious that it should be done. It does seem to me that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought not to insist on his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Texas know how much similar night operators are paid here in Washington by the telephone company?

Mr. GARNER. I have not the slightest idea. I do not contend that the salary ought to be higher than it is, except that the salaries ought to be equalized; and if the gentleman does not think it ought to be $900 he ought to cut the other salaries from $900 to $720, which is within his purview as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman wishes to test the sense of the House, he can offer that amendment.

Mr. GARNER. I suggest that if the gentleman wishes to test the sense of the House he can offer an amendment. I am pointing out the injustice done one operator in comparison with other operators just appropriated for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken; the business done by this operator is hardly enough to keep him awake. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York insists on the point of order. As the Chair understands, the salary is fixed by law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the same sum as appropriated for in the current year, and that is the current law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SAUNDERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5930. An act to extend the time for the completion of dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908; and

S. 6009. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Huron, S. Dak.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds: Chief engineer, $1,900; 3 assistant engineers, at $1,300 each; 24 conductors of elevators, including 14 for service in the House Office Building, at $1,200 each, who shall be under the supervision and direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds; machinist, $1,300; electrician, $1,200; 4 laborers, at $800 each; in all, $40,300.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: In line 6, page 13, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 6, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four."

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, this adds one assistant engineer. I desire to call the attention of the committee to a condition that exists in this particular department; but before going into that I ask the Clerk to read a communication I have here bearing on this proposition from the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF UNITED STATES CAPITOL BUILDING AND GROUNDS,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. C. W. HAMLIN.

DEAR JUDGE HAMLIN: It would be a blessing if we could have another assistant engineer.

Compare the table I send. You will see the Senate has 11 employees; the House 8; and the House work necessarily is heavier.

Sincerely,

ELLIOTT WOODS.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the Clerk read another communication handed to me a few moments ago in relation to the same matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT,
UNITED STATES CAPITOL BUILDING AND GROUNDS,
Washington, D. C. May 3, 1912.

Hon. C. W. HAMLIN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your inquiry and to my former application to the House Committee on Appropriations for the increase in the engineering force, heating and ventilating department, House wing, I beg to say that I request one additional assistant engineer, who would be of particular service to us in connection with additional machinery which we have installed in the House wing, particularly with reference to refrigerating machinery installed for the benefit of the House restaurant, which will save the Government considerable money and the cost of ice.

The Senate wing of the Capitol is provided with an engineering force consisting of one chief engineer at $2,160 per annum and four assistant engineers, one at $1,800 and three at $1,440, whereas the House equipment consists of one chief engineer at $1,900 and three assistant engineers at $1,300.

As the House service is of necessity greater than that in the Senate wing, you can see that the request for the additional assistant engineer ought not to be unreasonable.

Very respectfully,

ELLIOTT WOODS,
Superintendent United States Capitol Building and Grounds.
By WELCH.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from New York will not insist on his point of order, if it is, in fact, subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hardly think it is myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will discuss that later.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to state to the committee that I hope gentlemen will hear me for a moment, because my cause is undoubtedly just.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Was this matter presented to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HAMLIN. It was presented to the Committee on Appropriations by myself, or to the chairman of the subcommittee that brought in this bill. The first communication that I had read was also presented to the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill, and I understand that the superintendent appeared before the committee and told them, substantially, and probably a great deal more in extenso than he wrote to me, and which statement will appear in the hearings.

What I want the committee especially to consider is this: There is a gentleman employed now in that department who has been employed there about 29 years. He is very competent, and he is now rated as one of the laborers at a salary of $800 per year. He shoveled coal there for twenty-odd years, but has become competent for the position of assistant engineer, and the superintendent informs me that it is necessary to use him frequently as an assistant engineer. The result is that while he is carried as a common laborer, and paid a salary of only $800 a year, he in fact puts in his time doing the work and the service of an assistant engineer, and at other times on the elevator doing the work of a $100 per month man.

[The time of Mr. HAMLIN having expired, by unanimous consent he was given five minutes more.]

You have heard the letters read from the superintendent, Mr. Woods, showing conclusively that this extra man is needed; and I appeal to this committee, in common fairness and justness, that this man who is competent to fill this position ought not to be compelled, as he now is compelled, to fill a position and do the work of a man who fills the position and gets a salary of $1,300. Yet this man gets a salary of only $800 a year.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will this decrease the number of laborers?

Mr. HAMLIN. That is a question I asked the superintendent this morning, but I will not be certain as to his answer. I was in a great hurry, for I thought that this provision would be up in a moment and I wanted to be upon the floor. The impression I have is it will not require an extra laborer, but will only increase the cost to the Government about $500 a year, as this man now draws $800 as a laborer.

I may be wrong in this. There is no man more in favor of economy in expenditures than I am, but I am not such an economist that I want to do any man an injustice. This Government is able to pay for the services rendered to it, and no one ought to be required to render any service for which the Government does not pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this is an increase of compensation of some man who is now doing work similar to other men?

Mr. HAMLIN. I said that a man is now being used to fill the position of assistant engineer, and he is doing the work of an assistant engineer, a position which pays $1,300 a year, and is detailed frequently to the elevators, which pays a salary of $1,200 a year, when they need a man there. He is, however, only getting the pay of a common laborer—$800 a year. He is a competent man, and he has been in the service about 20 years, and has given his life to the work and understands it. I submit that it is not right to make him do this work which he does for $800 a year.

Mr. MANN. Was this additional employee estimated for by the Superintendent of Capitol Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not seen the estimate, and I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know what statement the superintendent made before the Committee on Appropriations on this subject?

Mr. HAMLIN. I know this—that the first statement I have had read here, that he very much needed this assistant engineer, was made to the Committee on Appropriations, because I presented it myself.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Appropriations has its hearings printed. Did he appear before that committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He did not.

Mr. MANN. The hearings will show whether he appeared or not.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to be corrected if I am wrong. I can not be corrected in the statement which I have made, because my statement is correct. The superintendent told me that he did. If he did not, I would like to be corrected.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman went before the committee?

Mr. HAMLIN. I did.

Mr. MANN. When was the gentleman before the committee?

Mr. HAMLIN. Several months ago.

Mr. MANN. The letter just read is dated May 3.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman presented two letters.

Mr. HAMLIN. One of them is not dated.

Mr. AUSTIN. The last letter read was dated to-day.

Mr. HAMLIN. And written to-day; but the letter I had before the Committee on Appropriations and the one I had first read was written perhaps a month and a half ago.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe that any committee of the House or anybody else will pay any attention to a letter dated like that. A letter that is of any value is dated to-day.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina, who is in charge of the bill, if Mr. Woods was not before his committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Missouri be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Missouri be extended for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would say that when the gentleman from Missouri forwarded to me the letter from Mr. Woods, on the first occasion I had I asked Mr. Woods about the matter, and he said to me personally that it was a very meritorious case. He came before the committee and proposed a reorganization scheme of the force under him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is, his office force?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. His office force; but at that time he talked about this other matter, and we finally decided to write the matter into the appropriation bill as it is for the present year, and we made no changes in regard to his office force or any other force. He did say that this was a very meritorious case.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I did not forward to the gentleman from South Carolina any communication, but presented Supt. Woods's letter in person. I know that Supt. Woods told me he had been before the committee, but that does not meet the proposition that I am urging upon this House. We are confronted with this actual condition. He needs this extra man. He says that he is actually using this man who is carried on the rolls at $800 per year to serve sometimes as assistant engineer and sometimes as elevator man. The salary is not sufficient to meet this man's actual expenses, he tells me, and I have no doubt that what he says is true. And he is compelled to do the work of a man at $1,300 a year, and if this man is doing this work he is entitled to the salary of the position.

A MEMBER. What is his name?

Mr. HAMLIN. Sheely. I believe we ought to do common justice to everybody. If the man is not required to do the work, then I do not ask for this increase, but if he is required to do the work he ought to have the pay. He says he does it, Supt. Woods says he does it, and some of you have ridden with him on the elevator, and he is doing the work of a man who is getting $1,300, whereas he only gets $800. He does the work of an assistant engineer and he is doing it almost every day of the year. So I only ask as a matter of common justice that this increase be made. I believe his work as an assistant engineer entitles him to more; Supt. Woods says so, and I think our experience is Supt. Woods does not ask for anything he does not think he needs, and I believe the amendment ought to be adopted and this extra assistant engineer granted to this department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, nobody in this House has greater confidence in Mr. Woods than I have. It is my experience on the Committee on Appropriations that his requests for mechanical assistants have been met in a very generous spirit by that committee. Mr. Woods did not estimate for this assistant engineer. He made no formal application for the place. When he appeared before the committee in connection with the reorganization of his office force he was asked by the gentleman from South Carolina about a letter which he had written to Mr. HAMLIN and which Mr. HAMLIN had brought to the committee. It is a very poor method to be adopted for any committee appropriating for the public service——

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In one moment—to adopt a suggestion in that informal way. If the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds considers that some particular official is essential to the proper conduct and management of the service about the Capitol he should apply for it properly and in a formal manner and let his request be considered. He should not be importuned by Members for any reason to write letters for some particular individual which may be used as a lever to have their compensation increased. If he needs an assistant engineer so that this man may be promoted he evidently does not need the laborer who is doing the work of the assistant engineer, and no force about this Capitol can be properly kept in control unless a proper inquiry be made when these applications are submitted.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the gentleman will not think that anything I have said intended any criticism of the action of the committee. I am satisfied if the gentleman understood the situation——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps the gentleman has not understood me. I endeavored mildly to criticize the method followed in attempting to have this compensation increased.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will say furthermore to the gentleman that he hardly does me justice when he intimates I have been importuning the Superintendent of Capitol Building and Grounds to write these letters. That is not accurate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I did not——

Mr. HAMLIN. I became interested in this man because I happened to know him, and I happened to know what he was doing. I saw Supt. Woods and asked if it were true that this man was rendering this service and only drawing this salary, and he said it was true, and that he needed him and had to have him, because he did not have enough others, and he appealed to me as a matter of common justice. I asked him about this, and he said, "I will go before the committee"——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well——

Mr. HAMLIN. If that is importuning, then I am glad of it, and I am not ashamed of it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman ever introduced a resolution or appeared before the Committee on Accounts for the purpose of having this salary increased?

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman pursue the ordinary course?

Mr. HAMLIN. Simply because, I will state frankly to the gentleman, that until yesterday I had an impression that the item was carried in the appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Accounts would have jurisdiction.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have always had some doubt about that. I have had some doubt about the Committee on Accounts having jurisdiction of this proposition.

Mr. MANN. Of course they have jurisdiction.

Mr. HAMLIN. And I will say there is no doubt about the Appropriations Committee having jurisdiction to increase the salary, and I applied to the committee that did have jurisdiction, and thought until yesterday it was in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes; I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Illinois asked the gentleman why he did not apply to the Committee on Accounts. The gentleman has heard of asking for bread and getting a stone, I apprehend?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? Did the gentleman from Illinois ever ask for bread and get a stone?

Mr. HAMLIN. He has given it.

Mr. GARNER. Very often, I guess, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. I have had, if the gentleman will allow me, some such experience under certain conditions; that is not the rule in this case.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is no doubt the man I am pleading for here to-day is asking for bread and getting a stone. And I believe that this committee, in all fairness to this man, will increase this salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, it has been held frequently by the Chair that where a salary is provided by law a proposition of increasing the number of men drawing the salary under that authoriziation is not subject to a point of order. I do not have within my hand's reach the precedent for that proposition, but I remember very distinctly in the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill recently that this very question was considered, and it was held that where there was authorization for the employment of officials or employees within a given class the point of order did not lie against the proposition to increase the number of employees in that class. If the Chair will refer to the decisions rendered by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union which had under consideration the agricultural appropriation bill this year, he will find that ruling was made repeatedly in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was going to ask whether the gentleman was referring to the rulings on the agricultural bill?

Mr. LEVER. The agricultural appropriation bill is the biggest bill that comes to this House. It is even bigger than the bill that comes from the Appropriations Committee, because it reaches more people and does more good, and the rulings made on that bill are more carefully made than the rulings on any other bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman does not deny my primary proposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes, I deny it; because the gentleman understands the basis on which the ruling was made. Under the organic act relating to the Department of Agriculture it was held under that law that it was in order. There is no such law whatever governing the employees under the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds. Under the rulings, if the gentleman insists that this is in order, he must produce the law upon which he bases his contention.

Mr. LEVER. There is this about it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], one of the parliamentary sharks of the House, and one of the gentlemen on the other side, who is also a parliamentary shark of the House, differ on this proposition, and little fish like myself can very well afford to stand aside, but I know what happened on the agricultural bill on this proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JACOWAY). The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks, messengers, and janitors to committees: Clerk to the Committee on Accounts, $2,500, assistant clerk, $1,800, janitor, $1,000; clerk to the Committee on Agriculture, $2,500, assistant clerk, $1,800, janitor, $1,000; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $4,000, and $1,000 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent, assistant clerk and stenographer, $2,500, assistant clerk, $1,900, janitor, $1,000; clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency, $2,000, assistant clerk, $1,200, janitor, $720; clerk to the Committee on the Census, $2,000, janitor, $720; clerk to the Committee on Claims, $2,500, assistant clerk, $1,200, janitor, $720; clerk to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, $2,000, janitor, $720; clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia, $2,500, assistant clerk, $1,800, janitor, $720; clerk to the Committee on Elections No. 1, $2,000, janitor,

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, insert after line 24 the following:
"Clerk to the Committee on Mileage, $500."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I make a point of order on that, but if the gentleman wants to be heard I will reserve it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I would like to be heard. The clerk to the Committee on Mileage during the last session and so far during this session has served without compensation. He performed a great deal of work in going over the railroad guides and figuring up the amount of mileage that was justly due the several Members. His work resulted in a saving of about $2,500 as compared with the mileage accounts of previous years. I may say that he fixed my mileage at $35 less than was allowed to my predecessor. The clerk's name is Robert C. Collins. He is clerk to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LEE], chairman of the Committee on Mileage. I am a member of the committee myself, and several members of that committee have requested me to offer this amendment to give the young man some compensation during the coming year.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. My impression is that this work was formerly done by a clerk in the Sergeant at Arms' office, and that he was paid for it. My understanding is that formerly he was paid.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I understand that is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman what possible labors can devolve on the Committee on Mileage during the short session of the Sixty-second Congress? We have all been elected, our mileage has been adjusted, and there is no work to do.

Mr. LAFFERTY. It is true that in equity this appropriation of $500 for the coming year for the clerk would, to my way of viewing it, be compensation for work largely already done and for which he has received no pay.

But it is also true that this clerk will have considerable work to do in the coming year. I have been in the office of the Committee on Mileage, while the mileage list was being made up, and heard him answer the telephone four or five times in the course of an hour in response to inquiries from Members and others wanting to know about questions of mileage. He is a veritable bureau of information on that subject, and he has performed a great deal of labor during the past year. We are going to have other meetings of that committee. We have bills pending before the Committee on Mileage, and I do not think the clerk ought to be expected to serve for nothing. I think $500 would be the least we could justly offer him for the two years' service he will perform.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oregon yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Yes; I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman perhaps is not familiar with the practice in the past in reference to matters of this kind. The practice has been that in the closing days of a session of Congress cases that are really meritorious, wherever there are such, are taken care of by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Well, that being the case, I shall not insist upon my amendment.

Mr. MANN. That is the only way it has been done.

Mr. LAFFERTY. If the Committee on Accounts will take this matter up and allow it, if it is meritorious, I will not press my amendment now.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Accounts I could not undertake to speak for the committee; I can speak only for myself. But——

Mr. MANN. That is the practice of the House.

Mr. GARNER. Yes. This is for compensation for work already done. Now, if the clerk of the Committee on Mileage can come before the Committee on Accounts and make an equitable showing, I feel sure that the committee will give him a fair hearing, and if it is shown that he is entitled to this compensation the Committee on Accounts will doubtless recommend it.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation for mileage this year is $154,000. The mileage that has actually been paid at this session is a little over $151,000. How much has been saved by this gentleman's computation I do not know; whether the $154,000 would have all been spent without him I do not know.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] asks unanimous consent to be permitted to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the committee to page 14, line 3, which provides for a janitor, at $1,000, for the Committee on Elections No. 1. I want to know why there should be any difference in the pay of the janitors of these three Committees on Elections, Nos. 1, 2, and 3.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I can give a better explanation of that than can the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], although I am not interested. Formerly there was one Committee on Elections. Before I came to the House that committee was subdivided into three committees. While it was still one committee it was provided with a clerk and a janitor, and when the committee was subdivided into three committees the clerk and the janitor remained with the Committee on Elections No. 1. In the course of time, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] was chairman of one of the Committees on Elections, and I was chairman of the Committee on Elections No. 1, janitors and clerks were allowed to the other Committees on Elections.

I think I have the most efficient janitor and messenger around this Capitol, and, without any request from me, because of the service which he was performing, which came under notice of the clerk to the Committee on Accounts, the Committee on Accounts at one time, in reporting a resolution, provided for the increase of salary of my janitor from $720 to $1,000—a salary which he never received, because immediately thereafter I became chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the man who succeeded my janitor in the Committee on Elections No. 1 got the increased salary. Thereupon, I may say modestly, I proceeded to get the salary of the janitor to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce raised to $1,000, where it is now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That compensation was raised in the days when they raised the compensation not only of those who asked to have it raised but those who did not? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. No. There are times when people take notice of the merit or modesty of the people who serve them; and in this case the House of Representatives took notice of the merits of my modest janitor, who, so far as efficiency is concerned, I will put up against the clerk of almost any committee of the House.

Mr. GARNER. No; they took notice of the modesty of the gentleman from Illinois, not the modesty of his janitor. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$720," on page 14, line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 13, strike out the figures "1,000," and insert in lieu thereof "720."

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not very touchy about the salaries, but I wish to say this, that so far as I have ever heard there is no difference in the work done by the Committees on Elections Nos. 1, 2, and 3. The contested-election cases are divided up by the Speaker among those three committees as fairly and equitably with regard to work as may be. The janitors certainly have not much to do with the work that is done before any of these committees, and I do not think anybody complains that the janitors of any of the committees are not getting all they are earning, because none of them are working very hard. Now, where there are three committees of absolutely equal rank in all respects, doing the same kind of work in every particular, the janitors or messengers doing the same kind of work in all respects and not very much of it, it is not quite fair that one should get $1,000 and the other should get $720. Therefore, since I am not in favor of raising salaries and am in accord with the committee in this respect, and since $720 is ample pay for any man who acts as a janitor or messenger for any of these committees, it strikes me that a man who is getting $1,000 ought to be reduced to the level of the other two who get $720 each, and that the amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I do not know who this employee is, but many people have the idea that a janitor is a mere janitor to take care of the committee room. Many years ago the House used to provide messengers as well as janitors. Finally it commenced to use the language "janitor," and some of the janitors are mere janitors. Some of them are employees who do that work. I never have had a janitor who was a mere janitor. I have had a janitor who was not only a janitor but a messenger and a clerk, an employee who did efficient service. Now, this man, whoever he may be, has been employed by the chairman of that committee at a salary fixed at $1,000—brought here at that salary—and it seems to me that in all fairness to him he ought to be permitted to draw the salary during the term of this Congress.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will admit that while the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was chairman of that committee he worked very hard himself, harder I think than any other man in this House, and he probably made his clerks and messenger or janitor work; but without any reflection on the present chairmen of the committees, it can not be claimed by any reasonable man that one of these committees now does any more work than either of the other two, and I do not think the gentleman from Illinois will claim that Committee No. 1 has now any more cases or any more work to do than either Committee No. 2 or Committee No. 3, and I do not think he will claim here that the janitor to Committee No. 1 is required to do any greater or any more arduous or any higher class of work than the janitors to Committees 2 and 3. Therefore there should not be this discrimination between them.

Mr. MANN. I do not undertake to say what services the janitors of any of the committees are performing. I know that at this session of Congress Committee on Elections No. 1 has had a good deal of work to do. Possibly the other committees have had. I am not interested in the question, but when we have given authority to employ a man at a salary, in fairness to the man we ought to do as we do in private life, keep him during the term for which he supposed he was employed and for which we supposed he was employed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, before the Congress met a committee appointed by the Ways and Means Committee examined all the officials of this House. They determined that certain officers were useless, and that certain salaries ought to be reduced. We have carried out the resolution reported by that committee. The Committee on Appropriations does not know who this janitor is, but whoever he is, he was appointed at a salary fixed at $1,000. He has been brought here from his home with the expectation of receiving that salary. The Committee on Appropriations have not felt justified in changing it. I hope that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. I happen to have been a member of the Committee on Elections No. 1 in my first service in this House. When I came here there was only one committee to consider election cases, known as the Committee on Privileges and Elections. There were then pending 41 contested cases, and in order to expedite the hearings of those cases, at the suggestion of Speaker Reed, the committee was divided into three committees, known as Committees on Elections Nos. 1, 2, and 3, with the positive statement made that those committees were not to be continued any longer than the exigencies of that particular session required.

But having created the committee, having created the chairmanship, having created the clerks, and there being no suggestion from either side of the House that the useless division of the Committee on Elections should be discontinued, they have been continued. The reason the janitor for Committee on Elections No. 1 receives $1,000 is that the old Committee on Privileges and Elections had a janitor at a salary of $1,000, and he was assigned to Committee No. 1.

The truth about the whole business is that there is no necessity for three Committees on Elections, because, as I understand, for the last 8 or 10 years there has been no contests to apportion more than one or two to each committee. But the Committee on Elections No. 1 has had a janitor at $1,000 a year; it has been appropriated for year after year and the janitor has been appointed under the understanding that that salary was to continue.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will.

Mr. GARRETT. I ask the gentleman if he does not think, as a matter of fact, that all Committees on Elections should be abolished; that there ought not to be any standing Committee on Elections? It is not a legislative committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. When the committees were organized it was the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I think the old committee ought to be restored and this division of Committees on Elections be done away with. The understanding was, and the statement was made on the floor of the House by Speaker Reed, at the time the resolution dividing up the Committee on Privileges and Elections was agreed to, that it was only for the fact that in the Fifty-fourth Congress there were 41 election cases and one committee could not dispose of all the cases in time to have a hearing before that Congress expired. Nobody who voted for or against the proposition thought that these three committees were to continue during all time.

Now, replying to my friend from Tennessee, I say that I recall what I have stated with reference to the time when these committees were created, and I certainly had expected that when the Democrats got control of the House, carrying out their—I will not say expected or pretended plan of reduction of expenses—but their proclaimed plan of reduction of expenses, that these useless committees would be dispensed with.

Reference has been made by the gentleman from South Carolina about carrying out the policy suggested in the beginning of this Congress by the committee appointed from the Committee on Ways and Means to reduce the officers of the House. I remember with what éclat it was proclaimed that the House had saved $187,000 a year by the reduction of its own force. The report of this committee shows that all we can do, that all we have been able to save in the expenses of the Government by reduction of the officers of the House is $92,280. So we have not been able to come up to the expectation of the Democratic caucus by at least 50 per cent. I am sorry that we have not been able to do it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to say that the $180,000 was based upon the reduction in the officers of the House and the extra month's pay.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; it was said that we had cut off of our own force that amount and that we started our economy program in our own House. The truth about it is it had not been inquired into, and they have found out since they made the reductions that it was necessary, in order to carry on the business of the House, to reinstate, by resolutions from the Committee on Accounts, some of these officers or like places that had been abolished.

I do not think that this janitor's salary ought to be reduced. I think we ought to permit it to stand where it is and where it has been for years. I do think we ought not to have three Committees on Elections when one committee can abundantly dispose of the business it has and have ample time and leisure for the balance of the session.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. How many years has this salary been at $1,000?

Mr. BARTLETT. I can not say.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Only one year?

Mr. MANN. The salary took effect, I think, two years ago last July.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Originally, the janitors' salaries were all the same.

Mr. MANN. Originally, there was only one janitor, and he was for Committee on Elections No. 1.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of economy; I am in favor of reducing expenditures——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Then commence right here.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, I would commence at places that the gentleman would not begin at; I would vote against the proposition of taking forty-two or seventy-five million dollars out of the Treasury in order to pay service pension bills. I want to reduce expenditures, not by striking off a few dollars from the salary of employees of the House and reducing the means afforded to the Members of the House to discharge their official duties, which does not amount to anything, but by voting against these increased appropriations, which take millions out of the Treasury. I do not seek to economize by simply striking a few dollars off from the salary of a janitor to a committee. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment, and I know nothing about this janitor, but I only want to make this observation. I can not quite harmonize the idea of members of the committee who are in favor of such rigid economy and yet are not willing to agree to an amendment to equalize the salaries of men engaged in the same work exactly, simply for no other reason than it has been at this figure for a couple of years and ought not now to be disturbed. A few moments ago when I presented to the committee a proposition that ought to have appealed to everybody in justice to a man who is rendering actual service for inadequate pay, the proposition was defeated on the point of order made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Here we are confronted with this proposition. A janitor for one of the Elections Committees, Elections Committee No. 1, having no more business than the Elections Committee No. 2 or Elections Committee No. 3, and yet the janitors of those other two committees, doing the same kind of work, are getting $720 a year each, and this man is getting $1,000. There are five other committees of this House that are being served by one janitor alone who takes care of the office of all five of the committees, carries the mail, and gets only $720 during the time Congress is in session. Now, it seems to me, we ought not to be so particular and stickle so closely on a report that may have been brought by the Appropriations Committee that we are not willing to equalize these things and treat men fairly. If this man is entitled to $1,000 per year, the men doing like work are entitled to the same amount. If these others are entitled to only $720, then this man is only entitled to $720, I care not who he is and I do not know who he is. What are we for if it is not to do justice to all the employees in the service of this House and under the jurisdiction of this House?

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will permit me. Like the gentleman, I do not know who the janitor is and I do not care very much about it, but this idea occurs to me, that that janitor came here and accepted employment at that salary and it would amount to a breach of contract almost to reduce that salary during the time for which he was appointed.

Mr. HAMLIN. That janitor came here and accepted the employment with the understanding he might be discharged at the end of any month. We have a right to discharge him, and the bill provides these janitors may be discharged at any time, and any man who accepts appointment here comes with the understanding that his salary may be increased or it may be reduced at any time, and I do not think it is any good reason why this salary should be paid for next year. He is getting $1,000 this year and we can not change that, and if we use that as an argument why he must have it next year, the same argument will prevail when we come to appropriate for the year 1914.

Mr. GARRETT. It looks to me as if the salary ought to be changed in advance of the man's accepting the appointment.

Mr. HAMLIN. When are you going to get it reduced if you do not do it now? If you wait until next year you will then say it is $1,000 this year and ought to be $1,000 next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have two minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may have two minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman's position a few moments ago was that he was in favor of increasing a salary from $800 to $1,200 on the ground that $800 was not sufficient. Now he is in favor of decreasing the salary from $1,000 to $720 on the ground that $720 is sufficient.

Mr. HAMLIN. No; unfortunately, the gentleman did not understand my position.

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman's position?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not saying $1,000 is too much. Maybe these other janitors ought to have their salaries raised to $1,000, but it is manifestly wrong—three men working side by side and doing the same work for the same kind of committees—to give two $720 each and the other $1,000. I plead with you——

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman is assuming they are doing the same work.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have a right to assume they are doing the same work. They are exactly in the same business, looking after the Elections Committees, with equal jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may say the same thing about all committees.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Nobody claims that this fellow does any more work than the others.

Mr. HAMLIN. They are doing the same work, and nobody claims, as my friend from New York suggests, that he is doing any more work than any of the other janitors of these Election Committees. All I am asking is to treat these people fairly. I do not know any of them, but I say it is wrong to pay some $720 a year, and, as I said a while ago, some janitors caring for five committees at $720 a year and give this one man $1,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on this amendment close in three minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee inquired into the compensation being paid to the janitors of the Elections Committees, and it was of the opinion that the compensation should be the same in each instance. It was ascertained, however, that the janitor had been appointed to this committee at the compensation of $1,000. He was selected because he was a man who could be obtained for $1,000, upon the expectation that he would be continued during this Congress. The Committee on Appropriations did not believe it would be performing a great public service or contributing anything to economy in the public expenditure to reduce a man to $720 in order to have his compensation fixed on the same basis as that paid to some other person.

I know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL], who has proposed this amendment, served in the last Congress as chairman of the Committee on Elections No. 3, and he appointed a janitor at $720 a year. I suppose he appointed the kind of a man he could get for $720 a year. If the compensation had been $1,000 a year he perhaps would have gotten a better man, and perhaps would have been able to have rendered better service to the House. The fact is, all these men are not janitors in the way the word "janitor" is understood. They are to assist the man who is chairman of the committee in the necessary clerical services he requires, and it depends very much on the type of man who is chairman of the committee as to whether he needs any clerk or whether any number of clerks will enable him to do any work properly devolving upon him.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then, if that is true, why not increase the salary of the janitors of the other two election committees to $1,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because it appears there is no necessity for such increase. They were appointed on the understanding that they would receive $720. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has pointed out the inconsistency to the gentleman from Missouri. He complained because some present employee here, receiving $800, was not paid sufficiently. He singles out a poor janitor and proposes to reduce his salary $280 in the belief that he is accomplishing some public good.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let us have a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On page 14, line 4, strike out the figures "720" and insert in their place the figures "1,000"; and on the same page, line 6, change both of the items of "720" to "1,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 4, strike out the figures "720" and insert "1,000"; and in line 7 strike out the figures "720" and insert the figures "1,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I make a point of order against that.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the amendment correctly reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The amendment was not correctly reported. The Clerk read the wrong line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] will please restate the amendment.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The second part of the amendment is:

Line 6, page 14, strike out "720" and insert in place thereof "1,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 6, strike out "720" and insert "1,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that. We have been discussing it 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that it is not in compliance with existing law and not in conformity with clause 2 of Rule XXI, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For six clerks to committees, at $6 each per day during the session, $4,320.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, strike out lines 4 and 5, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For nine clerks to committees, at $125 per month each during the session, $4,500."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] yield the floor for that purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I supposed I had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman if he yielded for that purpose?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague [Mr. LEVER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 4, strike out the word "six" and insert the word "nine."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that amendment is not in order at this time. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves to strike out the two lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I move to strike out "six" and insert "nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment now pending before the committee is the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This amendment is in order to provide nine session clerks at $125 per month. There are nine committees that are not provided with annual clerks. These session clerks have been receiving heretofore $6 a day. The committee brought in a proposition to appoint six clerks at $6 per day during the session. The chairmen of the committees affected by this legislation suggested that we change it from six to nine and that they would be satisfied with that amendment; and, believing that that was what the gentlemen wanted, I introduced this amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my colleague that on this proposition, as one of the chairmen of those nine committees, I was not consulted and I never heard of it until I saw it in the bill.

Mr. ROTHERMEL. What committees are they?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There are nine committees. I did not recall the names of them all. Alcoholic Liquor Traffic is one of them.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if my colleague will yield, I have eight committees here—Alcoholic Liquor Traffic; Education; Election of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress; Enrolled Bills; Mines and Mining; Railways and Canals; Reform in the Civil Service; and Disposition of Useless Papers. There is one other which I do not recall. All those are involved in this proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, we brought in this amendment in order to give all these committees clerks at $125 per month each.

Mr. FOSTER. This cutting of the clerks' salaries from $6 a day to $125 per month of course affects the committee of which I am chairman. I will not complain about that. So far as that matter is concerned, I would care but little if you cut the clerk off entirely. If I can not do the work, it would be that it would have to go undone. But I call the attention of the committee to this fact: This amendment has been offered by the gentleman in charge of the bill now under consideration before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I do not know how much work other committees have which have session clerks. Of course the Committee on Mines and Mining has considerable work to do, as might be shown from what that committee has done in the last few months. But I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that, while the committee has been particular to move to reduce the compensation of these clerks who receive $6 per day during the session, which is about $1,000 for the long session of Congress, or a little more, and about $700 for a short session, lasting about four months, at $6 a day, I do not complain. I am ready to do whatever the House may see fit to do. I am always willing to submit to what the House does after the House by a majority decides a question in these matters.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is now chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, which, since the creation of the Bureau of Mines, has become a very active committee in the House. The gentleman's committee ought to have an annual clerk at $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, my colleague may be right about that, but I am not here to ask that of the House.

Mr. MANN. It should have it, under all the precedents.

Mr. FOSTER. In view of what my colleague has said, it is well known that that bureau since it has been established has created a great deal more work for the Committee on Mines and Mining, and the correspondence is at times quite heavy, and there is a good deal of work to do.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to some other things that are possibly outside of this particular item.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the gentleman leaves that item will he submit to a question there?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman is speaking of the work of his committee and the correspondence that comes to it on account of the activity of the Bureau of Mines. I would like to ask him now, for information upon that point, whether that correspondence is confined to the times when the House is in session or is it just as voluminous when the House is not in session?

Mr. FOSTER. No. As is the case with other committees, I think it is not as great during the time between the sessions of Congress as during the session.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there any considerable amount of it?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; there is a good deal of work to be done every day.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the gentleman ought to give his experience to the House. He has been chairman most of the time since that bureau was created, and he could give us some light on the proposition as to whether he ought to have an annual clerk or a session clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I have not been chairman of a committee of the House before, and so I am not able to speak in comparison with the work of other committees of the House. There are other committees which have a great deal more work than this one has, as you no doubt know. But of course during the session the business has been quite large and is increasing, and every day there is a lot of work to be done by the clerk of that committee.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. KOPP. Does the gentleman think the services rendered by these session clerks are of a higher grade than the services rendered by the secretaries to the Members?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether that is so or not. The only thing is, it is a less permanent employment than that of the clerks to Members. The clerks to Members are employed for the year, and these clerks are only employed for the session.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to have about two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, of course if the House cuts this compensation to $125 a month during the session, it becomes a question, so far as I am concerned, whether I could employ a secretary who would come from my home or not. I do not think I could, but I could get along in some way. I want to say to the House that I am not complaining; but, for instance, in this bill there have been janitors given to certain committees in the House Office Building. The Committee on Mines and Mining has two rooms over there which are taken care of by charwomen of the House Office Building. Not very far from where I happen to be located in that House Office Building is another committee which I think is probably not of greater importance, but equally so, that has a janitor or messenger, whatever he is called, with the same number of rooms and the same kind of rooms. The Committee on Mines and Mining have no janitor. I do not think we need any. I do not want any. I think it would be an extravagance to give one at this particular time; but I do not know whether the Committee on Appropriations investigated that matter particularly or not, to see whether these committees were entitled to and ought to have a janitor or messenger at an expense of $720 or $1,000 per year, a total of nearly as much as the clerk receives in the course of the two years, about as much as the clerk of the Committee on Mines and Mining would get.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have just come in, and heard the concluding remarks of my colleague from Illinois. It seems to me from what I gather that "I would waits upon I dare."

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the propriety of assigning session clerks to committees, and I believe that if the committee will give fair consideration to it, as the Committee on Accounts have tried to do, they will come to the conclusion that I have come to, and that is that the session clerks, so far as being a benefit to a committee, are a farce. If these committees are entitled to clerks, or if they ought to have assigned to them clerks of any character, what we ought to do is to give them annual clerks. The idea is that by assigning to them session clerks and giving them the extra assistance they will be able to perform their services as Congressmen more efficiently. I want to say to the House that I have had a change of heart to an extent with reference to these clerks and other clerical help to committees. When I first started in to examine them by virtue of my position on the Committee on Accounts I was thoroughly convinced that there was from 50 to 75 per cent more clerical help to the committees than they ought to have, but I found that I was in error in that. I can truthfully say that there are some committees that have janitors that are absolutely unnecessary. I have in my mind one or two cases where the man has absolutely nothing on the face of the earth to do except to take the Member's hat as he comes in and to brush his coat as he starts out. And one of those Members happens to be an individual who never was accustomed to anything of that kind before, and as a result he has felt a great deal of timidity, and he keeps the janitor inside of the room instead of having him sit outside. But the point I want to bring to the attention of the committee is this: That we ought to adopt this amendment of session clerks at $125 a month, and give us 9 clerks, because if you do not adopt this amendment, and you leave it at $6 a day for 6 committees, you are going to have the Committee on Accounts in this position at the next session of Congress. My friend, the chairman of the Committee on Education [Mr. LEVER], and my friend here, the chairman of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic [Mr. CANDLER], will be in before the Committee on Accounts, and they will show conclusively, on account of the tremendous legislation that is before those respective committees, the great importance of having session clerks; while my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining [Mr. FOSTER], will be around, and by virtue of the activity of the Bureau of Mines he will convince us beyond doubt that he ought to have a clerk. So the result will be that you will have 9 committees, each of which will have convinced the Committee on Accounts that it needs a session clerk, and there are only 6 session clerks to assign to them. Whereas if you adopt the other amendment you will have 15 clerks, at $125, and the cost will be no greater. The gentleman asks why I favor $125 a month as against $6 a day. I reply to him that these session clerks are a force that do practically no work as committee clerks. Very few of these committees do any work whatever.

The result is that they are given more in the way of assistants for performing personal clerical work, getting at it indirectly, as session clerks. The Committee on Accounts thoroughly thrashed out this matter, and the House thoroughly thrashed it out, and came to the conclusion that it ought to be $125 a month rather than $6 a day, for the reason that each one of the expenditure committees has a clerk at $125 a month. If you give these gentlemen who do less work session clerks at $6 a day, the gentlemen who are chairmen of committees on expenditures will come in and say, "My committee does more work than the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, and that committee has a clerk at $6 a day," and then insist that they have a clerk at the same salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, is a substitute for the amendment now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask what the pending amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, strike out lines 4 and 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For 9 clerks to committees, at $125 per month each during the session, $4,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment being withdrawn without objection, the gentleman from South Carolina offers the following substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 9 clerks to committees, at $6 each per day during the session, $6,480.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in the matter of the difference in pay for janitors to Committees on Elections Nos. 1, 2, and 3 my distinguished colleague [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill, argued that he proposed to stand by the committee report for the reason that this particular janitor had been employed and had accepted with this committee a contract which, to his mind, carried him not for one session but two sessions of Congress. I want to say that the clerk of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman—and I assume that all the clerks of all these nine committees have been employed upon the theory that they were to be kept in employment for this entire Congress and not brought here for the salary of $1,000 or $1,200 for the year and then for a reduced salary at the end of this session—accepted his position on the idea that he was to be carried during the entire Congress.

If my colleague's reasoning is correct with reference to the janitor of the Committee on Elections No. 1, my reasoning is correct with reference to the clerks of these nine committees which are provided with session clerks at $6 per day.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman undertake to say that the chairmen of the different committees have brought men from their districts that they would not have brought anyway—is it not a fact that a number of chairmen have added to the secretary's salary the salary of the session clerk?

Mr. CANDLER If the gentleman will allow me, I want to say that I am chairman of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, and I brought a man from my home town as clerk, and my secretary is an entirely different man. And this man that I brought is doing the work of the committee.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I want to reply further to my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] who is a mighty wise man and a very good man, that one of the other reasons assigned for the refusal to equalize the salaries of this janitor for these election committees was that the House of Representatives in its resolution adopted May 9, 1911, did not provide for the reduction of that janitor's salary so as to equalize his salary with those of the other janitors of the other two election committees. I want to call attention of the committee to the fact that the resolution did not provide either for the reduction of the salaries of the clerks of these nine committees, which are now proposed to have their salaries reduced to $125 a month.

I think the gentleman from Texas is right. I am sure my friend from Illinois is right on this proposition. These nine committees deserve to exist or they ought to be abolished. If you are going to continue their existence you ought to provide them with the machinery to do the business of these committees. I say candidly to my friend from Texas that I could not get a man from South Carolina who is worth shucks to come here and live in the city of Washington under the expensive conditions that we have to live under at a salary which in two years may net him $1,500 or $1,800 a year. What good would such a clerk be to me? Absolutely none in the world. The result is that I added that to the salary of my own clerk and put it right up to him to hire somebody else to do the odds and ends of my own work, addressing seed slips, addressing speeches, and doing things that most anybody can do. I do not like to be put in that position. If you are going to continue the Committee on Education, of which I happen to be the chairman, it seems to me that you ought to provide us with an annual clerk, and pay that clerk such a salary as I can afford to bring from home some young and ambitious man and give him an opportunity of staying in Washington so that he may be of some service to me as chairman of the committee and some service to the country as a whole. Let these committees get busy with the matters before them and let this House give these committees the necessary machinery with which to do the work on these committees.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments close in seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments close in seven minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to cite a particular instance. This proposition of the committee is to reduce the number of session clerks from nine to six. In the assignment of these clerks that inevitably means that the Committee on Education would be left without any clerk.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman means just the reverse.

Mr. MANN. No; the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina is to increase it from six to nine. It is nine now, but the committee proposes to reduce it to six. The Committee on Education would be left without a clerk. I have watched in this House with great interest the career of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. HAMLIN. If the gentleman will pardon me, in the interest of accuracy, the print is for six clerks, and the amendment is to make it nine clerks.

Mr. MANN. The committee has reported for six clerks; the substitute is to make it nine clerks.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I have watched the career of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] since he came into this House. He came originally before the committee of which I was chairman, of Elections No. 1, on a contest. I have paid close attention to him ever since. No man in this House has grown more rapidly in the estimation of the House [applause] or in the efficient work that he has performed than has the gentleman from South Carolina. [Applause.] To-day he occupies a position of great importance to this House upon the Committee on Agriculture, of which he is one of the leading members. I think that, although he may be chairman of a nominal committee like the Committee on Education, the House in justice to itself ought to provide him in some form with a proper clerk, which can only be done, in my judgment, by adopting the proposition which he has presented to the House. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of one of these committees involved in this proposition, I want to state my situation for the consideration of the House. I will state that the clerk of the committee of which I am chairman, Mr. W. E. Small, jr., resigned a position which he had and came from Mississippi to the city of Washington, a man who has a wife to support as well as himself. He is a competent man, qualified to discharge the duties of the position. I could not get a man that would perform these duties that would come from the State of Mississippi to Washington for anything less than the salary that is prescribed. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to abide by the judgment of the House as to what is just and right with reference to this matter. I want to say that the committee on the organization of the House provided for these committees.

They provided for them at the time when they knew the amount fixed for session clerks. They retained the committees knowing that to be the fact, and, as was said by my distinguished colleague from South Carolina a moment ago, they either ought to be maintained and given proper clerical assistance, at a salary that makes possible the employment of somebody who is competent to discharge that work, or they ought to be abolished.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANDLER. I have not much time.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. It is a short question. Did this $6 a day include Sundays?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. They are paid for Sundays?

Mr. CANDLER. They are paid $6 a day during the month. Now, then, that being true, the committee on organization of the House having maintained these committees, then they should have a clerk during the session of Congress at the amount heretofore fixed. Whatever the House sees proper to do about the matter, I shall not complain. The clerk to my committee, I will state to Members, expected to receive during the sessions of this Congress the amount which he is receiving now. If you take it away from him, I do not suppose he will remain in the city of Washington, because I do not believe he could afford to remain for the amount the other amendment provides for. Whatever you do in the matter which is right and honest will be satisfactory to me. By that standard I am perfectly willing for this question to be settled. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended by the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Doorkeeper: Doorkeeper, $5,000; hire of horses and wagons and repairs of same, $1,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary; department messenger, to be appointed by the chairman of the conference minority, $2,000; special employee, John T. Chancey, $1,800; special employee, $1,500; superintendent of reporters' gallery, $1,400; janitor, $1,500; 16 messengers, at $1,180 each; 14 messengers on the soldiers' roll, at $1,200 each; 15 laborers, at $720 each; laborer in the water-closet, $720; laborer, $680; 2 laborers, known as cloakroom men, at $840 each; 8 laborers, known as cloakroom men, 2 at $720 each and 6 at $600 each; female attendant in ladies' retiring room, $800; superintendent of folding room, $2,500; 3 clerks, at $1,600 each; foreman, $1,800; messenger, $1,200; janitor, $720; laborer, $720; 32 folders, at $900 each; 2 drivers, at $840 each; 2 chief pages, at $1,200 each; messenger in charge of telephones, $1,200; messenger in charge of telephones (for the minority), $1,200; 46 pages, during the session, including 2 riding pages, 4 telephone pages, press-gallery page, and 10 pages for duty at the entrances to the Hall of the House, at $2.50 per day each, $13,800; superintendent of document room, $2,900; assistant superintendent, $2,100; clerk, $1,700; assistant clerk, $1,600; 7 assistants, at $1,280 each; assistant, $1,100; janitor, $920; messenger to press room, $1,000; in all, $150,900.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply to suggest to the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill——

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. OLMSTED (continuing). That I was out of the Chamber for a moment, and the matter may have been provided for, but in order to make certain I ask the gentleman from South Carolina if the item, line 10, page 1, "Compensation of Senators, $690,000," ought not to be corrected? That is evidently based upon the proposition that there are 92 Senators, but we have recently admitted into the Union two new States, which would make 4 new Senators, or 96 in all, and it would make necessary an appropriation of $720,000 to pay their salaries at $7,500 each.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, at the time the bill was made up the States had not been admitted into the Union, and the compensation in this bill provides for 92 Senators. That is to provide for the 92 Senators provided for by law. Of course, the Senate having increased by four new Senators will make the necessary amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. I did not know but that the gentleman would like to go back and make the correction inasmuch as the two new States have been admitted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Wait until it gets over to the Senate, which does not overlook anything.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order. I make the point of order to the language, beginning on line 19, page 16, "to be appointed by the chairman of the conference minority" on the ground, Mr. Chairman, that that is new legislation on a legislative appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations inserted those words because they were informed that in preceding Congresses, when the Democrats were in the minority, the leader of the minority was permitted to appoint that employee. We put those words there in order to be absolutely fair to the leader of the minority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from South Carolina to address himself to the point of order. Does this language change existing law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I know of no law that requires that this employee shall be appointed by the minority, but the custom has been for him to be so appointed, and we put in those words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 16, lines 19 and 20, the words "department messenger, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words "department messenger, to be appointed by the conference minority, $2,000."

Mr. MANN. Part of it has already gone out. Mr. Chairman, it was not at my request that there was inserted in the bill that provision that the department messenger should be appointed by the chairman of the conference minority. I was sent for one time by the Committee on Appropriations and asked whether I thought that was proper, and I said I had no objection. Afterwards I made some investigation and should have moved to strike out this entire language, whether the appointment by the conference minority had been stricken out on the point of order or not. The department messenger provided for in this bill in the current law has not been performing the services of a department messenger since last year, and never did have much service of any kind to perform. Years ago there was a department messenger, and in the Fifty-fourth Congress, or rather, in the Fifty-third Congress and preceding Congress, and in the Fifty-fourth Congress, when the Republicans came into control of the House, they provided for a department messenger, and appointed a Republican to the place.

The previous department messenger had been a Democrat, and a resolution was passed providing for an assistant department messenger, and the Democrat was appointed to that place. I doubt if there are 20 men of the House who know what the duties of the department messenger are. Has anyone here ever called on the department messenger? His duties are to work for Members of Congress. Has anyone here ever availed himself of that privilege?

Mr. DALZELL. You mean the position that was held by Mr. Vail?

Mr. MANN. By Mr. Vail.

Mr. DALZELL. I have.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has. Has anyone else?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether the gentleman wants us all to testify; but I have.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not know that there was such a person. From what State does he come?

Mr. MANN. You can not prove it by me.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Are there 20 gentlemen in the House who know what "chairman of the conference minority" means?

Mr. MANN. There are 20 who ought to know. The minority leader in the House has been designated in the statutes for years as "chairman of the conference minority." How the title originally started, I do not know.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I will suggest that 20 Members, I guess, understand the meaning of "chairman of the conference minority."

Mr. MANN. The chairman of the conference minority is the so-called minority leader, and has been for years. Whoever put the provision in in the first place called him "chairman of the minority conference."

Mr. COOPER. How can the English language be tortured into any such meaning as the gentleman gives to that expression, namely, "chairman of the conference minority," as meauing the minority leader?

Mr. MANN. I do not undertake to explain it.

Mr. COOPER. It is an absolutely senseless expression, if that is what it means.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. SHERLEY. He means expression and not place, does he not?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I think so. I agree with the gentleman now that there is no occasion to retain this department messenger. The gentleman who now occupies the place sent word to me recently that if this item was carried in the bill he was going to oppose it, unless I would agree to reappoint him. I said I would make no agreement about appointing anybody, because I had intended to move to strike out the item. There is no occasion for the place. This side of the House does not want it. That side of the House is under no obligations, that I know of, to appoint a Republican in the place, and, if they are, it is not their business to select a Republican. There is no occasion to use the place. There is a regular department messenger, who himself in one day of the week can do all the work which is asked for by all the Members of Congress in the entire seven days of the week, without another department messenger.

Mr. DALZELL. Do you refer to the party who is now holding that place, Col. Coombs?

Mr. MANN. This is not Col. Coombs's place.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to be heard.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] permit me to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question in his time?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois give me his attention, inasmuch as I have the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee to ask him a question? Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] believe it is to the interest of the Members of the House to have the continuous notice given, as has been going on for the last year or two, when bills are reported from committees and when they have passed the House?

Mr. MANN. I thought that was a good thing, but the gentleman's party by caucus abolished the job of notification clerk.

Mr. GARNER. Let us be perfectly frank and candid and say that we abolished it, because we did abolish it with the distinct understanding in the reorganization that the clerk at $3,000 a year should be the man who had been doing this work for two or three years past; but in making up the business the party emergencies demanded he should be relieved of this work, and this messenger has been doing that identical work ever since.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a violation of the law.

Mr. MANN. It is a criminal violation of the law, and if it continues I am going to call it first to the attention of the officers of the House and next to the criminal officers of the Government.

Mr. GARNER. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose, so far as I can prevent it, that the House at any time have any misinformation. Let us understand every proposition on its merits and vote on its merits. This messenger, so-called, is absolutely useless as a messenger, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated, but he has been doing other work.

Mr. MANN. You mean the individual has been doing other service?

Mr. GARNER. He has been doing the service of notifying Members of Congress of the condition and status of their bills.

Mr. MANN. I have no feeling against the individual, because he is a good man.

Mr. GARNER. I certainly have nothing against him myself.

Mr. MANN. He is an efficient notification clerk, and I would be glad to have the Democrats appoint him to the office.

Mr. GARNER. On the other hand, I have the kindliest feeling for him, and I would like to see him appointed to the place.

Mr. MANN. Not as department minority messenger?

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not possible for some other clerk to notify us of these things without providing for this man?

Mr. GARNER. With the indulgence of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that when we reorganized the House we provided for one clerk at $3,000 a year. That place is carried in this bill now. We also provided for three or four clerks at $1,600 a year. The little bureau in which those clerks were employed was in room No. 15, up there where the bill business was transacted. I do not know exactly what the duties are, but it was stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] at the time, when the question was asked whether we would continue the notification clerk, that the clerk who was receiving $3,000 would be the man who would perform that work. That is my understanding. At any rate, none of these other clerks can do this work, in my opinion.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, the point I make is not as to the personnel. I do not care a hang about the personnel. I never saw the man in question. But if it is a useless job, the gentleman who fills it ought not to be retained simply because we like him. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if anyone is performing this work who is drawing another salary?

Mr. GARNER. If you discontinue the minority messenger, then if Congress wanted to continue the work of the notification clerk, the Committee on Accounts would have to come in and create a new salary.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is inconceivable to me.

Mr. DALZELL. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to say that the man who was discharged from the position of notification clerk is now a minority messenger, charged up as a minority employee to the Republican Party?

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman who is now designated as minority department messenger is now performing the duties of the present notification clerk.

Mr. DALZELL. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. GARNER. Now, if the House wants to continue this notification business, if the Members of the House desire to be advised as to the condition of their bills, it strikes me they must either continue this man and let him do that work or else create another place.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is that a fair conclusion to come to?

Mr. GARNER. That is the situation as it exists.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GARNER. I do.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman has just stated that in order to continue this notification work it will be necessary to create a new place. Why can not one of this man's assistants do this work which he was to do under the plan of reorganization in this House?

Mr. GARNER. I just stated a moment ago what the situation is. Perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not hear me. I was not sufficiently advised as to the work required at the time when the change was made by the reorganization to determine that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has expired.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] be extended.

Mr. GARNER. I have no time. I was occupying time allotted to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. PALMER. Was not the assistant bill clerk's office abolished and a new bureau created, with a chief at a salary of $3,000 a year and four assistants, at $1,500 each? And was it not the understanding in the Democratic caucus, and was it not the understanding in the House when the resolution was passed that carried that caucus action into effect, that the work of the notification clerk would be done by that bureau?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Now, as I understand it, despite that understanding and despite that action of the caucus and that action in the House, the work has been done by somebody else who is not in that little bureau.

Mr. GARNER. That is correct.

Mr. PALMER. Then, I think, the office ought to be abolished.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But it is necessary, is it not?

Mr. GARNER. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the fact was called to my attention that under the provision with reference to the clerk, at $3,000 a year, and four assistants, at $1,500 each, there was not sufficient clerical help to do the work assigned to them and, in addition, to do this notification work.

Mr. PALMER. I think I am sufficiently advised to say that it is sufficient.

Mr. GARNER. That is a question between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and some other Members of Congress who claim to have looked into the situation—Members who are at the head of committees. I might say that the chairman of the Committee on Accounts tells me that the information that he gets from the officers in charge is that unless the work is performed by this messenger it would cease altogether, because there is not sufficient clerical force there to do it. Mr. Chairman, I now yield back my time.

Mr. MANN. Then the Committee on Accounts ought to provide for sufficient clerical force.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I have no time. I yielded my time back to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield time to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will be recognized to allow the gentleman from Kentucky to ask a question.

Mr. HELM. I was not in the House when the gentleman stated what the duties of this notification clerk are. What are they?

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman has doubtless had some bills reported to the House since he has been a Member, has he not?

Mr. HELM. I never have had bills brought to my committee by a messenger or a clerk, but I have been notified over the telephone that there are bills referred to my committee, and I have had to walk around to the document room to get those bills myself.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman did not catch my inquiry or did not properly understand it.

Mr. HELM. What I am trying to find out is what is the duty of this man.

Mr. GARNER. Whenever a bill which has been introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky is reported favorably it is the duty of the clerk to inform the gentleman from Kentucky that it has been reported favorably. When such a bill has passed the House it is the duty of the clerk to inform the gentleman that the bill has passed, and so on, down to its final signing by the President of the United States.

Mr. HELM. I would say to the gentleman that I have received such notices as that.

Mr. GARNER. That is his duty.

Mr. LANGLEY. And he performs other duties in addition to that. That is not his only duty.

Mr. SHERLEY. What are the other duties that he performs?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Texas state that this messenger was one of the minority employees?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the custom has been for a number of years to permit the minority side of the House to select this particular employee. I do not know anything about it, except what I have been told.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But he is not, under the law, one of the minority employees.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, no; this is new law and has been stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, there has evidently been a necessity for this clerk, or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would have long since objected to this wasteful and needless expenditure of money, because this appropriation has been made year after year. I know this man's work. Not only does he notify every Member of this House when a pension bill is favorably reported and when it is acted upon in the House, but also when it is acted upon in the Senate and when it is approved by the President of the United States. He does the same thing with reference to every other bill that goes on the calendar and that is considered by this House. Now, simply because he has been selected in the way he has, it is said that there is no necessity for his services.

I sat in a Republican caucus when our minority representation was selected. There were five employees. Every one of them went to a northern or eastern State—New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and one or two other States. Although there were half a dozen or more southern Republicans, we received nothing in the way of patronage in the Republican caucus; but we found that the minority were entitled to one of the messengers, and the Representative from Kentucky on my right, Mr. LANGLEY, the Representative from Virginia, Mr. SLEMP, and myself presented to the officers of this House the name of a southern Republican, and along with our indorsement we filed the indorsement of the following Members: Messrs. DALZELL, BURKE of South Dakota, RODENBERG, OLMSTED, PRINCE, CURRIER, WEEKS, DRAPER, FOSS, GILLETT, AUSTIN, SLEMP, LANGLEY, LAFEAN, MCCALL, WOODS of Iowa, MADDEN, FOWLER, WILSON of Illinois, HAWLEY, HUMPHREY of Washington, NEEDHAM, MOORE of Pennsylvania, MCKINLEY, and others.

Mr. DALZELL. Did the gentleman mention my name?

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] indorsed Mr. Jarvis. I saw the gentleman's name with others on the list.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. The original petition had the name of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He may not have known what he signed.

Mr. DALZELL. The party whom I indorsed, and for whom I have been very earnestly working, was Mr. Vail, who formerly occupied the other place.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman signed the other petition, too.

Mr. DALZELL. If I did, I did not know what I was doing.

Mr. MANN. That is probably the case with others.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like to see the original petition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Inasmuch as the gentleman has read my name as a signer of the petition, I should like to say that I have no recollection of having signed the paper. I should like to see the signature.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will send a page to the committee room and get the paper.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If my signature is there I will acknowledge it, but I do not remember it.

Mr. AUSTIN. We found that the minority usually selected this messenger. We found in office a man who had served under the Republican Clerk of the House, with a good record for efficiency, for more than 12 years, and with these petitions of representative Republicans we appeared before the Committee on Accounts and succeeded in having that man retained. Now, when this bill was reported with a provision in it in the shape of new legislation to give the control of this appointment, not to the minority but to the leader of the minority, I asked the leader of the minority what he was going to do with the good Tennessee Republican that we had in this comfortable job. He said he did not know what he was going to do; that he had not committed himself to anyone. Had my point of order not been made, I do not know whether the gentleman would have asked this House to abolish this office or not.

Mr. LANGLEY. Was the suggestion by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that this place is not necessary, made before or after the point of order was sustained?

Mr. AUSTIN. It was made afterwards.

Mr. MANN. It might have been made before.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and myself waited on the minority leader to know what disposition was going to be made of this position in the event that the point of order was not raised, and, as I have stated, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said he had not made up his mind; that he did not have anyone in view for the position; and not having any assurances that our man would be retained I did what every other Member of the House would do to protect a friend—I made the point of order. And I say that if there has been a necessity for this position in the last 14 years, there is a necessity for it to-day; and I ask this Committee of the Whole to keep the provision for the place in the law.

Mr. LANGLEY. What is the law now?

Mr. AUSTIN. For a messenger at this salary.

Mr. LANGLEY. And how appointed?

Mr. AUSTIN. There has been no provision as to how he should be appointed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In the same language as heretofore?

Mr. AUSTIN. Precisely the same language that has been in every legislative appropriation bill reported to this House for years.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that he would not have made the point of order if he had had a promise that his man would be appointed.

Mr. AUSTIN. If he had been retained. That is what I am fighting for—for my own.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the gentleman is not making a point of order on the merits?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am doing anything and everything possible to save my man. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. This man is not performing any duties as clerk for the minority, is he?

Mr. AUSTIN. He is not only performing duties for the minority, but for the majority and for every man in this House.

Mr. SHERLEY. In point of fact, he is not doing anything as a clerk for the minority, but he is doing some work for the entire membership of the House that it was contemplated would be done by another force now in existence. Is not that true?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. SHERLEY. I so understand, and that the interest of the gentleman is to keep the man from Tennessee in the place.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is no better Republican living than this man.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no doubt about that; but I do not see why Uncle Sam should keep a Tennessee Republican, or a Democrat, for that matter, in a position unless he is needed.

Mr. AUSTIN. But you have kept him here for 15 years.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then it is time that we woke up.

Mr. AUSTIN. It ought not to take you 15 years to wake up.

Mr. SHERLEY. We did not know about it until you fellows fell out, and that is when we get our dues. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendment close in seven minutes.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that that time is to be used by two gentlemen opposing the motion?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Illinois want more time?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BURNETT). The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there is just one word that I want to say about this matter. I am as much in favor of economy in the administration of this House as anybody on this floor, but there is no more important place in the service of the House than the one that is occupied by Mr. Jarvis. It enables the Members of the House to attend to their duties without looking after the smaller things. It is stated by my colleague from Tennessee, Mr. AUSTIN, that in the division of the offices of this House this one went to the minority. In the first place, I want to insist that it is a fact that not a single position has gone to a Republican south of the Ohio River except to this gentleman. I know something about the contest in this matter. Some gentlemen on the other side have wanted the place for a gentleman who lives farther north. It is all right to give gentlemen in the North all the places they are entitled to, and all right for the minority to have a fair representation in the distribution of these places in the House, but I submit that because they have the power on that side, so far as sections are concerned, it is not right to deprive these southern Republicans of all the places that they have in the organization of this House. No man who believes in fair dealing will undertake to do it, and I do not think any Democrat on this side will sustain any such position. This is an important position and ought to be filled properly, and it is filled properly. I do not believe that this contest between our Republican brethren ought to be permitted by the Democrats to be determined along sectional lines. When Republican places are to be filled, the southern Republican is entitled to recognition.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it has been assumed by certain gentlemen that this position is not needed; that we are giving the salary to a man who is not doing any work. I think the gentleman from Texas showed very clearly that if this position is not retained, Members will no longer receive notification as to the action upon bills which they have introduced in this House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not true that we created a corps with the express understanding that that corps should perform this service?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be true.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman know of his own knowledge that they are unable to do it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The statement has been made on the floor that the corps to which the gentleman refers was unable to do the work, and this man was placed in that office for the purpose of performing the necessary work.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then we should change the personnel.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield, inasmuch as debate has been limited to a few minutes more, and I may not get the floor in my own right? I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will state what I know he knows to be true, that Mr. Jarvis is one of the hardest worked men attached to the force here in the Capitol, and one of the most capable men we have. He even employs some one at times to help him, because he can not do himself all the work put upon him. That we must have done the work that he is doing there is no question.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Jarvis has been here for many years, and I undertake to say that I do not know a more competent man who could be selected; and as the gentleman from Kentucky well says, he is busy all the time, and frequently has to employ some one to assist him in doing the work.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman mean to say that we could not find a Democrat who is just as competent?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no question about that, but this position was given to the minority. I insist that it is not given to the chairman of the minority or to any particular member of the minority, but to all the minority. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has read to the House a partial list of the minority Members who requested that Mr. Jarvis be appointed to that place.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Is it not a fact that the work of the notification was turned over to Mr. Jarvis after he received this appointment because there was nothing else for him to do?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not so understand it.

Mr. PALMER. And is it not a fact that the work before that was done by the assistants that the gentleman has spoken of?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; that force has never done the work. Mr. Jarvis succeeded Mr. Wakefield. Mr. Wakefield did the work, and Mr. Jarvis succeeded him; and no employee in this House, no Member of this House, works harder or puts in more hours every day in hard work for the efficient conduct of the business of this House than does Mr. Jarvis.

Mr. PALMER. I have no doubt about that, but what I want to know is why is not the work done by the assistant bill clerk?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. All I know is that Mr. Jarvis is doing the work, and that no clerk in the employ of the House does as much work in the 24 hours a day as he does.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield, as he has taken a good deal of my time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not take the gentleman's time. The Chair recognized me, and I am talking in my own time.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman's side asked to limit debate, and took two speeches on that side.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman has been recognized several times, and I have been recognized only once on this side. The gentleman has made one speech on the amendment, but I will yield to the gentleman in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired; all time has expired on this paragraph. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on adopting the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. AUSTIN) there were 59 ayes and 13 noes.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is agreed to, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-three Members present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and Mr. GARNER assuming the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee finding itself without a quorum the roll was ordered to be called, that 224 Members had answered to their names, a quorum, and he reported herewith the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union finding itself without a quorum rose and the Chairman of said committee reports 224 Members as being present. The names of the absentees will be noted and the committee will resume its sitting.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on the last vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when the question arose. The reporter's notes show that the question of no quorum was made after the announcement of the vote and the chairman had ordered a call of the roll. The Chair holds it is too late to call for tellers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I made the motion to strike out and while whatever the reporter's notes may show, it is true the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] made a point of order immediately upon the announcement of the vote.

Mr. LANGLEY. And he addressed the Chair two of three times before that statement was made.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we have a vote by tellers.

Mr. MANN. I do not want the matter by unanimous consent. I think we ought to have a decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stands on the reporter's notes.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will permit, I will say the reporters' notes are not always accurate, in this, that the reporter's notes have to put one thing ahead of another while the two may occur at the same time. The fact is, as I think no one will dispute, that immediately upon the announcement of the vote the gentleman from Tennessee made the point of order that no quorum was present for the purpose of invalidating the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman, unfortunately the present occupant of the chair was downstairs at lunch at the time the point was raised and therefore is not informed on the question, but the Chair must sustain the record, and as the Chairman of the committee had ordered the Clerk to proceed it was too late to demand a division; but the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that the vote may be taken by tellers. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Tellers have not been ordered.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from South Carolina asked unanimous consent to have a vote by tellers and there was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asked unanimous consent that this vote might be taken by tellers. The Chair submitted it and received unanimous consent and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. AUSTIN, and the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. JOHNSON, will act as tellers.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the proposition be stated again, as there are a large number of Members here now who were not present when the question was up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported, as there are many Members present who were not present when the former vote was taken. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words: "Department messenger, to be appointed by the chairman of the conference committee, $2,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. The words "chairman of the conference committee" have been stricken out on a point of order, which the RECORD will show.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands. Those words were stricken out on a point of order, and the Clerk will report the proposition without them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words "department messenger, $2,000."

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 66, noes 29.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the following minority employees authorized and named in the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives April 10, 1911, namely, special employee, $1,800; special messenger and assistant pair clerk, $1,800; special messenger, $1,500; special chief page and pair clerk, $1,800; in all, $6,900.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 23, by striking out "$1,500" and inserting "$1,800" in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 23, strike out "$1,500" and insert "$1,800" in lieu thereof.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the minority places authorized by a resolution of the House, filled by the Republican caucus. As I understand, this place is filled by Mr. Bert Kennedy, who was the Assistant Doorkeeper of the House at a salary of $2,500. He was given this place at a salary of $1,500, although at the time it was assigned to him by the caucus I think it was generally understood he was to receive a salary of $1,800. The amendment is, of course, subject to a point of order. Kennedy has been an employee of the House ever since I have been here, and was an employee some time before I came to the House. He is a very valuable employee for the minority side and for the House, so far as that is concerned. For an old employee $1,500 is not a proper salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the places which has usually been assigned to the minority.

Mr. MANN. This is a minority place under the resolution of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the custom has been that the determination of such matters should be adjusted by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, he is slightly in error. The custom has been, and the same custom was followed this time, for some one in behalf of the minority to offer a resolution in the House and have it adopted. When the resolution was offered this time, if I recollect, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] in behalf of the minority, it was agreed to, and the salaries were the same, it is true, that were provided for the Democratic employees in the Sixty-first Congress. It never has gone, I think, through the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What happened was this: That the custom had been during a number of years for the majority to assign certain positions to the Democrats.

Mr. MANN. Assigned by resolution of the House, usually offered by the Democratic side of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] offered his resolution inquiry was made if it were the same as had been theretofore allowed to the minority, and there was no objection.

Mr. MANN. That is quite true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that is true. I know the gentleman mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois, and he is probably one of the most efficient employees the minority has ever had in the House.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think that myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If his compensation is to be increased, the burden should not be put upon us. We have reported the compensation now authorized. I do not believe the committee would be justified in permitting it to be increased.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman frankly, if this case was acted upon by the Committee on Accounts, I would not say anything about it now or make a request, but the Committee on Accounts, as I recollect, has never passed upon these matters. Eighteen hundred dollars for Mr. Kennedy will even then be a reduction in the expenditures of the House of $600 from the salary he drew before, and he was worth to us when we were in the majority the entire salary he drew.

Mr. LEVER. May I ask what was the salary under the Republican administration?

Mr. MANN. Twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. LEVER. Was it the same place?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. He was Assistant Doorkeeper.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The increase of salaries of House employees, both of the minority and majority, has always been authorized, when authorized at all, by a resolution from the Committee on Accounts before being put in the bill.

Mr. MANN. That may be so. I would not say to the contrary, but I will say this to the gentleman: That my recollection is that all the minority places have been fixed and the salaries provided by resolutions offered from the floor of the House, ordinarily by some one in the minority.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is true.

Mr. MANN. I think that has been the custom.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; and this man's place was provided for, as stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], at the beginning of the session by a resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the statement was made that the same number of employees was allowed at the same salary.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman frankly that in making up the list which was submitted to the Republican caucus afterwards, while I did not make up the list myself, on the motion that was made I understood that Mr. Kennedy was to be taken care of at the salary of $1,800. Through some error, either on my part or on the part of somebody else, that was not done. He is one of the valued employees on this side of the House, and he has been in the service, like the venerable Capt. Chancey over there, for many years. I think we can afford to pay him a living salary.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think he has been here ever since the Fifty-fourth Congress; according to my recollection, anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expired.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not feel——

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. MANN. The point of order is conceded.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to submit a statement for the information of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It has been stated before the Committee on Accounts that the minority has two pair clerks, while the majority has but one pair clerk. In our reorganization plan we eliminated all the pair clerks on the majority side with the exception of one. I notice in this appropriation here a provision for a special messenger and assistant pair clerk at $1,800, and a provision for a special chief page and pair clerk at $1,800. I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois state what duties these employees perform, and whether or not, according to his information, there are two pair clerks on the minority side and one on the majority side.

Mr. MANN. I think it is true that there are two pair clerks on the minority side and one pair clerk on the majority side. However, the pair clerks act for both sides, so that it does not make very much difference so far as that is concerned. It is true that there were formerly two pair clerks for the majority side and two pair clerks for the minority side, and when the majority side cut off one of their pair clerks we did not cut off one of our pair clerks on the minority side. I assume as a matter of fact, if there were two minority pair clerks and two majority pair clerks, they would endeavor to protect both sides impartially, and it is largely work that is done regardless of partisanship. There are enough to take care of the Members of the House on these questions.

Mr. GARNER. As a matter of fact, in exercising our economy we proceeded to exercise it with reference to the majority employees, without applying the same rule with respect to the minority employees.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I would have to think some time to know who are the minority pair clerks, so that I call on the minority employees and the majority employees, perhaps indiscriminately, probably as often and perhaps oftener than any other Member of the House. I call upon them for various duties, and upon the various employees of the minority, regardless of whether they are pair clerks or not, and ask them to do certain things. They are kept pretty busy.

Mr. GARNER. My purpose in making the inquiry of the gentleman was a double purpose. First, I wanted to call his attention to the fact that there is no effort now, the first time we have had opportunity to control in the matter, to apply the same rules on the minority side that we apply to the majority side, for the reason that heretofore when we were in the minority we have had these identical employees, and I for one contend that that having been done, it should be done now. But I will say that I find upon investigation that these two men have all the work they can do when Congress is in session.

Mr. MANN. I think they have. You have two pair clerks when you want them. We make use of them at other times for other things, I think, in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk to the conference minority of the House of Representatives, $2,000; assistant clerk, $1,800; in all, $3,800. Said clerk and assistant clerk to be appointed by the chairman of the conference minority.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 25, the figures "1,800" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1,200," and, following that, insert "janitor, $1,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, line 25, strike out the figures "1,800," and insert in lieu thereof "1,200."

Mr. MANN. And insert "janitor, $1,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is in accordance with the resolution?

Mr. MANN. This is in accordance with the resolution of the House. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the bill and the present law provide for the minority leader a clerk at $2,000 and an assistant clerk at $1,200. In December last I asked the Committee on Accounts to give me a janitor at $1,000 and to reduce the salary of the assistant clerk from $1,800 to $1,200, because I had to have a janitor. That action was taken; the House passed a resolution to that effect on the 19th of December, so that the amendment which I have offered is now in order under the rules of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Would it not be proper to amend the first line of the paragraph on page 18, referring to the conference minority, by adding "janitor and assistant clerk"?

Mr. MANN. Yes; it could be done.

Mr. BARTLETT. Has this resolution been complied with by paying the money out of the contingent fund?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. That is according to the arrangement.

Mr. MANN. The House passed the following resolution on December 19, 1911:

House resolution 325.

Resolved, That the chairman of the conference minority is hereby authorized to appoint a clerk at the rate of $1,200 per annum and a janitor at the rate of $1,000 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, payable monthly until otherwise provided by law, such appointment to date from December 1, 1911, and to be in lieu of one clerk now provided for at the rate of $1,800 per annum.

Mr. BARTLETT. And this is in accordance with the resolution that the House adopted?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The paragraph refers twice to the "conference minority." That term has been criticized, so far as good English is concerned. It seems to me the word "conference" ought to be stricken out.

Mr. BARTLETT. The act which authorized these positions under the conference minority was enacted some years ago. Mr. Richardson of Tennessee offered the resolution when he was minority leader, and that is what it was called and has been called in the law ever since.

Mr. MANN. It was called that, I suppose, to distinguish it from the chairman of the Republican caucus, and I think the same language is used in the Senate; why, I do not know, but it is in the law.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what it is called in the law, and has been ever since.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would perhaps be better expressed if the word "conference" was left out.

Mr. MANN. The chairman of the minority might be chairman of the Republican caucus.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why should it not be the minority caucus chairman?

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman think the chairman of the caucus of the minority or of the majority ought to have a clerk at $2,000, an assistant clerk at $1,200, and a janitor?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. These places are conceded to the minority. It is a question what the "conference minority" means.

Mr. MANN. What the "conference minority" means is well known by the accounting officers, and there is no question about it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am satisfied to draw attention to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 25, strike out "$1,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200," and insert "janitor, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the total, $3,800, changed to $4,200.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will change the totals.

Mr. MANN. And strike out the word "and," between "clerk" and "assistant clerk," and insert a comma; and add, after the second word "clerk," in line 19, the words "and janitor."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For janitor for rooms of official reporters of debates, at $60 per month during the session, $240.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "during the session, $240."

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 16, page 19, strike out the words "during the session, $240."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The object of this amendment is this: The Committee on Accounts authorized a janitor for the Official Reporters' room. The Committee on Appropriations were under the impression that it was a session janitor, but we are now informed that the resolution intended an annual janitor.

Mr. MANN. The amendment ought to carry the total. It does not make any appropriation now.

Mr. GARNER. Strike out "two hundred and forty" and insert "seven hundred and twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment, if there be no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The amendment I offered is to strike out the words "during the session, $240." It will then provide for $60 a month. Of course, if it is annual, it is a mere matter of calculation.

Mr. MANN. I think the total ought to be put in.

Mr. GARNER. Put in $720. I ask that the clerk report the amendment again.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have no objection to putting in "$720."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 16, after the word "month," strike out the words "during the session, $240."

Mr. MANN. I move to amend.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let us adopt that amendment first.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend by inserting "$720."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 19, lines 15 and 16, to read "for janitor for rooms of official reporters of debates, at $60 per month, $720."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Stenographers to committees: Four stenographers to committees, at $5,000 each; in all, $20,000.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In the reorganization of the House at the beginning of the special session, the janitor to the official reporters and the janitor to the committee stenographers were stricken out, but in a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] after investigating the situation fully, he proposed to restore these two places. The Committee on Accounts had hearings and came to the conclusion that these two places ought to be restored. But no resolution has been introduced and no action taken other than the action in reference to the janitor for the official reporters. The situation is this. The stenographers to committees are now paying a salary to a janitor to the committee rooms. That janitor not only cleans up the various rooms occupied by the stenographers to committees, but answers the telephone calls, which is an important factor to men occupied all the time as they are, and then he performs another service in the way of paring cylinders for the phonographs which they use, and other necessary services for those gentlemen.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say that if he will offer his amendment we will vote on it.

Mr. GARNER. Very well; I did not want to offer it without making some explanation. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert between lines 18 and 19, on page 19, the following:

For janitor to rooms of stenographers to committees, at $60 per month, $720.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Between lines 18 and 19, page 19, insert as a new paragraph: "For janitor to rooms of stenographers to committees, at $60 per month, $720."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerk hire, Members and Delegates: To pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, for clerk hire, necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $618,975, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move the following amendment:

In line 2, page 20, strike out the figures $1,500 and insert the figures $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 2, strike out the figures $1,500 and insert the figures $2,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado rose.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] wishes to speak to the point of order, I will yield to him.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman from Illinois can proceed, and I will discuss the point of order later.

Mr. CANNON. I have no desire to talk about it if the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois states that he does not care to discuss the amendment until the point of order is decided. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of order, and the Chair will hear the gentleman on that point of order.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I understood that the gentleman from South Carolina reserved the point of order, and I would not like to discuss it now because it might cut off the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I have no desire to speak if the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois stated that he did not desire to have the point of order reserved. Will the gentleman from South Carolina state his point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the proposition is to increase the pay of the secretaries to Members from $1,500 to $2,000 per annum. There is no law to pay such an amount of $2,000. We are now paying them $1,500 under the annual appropriation bill. The $1,500 is justified on the ground not that there is any law for it specifically, but on the ground that it has been provided for year after year. The gentleman's amendment is to increase it to $2,000, and I think it is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina does not state the proposition in its entirety. It is not an appropriation for the salary of the clerk. If the gentleman's point of order is well taken, it ought to be made to the entire paragraph. It is not an appropriation for the salary of the clerk, it is an appropriation to the Members of Congress and the Delegates, and therefore it is not subject to the point of order which he has made. If he will make his point of order against the entire paragraph, it might be entitled to more consideration.

We had this matter up two years ago on the motion made by myself to increase this appropriation from $1,500 to $2,000—not an appropriation for the clerk's salary, but an appropriation to the Members of Congress, who had the right to expend it as they saw proper, and the resolution further provided, not that the sum should be entirely used for the employment, but only such part as might be needed.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it the gentleman's position that while the paragraph is subject to a point of order and the point of order is not made, then an amendment to the paragraph is not subject to a point of order?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Surely; because this amendment is therefore made germane to the paragraph itself. Now, Mr. Chairman, tactics of this character have occurred many times in this House, and likewise have occurred many times in our national politics, to the effect that Republicans are always on the lookout to steal the thunder from the Democratic side, and this instance is not an exception. It was originally intended for me to offer this amendment, because I made the same effort on the floor of the House two years ago; but my genial friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] anticipated me, but I absolve him from that ulterior motive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Colorado to address himself to the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I was going to say, Mr. Chairman, that my remarks always sparkle like diamonds when I am discussing anything that I know something about, but when I am assigned to a question on a point of order I have to wander a little bit to gather myself to even look at the proposition. [Laughter.] I could not show up here at all as even a spurious gem of radiance in the discussion of a point of order, and had it not been for the fact that my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asked me to, knowing I had gone through this mill before, I would not assume the task we doubtless had in view that when the point of order was made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] the laboring oar was thrown toward me with the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. CURRIER]—who, by the way, was as great a parliamentarian as we had in the House at that time, and nearly always occupied the chair when questions of importance were coming up—in the chair. The Speaker, my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], usually put him in the chair in important matters, and even the gentleman from New Hampshire got rattled at first when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] made the point of order against my amendment, but he soon righted himself and reversed himself, and decided that the point of order was not well taken. [Applause.]

Now, I have given to the Chairman [Mr. UNDERWOOD], whom I hope will be as good a parliamentarian as he will make a President, and whom I know of course to be a great parliamentarian, all the data necessary for an intelligent disposition of the point—I will not say he is any less a parliamentarian than my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CURRIER]—but nevertheless I knew that on account of his limitations it was necessary for him to be advised in advance of my views and of the point of order I anticipated might be made by my friend from South Carolina. So I submitted the authority to him, and it occurs to me in this view that the question issettled. We have got a precedent, and the only precedent that we can go by, and I do hope that this Democratic Congress will not go back upon precedents that are so well founded in point of law and common sense as this one. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the facts to be, there was legislation—and I will ask the gentleman from New York to correct me if I am in error—by a joint resolution fixing the allowance to clerks of Members at $1,200. Am I correct?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Subsequently Congress session after session appropriated $1,500. Now, I do not claim that the appropriation of $1,500 without changing the law—merely appropriating the money—makes a precedent of existing law. Perhaps the decisions have been both ways about that matter, but I do claim——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow the Chair to ask a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any law now on the statute books fixing this salary at any amount?

Mr. MANN. Twelve hundred dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; fixing it, as I am informed by, I think, reliable authority, at $1,200; but here is a provision appropriating $1,500. Now, then, no point of order was made upon the $1,500, but there was an amendment offered to take that provision which was subject to the point of order and increase it by a germane amendment to $2,000. In other words, here is a child not authorized by law appropriated for by the committee too late to offer a point of order as against the $1,500, and an amendment has been offered, and it is germane. I think that is all I desire to say.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Illinois. This is what is known as an allowance for clerk hire, and the provision in the current law provides for a specific allowance to Members of Congress to pay clerks necessarily employed by them. The dictionary defines an allowance to be an act of authorization. I take it that the change in the law that has been made allows a Member of Congress for clerk hire at the rate of $1,500 a year. I do not believe that the provision in the bill is subject to the point of order. Here is a limitation of $1,500 as the amount that can be paid to Members of Congress for clerk hire and that amount has been fixed. These provisions have now been carried for some five or six years. It seems to me any attempt to increase the amount to which the Member is limited is in effect an increase in the compensation and subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The law at present provides that clerk hire for each Member of Congress shall be $1,200. That is the existing law. The committee has reported a paragraph to this bill providing that the clerk hire of Members of Congress shall be $1,500 a year. If a point of order had been made against the paragraph in time the Chair would have held that it was subject to the point of order, because it was contrary to existing law. No point of order having been made against the paragraph, it comes before this House in the condition that a new amendment would come before the House that was offered that was subject to the point of order, and the point of order not having been made, it would be in order to offer a germane amendment. Now, in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, paragraph 3823, the same proposition was before the House, and the Chair will ask the Clerk to read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, paragraph 3823, page 553:

"A paragraph which proposes legislation in a general appropriation bill being permitted to remain, it may be perfected by a germane amendment. On December 21, 1896, the House, in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, was considering the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and the paragraph relating to the organization of the Library of Congress had been reached, when Mr. FREDERICK H. GILLETT, of Massachusetts, offered this amendment:

"'All the above appointments, except the librarian and two assistants, are to be made from lists of eligibles to be submitted by the Civil Service Commission, under their rules, who are hereby empowered to hold examinations for all the above positions.'

"Mr. William A. Stone, of Pennsylvania, made the point of order that the amendment changed existing law.

"After debate, the Chairman ruled:

"'This bill when reported to the House contained, in the paragraph relating to the Library of Congress, that which is manifestly on its face new legislation. This would have been subject to a point of order under the provisions of Rule XXI, section 2. No such point of order was made, and the bill therefore was sent by the House to the Committee of the Whole for consideration just as it was reported and in its entirety. Under these circumstances, as has been heretofore several times ruled, no point of order could be made in the committee against the paragraph on the ground that it contained new legislation. The committee, in other words, could not refuse to consider what the House had sent to it for consideration. But the right of consideration involves also the right of amendment; that is to say, the committee has the right to perfect as it may see fit the matter submitted to it. For these reasons the point of order is overruled.'"

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the proposition pending before the House is in the same position as if it were offered as an independent amendment that was subject to the point of order, but the point of order not being made, it is open to a germane amendment. The Chair for that reason overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee beyond a very few sentences. I am here to say that my belief is, and certainly I know from personal experience, that $1,500 does not cover the cost of clerical assistance that I am required to have to perform my duties as a Member of Congress touching and incident to legislation, and I doubt if $1,500 will do it for any Member. I can not always get a competent clerk who is a stenographer and typewriter. You have at times, under stress, to have assistance additional to the one person. The Senate of the United States, and I am not criticizing that body, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] stated, and truthfully, that that body of 94 or 96 Senators as against our 400 people in round numbers, soon to be 433, has in the shape of assistance touching legislation and the performance of their duty as legislators an amount two times what this body, consisting of 400 people, has. We do not make any question with the Senate. The Senate takes the position, which will have to be conceded, that that is a matter personal to their duties and that they are the judges of it. That we concede, and we do not claim we are legislating for them by insisting upon a provision which will render us competent from the standpoint of clerical help and assistance, which it is desirable should be something more than clerical help and embrace a knowledge of legislation and of procedure.

Two thousand dollars is a modest and proper allowance. Therefore I offer the amendment and shall vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I propose to support the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and I do it for the reason, in addition to the reasons stated by the gentleman from Illinois, that it is almost impossible to get the necessary clerical help for $1,500 to do the work of an average Member of Congress. I make it a rule in my business to answer every letter and every postal card that comes to me in the course of my correspondence, and it is proper that I should do so. The public is entitled to it. It makes it necessary for my clerk to answer anywhere from 75 to 100 letters every day. In addition to that, it is incumbent upon him when I am in attendance upon my committee meetings, as I am every day in the year when I am here, to go to the departments and attend to the business that comes into my office in the ordinary course of my work. I can not do it and he has not the time to do it. I would like to see this salary increased to a point where it would permit me to employ a man who could attend to my departmental duties—or a woman, as my friend from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] suggests—and to attend to my duties in the office and give me a chance to do the work of my office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to ask if the gentleman and his clerk can not attend to all of his duties——

Mr. LEVER. I am attending to my duties in a way satisfactory to my constituents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say that. You said the pressure was so great that he could not attend to them. Will this additional salary enable him to attend to them?

Mr. LEVER. I think so, and for this reason: I do not expect to get two clerks at $1,000 each who will attend to the duties of my office, but I do expect by giving to my clerk $2,000 in toto to permit him to employ somebody who is willing to serve at $40 or $50 a month to take care of the routine of my office, addressing seed slips, addressing speeches, write the ordinary letters that come into my office and every office every day in the year, which anybody can answer, and permit my real clerk to attend to the departmental work, while I care for the bigger things that I, as a Member of Congress, on account of my duties as such, can not take care of.

My committee, the Committee on Agriculture, meets practically every day in the week. It meets at 10.30 o'clock in the morning. I have to be there at that time. I can not attend to the thousand and one demands upon me in the departments and attend to my larger duties as a Member of Congress. The people in my district have a right to have their minor propositions in the departments attended to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. What I would like to say is this: That there should be authorized to be employed by a Member of Congress some person who should take up the departmental work of the Members of Congress and permit the Member of Congress to do the larger duties of a Member. Instead of having to run from 8.30 o'clock in the morning from department to department, doing messenger service, make that Member of Congress get down square to his desk and solve the bigger problems of legislation. That would be real business and sense.

You can not do it as you are doing it now. And the result is that we come into this House from time to time with great big propositions that are ill considered, that are hastily considered, and that do not meet, when we bring them here, the views of the majority of the House. I am willing, as far as I am concerned, to go down to my district and meet my people, as they are a conservative, sensible people, on this proposition of economy. I do not believe that the people of my district have ever failed or will fail to distinguish between an extravagant expenditure and an economical investment. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Not just now. And I regard the proposition of furnishing to a Member of Congress sufficient machinery to help him carry on the business of his great office and representing all the people as a proposition not of expenditure but of economical investment. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by substituting "$1,200" instead of "$2,000."

[Mr. FOWLER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Which one?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SIMS. There are several gentlemen from Illinois. Which one?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I mean the senior one, who for so many years gained such distinction and reputation as an economist, and who seems now to have strayed far from his early standards. I believe the House should have some facts presented to it before it attempts to vote for the amendment.

This amendment adds $216,000 to the amount of money paid to Members of the House for clerk hire. This Congress at the outset practically reduced the compensation of every employee in the House except those personal to the Members of Congress. It refused to appropriate an extra month's compensation, which for more than 30 or 40 years had been given to the employees of the House. Gentlemen do not need clerks of the character described by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] to perform their congressional duties. They need clerks to perform their political duties, to keep them in Congress. [Laughter.] Those clerks are engaged not in performing great public services, but in trying to cultivate a public opinion favorable to the Members of the House.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at present. I know as much about it as the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. A great deal more.

Mr. LEVER. In the opinion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am engaged in the same sort of work myself, and I employ assistance when I require that character of work, when the allowance made to me by the Government is insufficient.

We might as well be honest about this thing. This is not an appropriation to put on the rolls additional employees. It is to increase the amount of money that goes to the individual Member, to be disbursed by him for clerical services.

I am greatly gratified at the action of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] for his assistance to the Democratic Party in its attempt to make some record for economy at this session of Congress. He has pulled a laboring oar all through this session.

I have not found him endeavoring to help the committee any or the party any. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] boasted at the last session that before the Democrats had finished in this Congress they would be appropriating more for the service of this House than any party ever in its history had appropriated, and his able lieutenant [Mr. CANNON] for the first time in my experience is found proposing an amendment to add $216,000 to the cost of maintaining the House and its servants.

Mr. FOWLER. It is more than that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There may be some justification to afford Members of Congress additional clerical hire at this particular time. Some of them will need it before next November, if they continue as they have been going during the present session of Congress. They will need more than clerk hire. [Laughter.] They will need an eloquence that has not been attained in the history of civilized or uncivilized men to convince some constituencies that their record justifies their continuance in this House.

We might as well face this proposition squarely. Is the Democratic Party honest? Is it sincere? Does it mean what it proclaims or has it been hippodroming? Is it refusing to increase the compensation of employees in every department of the Government in an attempt to stop the tremendous outpouring of money from the Federal Treasury only to succumb to the proposition that the allowance to Members of this House for clerk hire shall be increased 33 per cent?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am not a leader in this House. I am just an humble Member. I have tried to follow my party when I thought my party was right. I believe in economy, as does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]; but I believe in that economy which looks to real economy, and not to that class of economy which is an absolute handicap upon the efficiency of the Members of Congress and the efficiency of the governmental agencies. [Applause.] I am a member of the Agricultural Committee, a committee which I regard to be as big a committee, if that is possible, as the Committee on Appropriations; and I think I can state, as demonstrated by the records of my committee, that "the gentleman from South Carolina," referred to by the gentleman from New York, can show a record of real economy upon that committee greater by 50 per cent than is shown upon the bill introduced here to-day. [Applause.] The Committee on Agriculture, with a bill involving in total annual appropriations about $17,000,000, reduced that bill as against last year $1,400,000 and more. [Applause.] And those reductions were such as did not impair the service of the Department of Agriculture. This committee to-day comes in here with a bill carrying appropriations in the neighborhood of $30,000,000 and reduces it to the extent of about $2,000,000 or a little more, a bagatelle in comparison.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two million six hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. LEVER. Two million six hundred thousand dollars, as the gentleman from New York says; and I submit that the Agricultural Committee, of which I am a member and which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] attacks, has made a reduction in expenditures greater by 50 per cent or more in comparison as against his own committee, and he can not deny it. I do not propose to stand here on the floor of this House and permit even the great chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to give to the country the impression that I am not willing to reduce expenditures and that he is the only economist in this House. [Applause.] But I do propose to stand and let the gentleman from New York know that the "little man from South Carolina" has sense enough to know the real difference between an expenditure and an investment. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman talks about the extraordinary reductions made by the Committee on Agriculture. Eight hundred thousand dollars of his $1,400,000 reduction was in the emergency appropriation of $1,000,000 and did not affect the service of the department in the slightest degree.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I discussed that proposition with a hundred Members on the floor of this House, and perhaps I was unfortunate when I did not discuss it with the gentleman from New York. [Applause.] I showed then that a man might be worth $10,000,000, and if he could not get his paws upon it he would not be worth 10 cents, and when we opened the doors of the Treasury to $1,000,000 we put it back into currency.

The Senate of the United States, in reporting the agricultural bill, has put back into it the $1,000,000 that we of the Committee on Agriculture cut out. We have been real economists and not cheap economists. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. All time on this amendment has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 3, noes 90.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members, a quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. On that amendment all debate is exhausted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, of all the duties that can devolve upon a Member of Congress, the duty of making up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is the most difficult. This bill provides for the compensation of 15,000 Government employees. It is an ungracious thing, it is an unpleasant thing, to stand out against the importunities of the 15,000 employees and their friends.

My own personal inclination would be to increase, and to increase liberally, the compensation of every person in the service of the Government; but, gentlemen, in 1898 this bill carried a total of twenty-one million and odd dollars. It has grown rapidly and constantly with each year. The current year it is $36,000,000. The committee that made up this bill thought the time had come when a halt ought to be called. Notwithstanding the wish of the committee in many cases to increase compensation and to increase force, we have felt constrained to deny the increases.

It may be, gentlemen, that our conduct appears ungracious and harsh, but I assure the membership of this House that in discharging this unpleasant duty we have tried to be fair to the country. It has not been many years, gentlemen, since Members of Congress were not provided with any clerical help. In 1893 for the first time the Congress provided $100 per month. In 1907, without any change in the law, a change was made in the appropriation to $1,500. The proposition now before the House is to increase this amount 33⅓ per cent, or, in other words, to vote for our own comfort and for our own convenience $219,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman think it is entirely accurate when he speaks of voting for our own comfort and convenience? Does he not think that the pay of our clerk hire, if the clerk is competent, is for the convenience of the people whom we represent in this House, rather than for ourselves? [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, certainly; I understand that whatever duties we perform ourselves, or whatever duties we perform through our clerks, are for the convenience of our constituents.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then, ought the gentleman in all fairness to characterize it as being for our comfort and convenience? Ought we not to pay our clerks whatever is necessary for the convenience of our constituents?

[The time of Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina having expired, by unanimous consent he was given five minutes more.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment may close in five minutes, the gentleman from South Carolina to have the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the debate close in five minutes, and the gentleman from South Carolina to have that time. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. I object.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman is discussing this matter so seriously that he seems to think there is some apprehension that this amendment may be agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. SIMS. You could not pass it with a steam roller.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman know any Member of this House who would not accept the position of a Congressman without any clerk hire at all?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I suppose we would all be glad to come to Congress. We ought to be proud to have the confidence and respect of 200,000 American citizens, whether we have one or a dozen clerks. Gentlemen, I never longed for wealth and luxury; I know the people in poverty.

I have walked the ways that they walk. I know that men sometimes forget, amid the luxurious surroundings of the National Capital, the millions of people who are back on the hillsides and down in the valleys. As for me, I would rather continue to know those people, to know how they live, to know how they think and what they feel, than to dress in purple and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day.

When you talk about economy that makes for good government, when you vote in this House $2,000 for clerical help to assist you in your reelections, do not forget that there are 14,000,000 families in the United States who live on $600 a year or less. [Applause.] Do not forget that the man who has charge of the section hands on the railroad, the man who plows, and the man who works in the shop and in the factories, out of his meager earnings, must contribute the money that you propose now and here to vote to yourselves.

Mr. LEVER. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, the gentleman has had two speeches on this amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I only want to ask my friend if he regards the appropriation for clerk hire as an appropriation to help Members? I regard it as a governmental service.

Mr. FOSTER. How much political work does the gentleman's clerk do?

Mr. LEVER. None.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Everybody knows that we use our clerks for political purposes to help us in our political campaign. [Applause.] There is no doubt about that. Gentlemen, it would be something that you could not face this country on to deny to 15,000 people in the governmental departments an increase of salary, and yet vote to increase the salary of your own help 33⅓ per cent. It is more the moral effect of what we propose to do than the actual amount of money it would take out of the Treasury.

But I want to say now that while I have stood resolutely against appeals that have been made to me, although in my heart of hearts I wanted to do what I was asked to do; I want to say that after standing out and assuming an attitude that appears so ungracious, that appears so hard-hearted, that appears so cruel, that makes one appear as if he had none of the milk of human kindness in him—I say that if this House undertakes to load down this appropriation with this proposition you can not expect the members of this committee to bear the odium of standing out against 15,000 people's importunities. If you can not deny yourselves, how do you expect us to deny them? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 56, noes 48.

Mr. FOSTER and Mr. BEALL of Texas demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOSTER) there were—ayes 44, noes 54.

Mr. BEALL of Texas demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. RUCKER of Colorado and Mr. FITZGERALD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 49, noes 54.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers having been ordered on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair will designate the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, and the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. JOHNSON, as tellers.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Chair designate the gentleman from Colorado instead of myself?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will designate the gentleman from Colorado in place of the gentleman from Illinois.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 53, noes 48.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by adding to the section the following: "Provided, That all clerks to Members and Delegates shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member or Delegate by whom they are appointed, and any Member or Delegate may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the roll as the clerk of such Member or Delegate making such appointment."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman state what his point of order is?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That it is not germane——

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman not to reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The provision in the bill provides for the payment to Members of Congress of compensation in a certain sum for necessary clerk hire. This amendment provides that certain clerks shall be made employees of the House and placed on the rolls, a legislative provision not at all germane to this provision. This question, Mr. Chairman, has in other sessions of Congress been presented in this form and the point of order has been sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York to address himself to this point. This whole paragraph was out of order; it is new legislation. It seems to the Chair that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia is germane to the pending proposition. If it is germane and the original proposition was contrary to existing law, the point of order not being made, I will ask the gentleman to advise the Chair as to whether or not a germane amendment seeking a limitation on the original proposition is not in order. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman on that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the provision in the bill is to pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner for clerk hire necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official duties so much per annum. The provision offered by the gentleman from Georgia is to create new employees of the House. The clerks now employed by Members are not employees of the House; they are not part of the personal services of the House; it is an allowance to the Member himself that is given under the bill, to be disbursed by him. In previous sessions—and I shall try to have one located in a moment—the same question has been before the House in the same form, and it has been invariably held that such a provision is not germane. The provision in the bill is not to appropriate for employees of the House, but the provision of the gentleman from Georgia is to create certain employees and place them upon the rolls of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph in the bill would not have been subject to the point of order in the first place if it had carried $1,200 instead of $1,500 per annum, so that the only thing in the paragraph which made it subject to the point of order was the mere amount that was carried. The resolution which authorized the payment of clerical hire in the first instance was $1,200 instead of $1,500, as carried in the bill. Now, that made the paragraph subject to the point of order. That made the amendment offered by my colleague in order, because it was addressed to the point which made the original paragraph subject to the point of order; but the rule, Mr. Chairman, has always been that although a paragraph subject to the point of order is subject to amendment, it must be of a subject matter of the same character, must be concerning the subject matter which made the original paragraph subject to the point of order, and the latitude of amendment is not as wide as it is on ordinary amendments. The rulings have been consistent that although an amendment may be germane, it is yet not in order upon a paragraph which was subject to a point of order if it introduces a new subject matter. Now, this amendment pending introduces an entirely new subject matter. It does not relate to the amount to be paid to the clerk at all, and the point which made the paragraph subject to amendment was the provision fixing the amount payable to Members for clerk hire. Now, another proposition comes up, relating to an entirely different subject matter, which, though it may be germane to the original paragraph itself, is not germane to the point which made the original paragraph amendable. Here is a proposition now to add clerks upon the roll, introducing another subject, and I have no doubt the Chair has before him the rulings which show that where it introduces another subject it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is recognized.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I prefer the gentleman would address the Chair. I am not going to discuss the merits of this at all.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to listen to the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. This question involves the honor of the membership of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee desires to address himself to the point of order, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I trust the present occupant of the chair can see his way clear to rule this amendment in order. As I said, it involves the honor of every Member of this House. We are constantly accused of voting this money for clerk hire and putting it in our pockets, and as long as the law remains as it is it will give an opportunity to those who wish to misrepresent and traduce us a chance to make this charge.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] must address himself to the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. And I hope there can be found in the rules and the precedents something upon which the Chairman can base a decision that will relieve us from an unjust insinuation of this kind.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I call the attention of the Chair to the Manual, page 405, paragraph 824, the second paragraph on the page, referring to paragraphs containing legislation, as follows:

A paragraph which proposes legislation being permitted to remain may be perfected by a germane amendment, but this does not permit an amendment which adds additional legislation.

And the citations are given to Hinds' Precedents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Illinois on that proposition. That is clear. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois the question he asked a while ago—whether this is additional legislation or whether it is legislation that limits the operation of the preceding paragraph?

Mr. MANN. This is additional legislation, clearly. That paragraph carries only what is now authorized by law, except as to the amount. This is additional legislation—new legislation, in my judgment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a limitation on the expenditure of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so regard it. But the Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] as to whether or not this language is merely directory of how these clerks shall be carried and how they shall be appointed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, there is no provision whatever as to the employment of clerks. The law is that there shall be paid to the Members of Congress a certain sum for clerk hire. It does not say that the Member shall pay that money in compensation in any particular way. It does not say that he shall have to pay it at any particular time; but it pays him money for clerk hire. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was in order because the limitation to the amount had been changed.

I will read in a moment the statute as it now exists. This provision is:

That all clerks to Members and Delegates—

There are no clerks to Members and Delegates provided by the statute—shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and subject to be removed at the will of the Members and Delegates by whom they are appointed. And any Member or Delegate may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the roll as the clerk of such Member or Delegate making such appointment.

There is no authority in law for the appointment of clerks by either Members or Delegates.

The law is, under this statute of March 3, 1893—

That on and after April 1, 1893, each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives may, on the first day of every month during the sessions of Congress, certify to the Clerk of the House of Representatives the amount which he has paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties.

And so forth.

This statute provides that the Member shall certify to the Clerk of the House either the amount which he has paid or the amount which he has agreed to pay to the extent of $1,500 a year. The Member is paid that sum in monthly installments by the Clerk.

Now, this amendment that they shall appoint clerks, to be placed on the rolls of the House by Members, for which there is not now any authority whatever, can not, in my opinion, be construed as germane to this provision. The only legislation that is in order because germane to this provision, by reason of the fact that the entire provision would have been subject to a point of order, is an amendment affecting the amount which under the law can be paid.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Under that statute no Member can honestly draw a dollar of this money unless he solemnly certifies that he has either paid or promised to pay it out for clerk hire, can he?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have read the statute.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is the statute, is it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have read the statute.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is the gentleman not willing to commit himself?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not going to stand here and be catechised as to what Members can and can not do. I have read the law. It is clear to me, and it is clear to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not afraid to construe that law. The opinion of the gentleman and my opinion is that no Member can receive a dollar of that money unless he solemnly certifies that he has either paid or promised to pay it out for clerk hire. If that be true, to put the clerks on the roll and pay them directly does not, in fact, impugn the letter or spirit of the law a particle.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have quoted the statute, Mr. Chairman.
